Wazan is an unwalled city south-east of Tangier some four or five days' journey, and up among the mountains in a healthful and most picturesque region. We (Mr. Mackintosh, the Morocco representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and his wife, and myself, with servants and muleteers) reached it by a circuitous route, occupying ten days, coming by way of Arzeela and Larache, cities on the coast. Everywhere we find the doors of opportunity wide open. The sun does not look down upon a more promising field for Zenana work than Morocco presents. In many places, as Arzeela and Larache, Christian women could work among the Moorish, Berber and Jewish women, even though there were no resident male missionary. Everywhere the people want remedies, and the opening for medical mission work is unlimited. Almost all listen with attention, and some with interest and even eagerness, to the story of God's love in Christ. There are not a few that seem to drink it in like thirsty soil the rain. There lack not indications of widespread preparation by the Spirit of God of this people for the Gospel.

Here at Wazan some of the finest of Morocco manufactures are carried on. Weaving, working in leather and silk, gun-making, brass and copper-working, wood-turning, and other industries occupy the people. The Moors here seem to be of a superior type. There is said to be an admixture of Riffian or Berber blood. The Berbers (in Northern Morocco known as Riffians) fill the mountains not far away. Over these remote parts the Sultan has but little control. I am told the shereefs claim political as well as religious supremacy. This division of power results in a state bordering on anarchy in the region round about. All go armed. Lawlessness abounds. Cattle are stolen in broad daylight in the city's streets. A child is said to have been kidnapped on a "soke" or market-day since we came. Europeans have rarely visited Wazan, and the son of the Shereef (whose guest Mr. Mackintosh is) requested us not to venture outside of the Sultan's garden, where we are encamped, without attendants, and by no means to show ourselves on the weekly "soke" day, when hundreds of the lawless people of the mountains are crowding the town, all armed, each one carrying the long brass-mounted Moorish flint-lock gun.

As I write, the noonday call to prayer is cried from the mosques. In my ears it sounds like an inarticulate wail for life and light. Alas, alas, for these dear earnest souls, many of them as devout as Cornelius! I know God's elect are among them. Who will go and tell them the "words" whereby they may be saved? What a field right here for a mission station. It is virgin soil. We are the first missionaries that ever visited it. One might even have the honour and joy of dying here for the name of Jesus. But that is unlikely. The danger would be slight if one was cautious until the people had become accustomed to the sight of the "Nazarenes"—the contemptuous yet honourable name by which we Christians go in Morocco.

To a medical missionary the door of service would open at once. The people are constantly applying to us for remedies. Mrs. Mackintosh just came in from visiting some Moorish women, and detailed to me the appeals made to her at every turn for medical help. There is no physician of any sort in the town. One of the chief men of the place has just sent to know if we could send him a simple remedy, which we happened to have, and gladly sent him.

I close with a twofold appeal, for labourers and for prayer. Workers are needed. Prayer is entreated. All that is being done, except the Bible Society's important work among the natives of North Africa, rests on a little band of London Christians—the Kabyle Mission—whose secretary is Edward H. Glenny, Linton-road, Barking, London. E. F. Baldwin, Missionary.

A SPLIT AMONGST ATHIESTS.

THE Daily Telegraph says:—A curious light has recently been thrown on the Republican fraternity by the secession of the notorious anti-clerical author who writes under the nom de plume of Leo Taxil, from the ranks of the Freethinkers. Taxil has long gained for himself an unenviable notoriety by those publications against Christianity and its professors. At a recent congress of Freethinkers held at Rome, M. Taxil electrified his brethren by his sudden coolness in the cause. Explanations were afterwards asked by a leading provincial Atheist, who read in a newspaper that Leo Taxil had given up his energetic championship of the anti-clerical cause. The Freethinker in question called upon the seceder to come back and put himself at the head of the league, which had become disorganised by the defection of so powerful a defender. M. Taxil, however, replied that he had for ever broken his anti-clerical pen. This step he had taken because he was thoroughly disgusted and disheartened by the insults levelled at him by the whole Republican Party, Opportunists, Radicals, and all. He has found out "that Republican brotherhood is a hollow lie," and he therefore leaves the so-called brethren to tear each other to pieces, like their precursors, Vergniaud, Danton, and Robespierre. M. Taxil has taken further steps to place a wider gulf between himself and his former friends. He has lately made a formal recantation of his Atheistical writings, and offered an apology to the Roman Catholics. To show his sincerity he has also undergone a "spiritual retreat" in a convent of Carthusians. Whether M. Taxil intends to blossom out as another Louis Veuillot, who also commenced his career by philippics against the Church, and afterwards became its most doughty champion, remains to be seen. Such evolutions are not uncommon among Frenchmen.

GLASGOW EVANGELISTIC ASSOCIATION.—The report of the eleventh year's work of this society is just published. Loving and appropriate reference is made to the loss sustained through the death of the Rev. James Scott, and Mr. W. S. Hislop, of whom truly it may be said, "their works do follow them." Among the various departments of other benevolent enterprises, we note that 1200 persons sit to breakfast every Sunday morning, more than a thousand receive dinner, some three hundred children get "daily bread" in the Refuge, and about seventy are cared for in the Home at Saltcoats. The hon. treasurer is Mr. J. H. Graham, 57, Cathedral-street, Glasgow. Separate accounts are given of each mission, the Sunday meetings held at the Evangelistic Hall being a prominent feature in the work, and generally attended by some fifteen hundred persons, whilst an earnest band of about fifty workers sustain the open-air preaching. The weekly Temperance meeting numbers between four and five hundred, and Mr. Muir, who visits the poor, says he has "attended about fifty death-beds during the year, most of whom died happy in the Lord." Mr. Hammond's visit to Glasgow, and Dr. Somerville's miss on to Greece, with the opposition he there encountered, are alluded to. It is pleasing to learn that the singing both of hymns and solos has been found of great service, "many who have been attracted by the singing have been brought to the Saviour."

BIBLE STAND, CRYSTAL PALACE.

THIS method of spreading the Word of God has been carried on in an unobtrusive manner for several years. The Stand itself will probably be a familiar object to many of our readers, while possibly its multifarious operations may not be so fully known. The work which meets the visitor's eye is the simple sale of Scriptures, or the distribution of text cards gratuitously, to thousands of pleasure seekers, and the circulation of Gospels in foreign languages, 8,000,000 of these silent messengers having been given to the people since the foundation of the Institution. The fame of these excellent little cards has travelled far and wide, various Christian workers and ministers having applied for grants which have thus spread throughout the land. The distribution of Gospel light at the Stand is of a diverse character; foreigners, soldiers, sailors, policemen, Jews, Sunday-school children, are duly remembered, and the message of eternal love has thus been given in twenty-one languages. Grants of the Bible and portions thereof are constantly being forwarded to different seaports around the coast, that seamen of various nationalites may not leave our shores without the glad tidings of a Saviour's love.

For years past an extensive circulation of Gospels has been maintained in Italy under the direction of Signor Capellini, the soldiers' evangelist. The blessing of God upon his written and spoken Word has been very manifest. A Soldiers' Church, with branches throughout the country, attests the faithfulness of the Lord to his promises.

In France a Bible-carriage has for a lengthened period been employed by a veteran colporteur in the sale and gratuitous issue of God's Word. Nearly every Department of France has been thus traversed. Priest-ridden Brittany has been recently visited, and although, difficulties have not been wanting, thousands of Testaments and Scripture portions have been placed in the hands of the people. These journeys included a brief sojourn in Monaco, where the advent of the Gospel appears to have considerably surprised the officials of the noted gambling establishment.

By another mode, at once economical and expeditious, has the message of peace been spread abroad in Spain, Vienna, and Ireland. To Spain alone have 70,600 Gospels been sent through the post during the past year, while to Austria 31,430 have been forwarded, and it should be recorded that to every principal house in Belgium has a book been directed. The latter country has received in all 330,000 evangelical parts of the Bible.

Russia has not been overlooked, although facilities for Scripture distribution have not lately been offered to the Committee. During the life of the late Emperor a path was, however, opened, and many Testaments, &c. were placed in the hands of prisoners and others by a personal friend of His Majesty.

In North Africa some very earnest efforts have been made among the Jews resident there. Interesting evidence has come to hand of the blessing attendant upon the dissemination of the Scriptures from the Stand amongst these Hebrews. Many copies have been taken far into the interior, the result of which we may safely leave with the Lord.

The total issue of Bibles, Testaments, Gospel leaflets &c., from the Stand now amounts to 19,500,000. Christians who may desire to uphold the hands of the Committee are invited to communicate with the Secretary, Mr. William Hawke, Bible Stand, Crystal Palace, Sydenham, S.E.

THE WYCLIF SOCIETY continues to make encouraging progress. The "De Ecclesia," "De Benedicta Incarnacione," and "De Civili Dominio," are almost entirely in print, and will be issued to members in usual course, and the publication of these will, it is hoped, stimulate still further the patriotic, literary, and theological sections of which so great a part of English society is composed, as well as give to the world for the first time a taste of how glorious a writer and thinker for all time was "The Morning Star of the Reformation."

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

IMPURE BOOKS.—Mr. Steiger, a large bookseller in New York, has issued a circular, calling upon all to help in the suppression of immoral literature. In this circular it is stated that a Leipsic firm offered to send him a large consignment of impure books; the offer was declined in scathing language.—Wahrheitszeugen.

MR. BEN-OLIEL, of Rome, is now at Viareggio, Lucca, from whence he hopes to visit his long-neglected brethren at Florence, Leghorn, Pisa, Lucca, &c., according as the Lord may move his people to send him means for these evangelistic journeys, and sustain his hands by their prayers. There are thousands of Jews in Italy who have not heard the message of redeeming love for long years.

HAMBURG.—A novel service has just been held here, organised by the Y.M.C.A. About 5000 persons, whose habitual avocations prevent their attending any public worship, assembled in the large church of St. Michel. Chorales, pieces of music, and addresses followed each other, whereby the people were edified and interested. They expressed much gratitude to those who initiated the movement.—Journal Réligieux.

SAINT ETIENNE.—Mr. Hastings Burroughs says that during the last six months 4,000 patients have visited the gratuitous dispensary. The Gospel is simply preached, and by the generosity of an English lady he has given a New Testament to every patient. Open-air preaching in the adjacent villages has been lately added to the work. At the close of these meetings Mr. Burroughs offers to visit any sick people in the village, which is gratefully accepted.—Journal Réligieux.

INDIA.—The leaders of the American Free Baptist Mission in Southern Bengal, in their report for the past year, comprising brief accounts of each of the churches, stations, schools, &c., show that while the progress of the work varies in the different districts, a considerable number of converts joined the churches, and have been baptized. One of the converts, who had become a native teacher, was asked, before he died, how much he would take for his interest in Christ. He replied, "There is not wealth enough in this world to buy it." More preachers are appealed for, to go over and help them.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND.—The Y.M.C.A. in this far-off land presents a good report for the past year. The Committee thank God for the blessing vouchsafed and the Divine presence enjoyed. The Bible-readings have been much appreciated, the reading-room largely patronised, a zealous band of workers continue to distribute tracts, and the Sunday evening services have been a marked success. A new building is now required, the present one having become quite inadequate to the growth and demands of the Association. An increase of twenty-five members for the year is announced.

THE BALE MISSIONARY SOCIETY has suffered blow after blow in the death of several of its workers. In February, M. W. Roth, just as he was about to return to Europe, died at Dharwar, after twenty-five years of persevering labour. In March, M. K. Bender died on the Gold Coast. In April, another missionary died there four months after his arrival. The death of two others in India quickly followed. When God speaks in this fashion it becomes us to be silent. The grace of Christ is sufficient for us, for the dead and the living, and for our work, which He can bless, even among the heathen.—Journal des Missions.

THE MISSION FLEET. — The Free Church Monthly says the Mission fleet now includes the John Williams in the South Seas, the Ellangowan and the Mavri at New Guinea, the Good News and the Morning Star of the London Society on Lake Tanganika, the Peace of the Baptist Society on the Congo, the Dayspring of the Presbyterian Churches at New Hebrides, the Henry Wright on the south coast of Africa, the Itala of our own Church on Lake Nyassa, the John Brown of the Mendi Mission of the Moravians, the Morning Star of the American Board in the Pacific Seas, and the David Williamson at Old Calabar. This, however, is not a complete list.

ZURICH.—The Salvation Army has been suppressed on the pretext that "it is only an organisation to facilitate the sale of writings of no value, and to collect money." The singing of hymns to profane tunes is also condemned, and yet perfect liberty is given for the sale of immoral books and songs.—Journal Réligieux.

THE JEWS.—It has been stated in an article recently published that the Jews owe their health and frequent longevity in great part to their conscientious observance of the Mosaic laws. For instance, they abstain from blood, which is now known to often contain tubercles and bacilla; then they drink but very little of alcoholic beverages; and they yield entire obedience to the seventh day rest. In the cholera epidemic of last year in the south of France, only seven Jews were victims to the disease. Statistics of several countries prove that the average age of a Jew is thirty-seven years, whilst that of a Christian is twenty-five.—Journal Réligieux.

THE PALL MALL REVELATIONS.—Le Christianisme devotes a leading article to this subject, regretting that the French journals notice them with a sentiment of satisfaction. The spirit of their remarks is, "The English, notwithstanding their boasted virtue and religion, are no better than we are." "Are we," say they, "to believe that in England religious men are hypocrites?" M. J. Lemoinne, of the Débats, however, who knows England much better, but speaks as a sceptic, not as a Christian, writes:—"Social corruption has no name, nationality, or country; it is cosmopolitan. But if the men of the world are indignant at these revelations, the really religious world has shown no such prudery; in their action a spirit of the old Puritan leaven may be seen." Le Christianisme also points out that the leaders, who seek publicity, are all well-known religious men, which does not look like complicity in the corruption. The part which THE CHRISTIAN has taken in seeking to promote social purity is commended by some of the religious journals, none, so far as we know, condemning the action taken.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a blessing on services in Bristol, conducted by Mr. G. Hefford, August 10 to 23.——For blessing on camp meetings to be held in Pontypool, on the 16th and 17th instant, that this town may be awakened, and many souls saved.——For the restoration of one converted three years ago, but who has for some time been in a state of terrible darkness through doubts.

CLAPTON PARK THEATRE.—The anniversary services in connection with this mission have recently been held, when encouraging progress was reported. The result of the first year's evangelistic work are 82 members in Church fellowship, 13 teachers and 96 scholars in the Sunday-school, 106 members of the Band of Hope, and 151 adult Temperance pledges taken at the Gospel Temperance meetings. Forty-seven open-air services have been held, 14,000 tracts distributed, a library of 118 volumes formed, and the homes of the poorest visited regularly by the missionary and his helpers, and many cases of distress relieved by them.

SUNDAY-CLOSING.—The Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday state in their eighteenth annual report that, notwithstanding combined and persistent opposition, the cause of Sunday-closing still advances. The accounts show the total income for the year to have reached £3000. The help rendered to the association through the warm advocacy of the Press is thankfully acknowledged. The pamphlet also gives information as to the progress of the movement in Ireland and Wales, the petitions presented, the Parliamentary action taken, and the conferences, meetings, &c., which have been held. The offices are 14, Brown-street, Manchester.

SHEFFIELD.—"No clothes;" "I am no scholar;" are the excuses often made by working men and women who do not attend the services of God's House on the Sabbath-day. How are their lives to be influenced in the densely populated parts of our large towns? How are we to bring them under sound Scriptural teaching? A Mission Service on Sunday, at the close of the evening service, with bright singing and an address, seems to me the only way to meet the want. It has been tried in many places, and has been abundantly blessed. I am in the midst of 16,000 working people, who for the most part have no thought of a life beyond the grave. To draw in these men, I am trying to re-furnish one of our schoolrooms, for the holding of such a service. It will hold some 200 people, but we have no seats. May I ask you to help to carry out this effort of bringing these careless ones under the teaching of the Gospel?

WALDENSIAN CHURCH MISSIONS IN ITALY.

THE absence of a Deputation from Italy this year, while it deprives us of the stimulus of a personal appeal, lays upon us the greater responsibility of keeping in memory the Lord's work in that country which we have undertaken to support, and which is at present suffering from diminished funds.

Signor Prochet, the President of the Commission of Evangelisation, in a late letter, writes as follows:—

"The funds are sadly suffering from a great falling off in the contributions, especially due to the commercial depression. There is a deficit which threatens to increase, and to cripple the evangelistic operations of the Missions in Italy. We are so convinced of the importance of the work that we feel confident that the special appeal we now make will meet with a hearty response in England, where, ever since the times of Oliver Cromwell, there have been hearts sympathising with us."

Signor Prochet adds, as reasons for his appeal:—

"(1) It was England that through the exertions of Canon Gilly and General Beckwith first stretched a helping hand to the oppressed and down-trodden Waldensian Church, and fitted her for her present work of evangelisation.

"(2) The Church of the Waldenses, which for centuries held up alone the banner of evangelical truth, is now fighting, at headquarters, the same enemy which threatens the Church of Christ in England."

It may be added that there are nearly 4000 members connected with our Waldensian Missions, and about as many more connected with the other evangelical churches and societies.

The additions from year to year to the Waldensian Missions, of members gathered chiefly from the ranks of Romanism, have been annually on the increase, and last year numbered over 500. At the same time we can hail with satisfaction a growing esteem throughout Italy for evangelical truth, and a melting away of prejudices which were the result of gross ignorance, fostered by the priestly party.

Donations will be gratefully received.

Mission and other Appeals.

HOME FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN, Clifton, Bristol.—Will any kind friend send a donation to the superintendent of the above Home towards £12 required to enable her to take in an urgent case of a child three years old, who if taken in at once could probably be cured. She has a crippled sister, aged four and a half years, now in the Home.

OSTEND.—The members of the Christian Mission Church at Ostend ask for help to build a more spacious place of worship, their present little room being quite unfit to invite the multitude who long to hear the preaching of the Gospel, and sorely feel the want of it Any Christian brother will be gladly welcomed who should be at Ostend during the season. Donations, specified "Church at Ostend," may be addressed to Pasteur Anet, 13, Rue Pont-Bergerand, Gohissart-Jumet, Belgique; for information apply 40, Rue Albert, Ostend.

SOUTHAMPTON.—On behalf of the Waterside Mission I would ask your readers for some old magazines, tracts, or periodicals suitable for the reading of the sailors and dockmen of the town. A large number are distributed during the course of the year among sailors and men on shore, and tract bags are also placed on board ships going to sea. Also any old bound volumes suitable for the reading-room adjoining the Mission-hall would be very acceptable, especially now, as we are just starting a lending library for the men. Any parcels of tracts, books, &c., may be sent direct to Mr. Domoney, Argyle House, Padwell-road, Southampton.—MARY WESTLAKE, hon. secretary, Grosvenor-square, Southampton, August 6.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSIONS.—Dear Sir,—The letter you kindly printed on July 16 has brought me scores of inquiries, and many have been assisted to comfortable quarters thereby. Let me now say to your readers: Let all who can come in September, and let the rest come now, but we are very full. Mr. G. H. Chaplin will open a second Children's Special Service Mission on the 20th inst. I shall be happy to be of any service to any of your readers who may write me with envelope stamped and addressed.—Yours truly, W. H. SIMMS, Incumbent of St. Saviour's Church.

Littlehampton-on-Sea.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The Induction of Rev. J. W. Rodger, Wolverhampton, into the pastoral charge of the congregation of St. Andrew's, Bournemouth, by the Presbytery of London, took place on Thursday, July 9. The service was held in the church in the afternoon, and was well attended. The sermon on the occasion was preached by the Rev. Thomas Curry, Aston Tyrrold. The Rev. Gavin Carlyle, Ealing, presided at the induction, and gave the addresses to Mr. Rodger and the congregation. At the close of the service Mr. Rodger received a very cordial welcome from the people, who shook hands with him as they left the church.

Notes on Daily Readings.

AUGUST 13.—2 TIMOTHY I.

v. 7.—"Of a sound mind."—The word means rather "the bringing one to a right mind"; hence "correction," "admonition," "discipline," "The spirit of power, and love, and discipline" (R.V.). seems rather to describe the special gift for ministerial work bestowed on Timothy, as well as on the Apostle Paul, for the sake of others, rather than their own spiritual life, considered in itself.

v. 8.—"Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel."—Better rendered in R.V., "Suffer hardships with the Gospel." This is one of many similar instances of "the Gospel," or "the faith," or "the truth," being personified. Compare Phil. i. 27, rendered by Bishop Lightfoot, "striving in concert with the faith of the Gospel;" 1 Cor. xiii. 6, "rejoiceth with the truth."

"According to the power of God."—The connection might be better traced if this were rendered "according to its being the power of God who hath saved us," &c. Compare Rom. i. 16, where Paul says he is not ashamed of the Gospel, "for it is the power of God unto salvation."

v. 12.—"He is able to keep that which I have committed unto him."—Lit. "my deposit." Which may mean either that which God had entrusted to Paul, or that which Paul had entrusted to God. The latter is preferred by the "Speaker's Commentary," which explains the expression thus: "Not merely his soul, or his hopes, or his safety specifically, but his whole self, body, soul, and spirit—all he is, and all he is to be—which he had entrusted into the hands of God to keep, as to Him seemed best, 'against that day,' the day of the Lord's appearing again, when salvation will be complete, and hope will be merged in the certainty of bliss."

AUGUST 14.—2 TIMOTHY II.

v. 1.—"Thou therefore, my son, be strong (be strengthened, R.V.) in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." v. 6.—"The husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits."—The first six verses of this chapter consist of three exhortations, followed by three illustrations, which will be found to correspond if taken in reverse order. It is a case of inverted parallelism; so that ver. 4 gives the illustration corresponding to ver. 3, ver. 5 to ver. 2, and ver. 6 to ver. 1, as above. The point of correspondence is that if Timothy is to labour that others may be partakers of grace, he must first be strong in that grace himself, as the husbandman that laboureth must first partake of the fruits (i.e., must eat) in order to be strong to labour. The common explanation of ver. 6 misses the point by supposing the fruits to be partaken of are those of the coming harvest. It also takes "first" as an adjective instead of an adverb, as R.V., "Must be the first to partake." The Greek, however, is literally "must first of the fruits partake." Athanasius seems to have taken both this view of "must first partake," and of the connection with ver. 1, for Alford quotes his explanation of ver. 6 thus: "It is the duty of a teacher first to apply to himself that which he teaches to others."

v. 2.—"And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." v. 5.—"If a man also contend in the games, he is not crowned except he have contended lawfully" (R.V.).—The importance of faithful teaching is illustrated by the exertions of the athlete being thrown away if he neglect to conform to the laws of the games; so religious exertion, if not in accordance with the laws God has laid down for the "good fight of faith," may be thrown away also.

v. 3.—"Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." v. 4.—"No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier" (R.V.).—The connection here is self-evident, and needs no comment.

v. 8.—"Of the seed of David."—A hint on which, writing from a Roman prison, he would not enlarge, as to the certainty of the coming kingdom. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David" (Luke i. 32).

v. 21.—"If a man therefore purge himself from these."—This refers not so much to separation from others, as to self-purification so as not to belong to their number.

v. 26.—"At his will," is best taken (Ellicott) as referring to God. "That they may recover themselves . . . at his will," corresponding to, "If God peradventure will give them repentance."

AUGUST 15.—2 TIMOTHY III.

v. 5.—"Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."—R.V., "Holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof." This common characteristic of our days forms the climax of the Apostle's prophetic description of the "difficult" times of the last days.

v. 6.—"For of this sort are they that creep into houses, and lead captive silly women," &c.—Alford quotes from De Wette: "This is an admirable characterisation of soul-hunters, who have been principally found among the Roman Catholics, and of their victims."

v. 8.—"Jannes and Jambres."—Traditional names amongst the Jews for the chief magicians at Pharaoh's court.

v. 13.—"Evil men and impostors" (R.V.).—These "impostors" were themselves first imposed upon, as the next clause shows: "deceiving, and being deceived." The power of Satan, "which deceiveth the whole world," is evidently alluded to.

v. 15.—"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God."—It is much to be deplored that the R.V. has adopted in its text, "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable." "Scripture" is a definite technical term for "the Holy Scriptures" spoken of in the last verse, and in spite of the absence of the Greek article the word may be rendered "all Scripture" (see "Speaker's Commentary" on Eph. iii. 15). The most natural form of construction of the sentence, too, is that given by A.V., "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." The construction followed by R.V. is very forced, and if applied to a parallel construction in Hebrew iv. 13 would make it, "all things naked are also open to the eyes," instead of what it evidently means," all things are naked," &c.

AUGUST 16.—2 TIMOTHY IV.

v. 1.—"I charge thee therefore . . . at his appearing and his kingdom."—Owing to the reading "at" being now discredited, as unsupported by evidence, and "and" being read in its place, this should be read (as in R.V.), "I charge thee in the sight of God and of Jesus Christ, &c. . . . and by his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word," &c.

v. 3.—"Having itching ears."—It is not of the teachers, but of those who "heap to themselves teachers," that this is said.

v. 6.—"For I am already being offered—or poured out as a drink offering, margin (R.V.).—This throws light on the meaning of the drink-offering under the law. The daily sacrifice representing Christ (see Exod. xxix. 38) was accompanied by its meat-offering, representing the consecration of his people in their life, the living sacrifice of Rom. xii. 1, and by its drink-offering representing their death for Him if called for, as it was in the Apostles' case.

v. 7.—"I have fought the good fight."—R.V., "This is, perhaps, too specific: the figure includes all or any of the contests in the games."—Speaker's Commentary. "I have striven the good strife."—Ellicott.

v. 14.—"The Lord reward him according to his works."—The best attested reading has the verb in the future, and so reads "the Lord will render to him according to his works." This removes some of the difficulty which has been felt at the Apostle's expressing such a wish, but it may any how be regarded as a solemn sentence of judgment pronounced against a persistent and dangerous enemy of the Gospel.

v. 17.—"I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion."—"The most ancient interpretation is that of the Greek commentators, who refer the expression to Nero; but it was doubtful whether he was then in Rome."—Ellicott. It is more probably a proverbial expression for deliverance from great danger.

v. 18.—"Will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom."—For "preserve" R.V. reads "save," as the word is in the Greek. The final stage of salvation, viz., redemption of the body, is probably meant.

AUGUST 17.—TITUS I.

v. 1.—"According to the faith of God's elect."—"Rather, 'for' the faith of God's elect: the faith of God's chosen ones, whether converted as yet or not, was the object and end for which Paul was sent."—Sp. Com.: comp. 2 Tim ii. 10. "And the knowledge of the truth which is according to godliness."—Knowledge is rendered by Bishop Ellicott, "full knowledge." There is a latent contrast implied with a head knowledge, which does not produce godliness. To promote such is no part of the Apostle's mission.

v. 5.—"Ordain elders" ("Appoint elders," R.V.).—What follows gives the ground or qualification for such appointment. It was an evil day for the Church when ordination was supposed to confer ministerial qualification.

v. 7.—"A bishop must be blameless."—Not what we call a bishop, but a presbyter. Sp. Com. says: "Episcopus, overseer, is used in this case with propriety, as the synonym of Presbyter, instead of Elder in ver. 5, because the discharge of the office is here the prominent idea. He who overlooks others ought to be blameless."

v. 15.—"Unto the pure all things are pure."—"For them to make use of, not 'in the estimation of.'" —Bishop Ellicott. "To them that are defiled and unbelieving."—"Practical unbelief is only too commonly allied with moral pollution."—Ibid.

v. 16.—"Being abominable."—Not perhaps without a tacit reference to the unclean meats, &c., which they would call 'abominations;' the true abominations being to be found in their own hearts and lives."—Sp. Com.

AUGUST 18.—TITUS II.

v. 1.—"Sound doctrine."—The R.V. is more accurate, "the sound (or healthful) doctrine," that is, the practical teaching of the Gospel, as opposed to the unhealthy teaching referred to in the last verse.

v. 11.—"The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men."—"Rather, 'For the grace of God appeared, which bringeth salvation to all men'—to bond-slaves among the rest, and therefore involving all men in the obligation to holiness."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 12.—"Teaching us."—The Greek word implies instruction, combined with discipline. The nature of the discipline appears in the allusion to "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts," which follows. "Soberly, righteously, and godly."—A summary of our duties to ourselves, to our neighbours, and to God.

v. 13.—R.V. renders this better than A.V.: "Looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." "The blessed hope (says Sp. Com.) is the appearing. 'Appearance of the glory,' which is the literal translation, is also the correct one. It is the revelation of the glory of Him who before came in humility, which constitutes the blessed hope."

v. 14.—"Who gave Himself."—"Himself is emphatic: his whole self, soul and body, and all He had or was; Himself, Godman, which was certainly the greatest gift that was ever given, the highest price that was ever paid for anything in the world." —Beveridge. "A peculiar people."—The meaning is brought out in R.V., "A people for his own possession."

v. 4.—"But when the kindness," &c.—The Apostle does not finish his sentence, which would have naturally ended, "we became very different to what we were;" but he bursts forth into an indignant denial of "works done in righteousness," R.V., i.e., after justification, having been the procuring cause of salvation. So jealous is he of God's grace being accounted the only source of salvation.

v. 5.—"Through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost" R.V.—Most commentators regard "the washing" &c., as being baptism. A deeper and truer explanation takes this, as well as its parallel Eph. v. 26, as referring to the washing symbolised by baptism, the being baptized into his death (Rom. vi.), which is the true washing of the soul connected with regeneration, hence called "washing of regeneration." There is probably an allusion to our Lord's teaching in John iii., where "born of water and spirit" represents death to the flesh in Christ's death (water being the element of death), and life to the spirit in his resurrection, which would be "the renewing of the Holy Ghost."

v. 7.—"That being justified," &c.—This is better rendered in Sp. Com., "In order that having been justified by his grace we may in hope become heirs of eternal life." This clause seems to depend on "he shed on us," and describes the aim of the Spirit's work. Compare Rom. xv. 13.

v. 8.—"This is a faithful saying."—This is better taken by itself and rendered "faithful is the word," referring to what goes before.

"Might be careful to maintain good works."—Sp. Com. renders it, "may make it their care to be foremost in good works."

MUSIC.

ELDERLY PEOPLE. Words by A. C. JEWITT, music by E. ST. QUENTIN. An amusing song with a pretty air, showing that the pessimistic prognostications of some "elderly people" concerning their juniors are not always verified by fact. WHEN THE CHILDREN ARE ASLEEP. Words and music by WILLIAM M. HUTCHINSON. A soft and touching little ballad, dedicated to his wife. Both published by W. Marshall & Co., 70, Berners-street, W. Price 4s. each.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, August 8, 1885.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? And amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

INVESTIGATION CRUSADE.

PROTECTION OF PURE YOUNG GIRLS.

IN RECENT DISCLOSURES it is affirmed that in a West-end work-room, where there are frequent new hands imported FROM THE COUNTRY as apprentices, there are two base women whose real object it is to profit pecuniarily by the moral ruin of these poor girls; and cases of success, from their point of view, are given. Now this traffic must, in the very nature of things, excite the INDIGNATION of all right thinking people; and further, such a state of things demands the most SEARCHING INVESTIGATION, so that these monsters in human form may be exposed, and the SYSTEM STAMPED OUT. ALL WEST-END employers are under the imputation recently published. All SUPERINTENDENTS of WORK-ROOMS are under the same CLOUD; and, so far as the statement is true, the DAUGHTERS OF HUNDREDS of respectable people in the Country are IN IMMINENT MORAL PERIL.

Already my powers are more than overtaxed, but THESE VILE CONSPIRATORS must be UNEARTHED, and the facts laid before the public.

No effort can be too great to protect pure-minded girls, struggling hard to acquire the knowledge of a business by which they may gain an honourable living!

I do not ask for money for THIS CRUSADE. It is not a pecuniary question; but I ask for moral support.

Let those who sympathise, or who can give any information for or against the accusation, or who think they can help in any way, write to me. Mark envelope outside, "INVESTIGATION CRUSADE."

CHRISTIAN LADIES in London and Provinces may by their personal influence do much good in advising parents and guardians as to the placing out of pure, respectable girls in houses of business.

Office, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

In Memory of

Major-Gen. Sir HERBERT STEWART, K.C.B.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—It is my earnest wish and desire to raise some memorial in the town in which I live in memory of my late brother, Sir Herbert Stewart, and I appeal to your liberality and generous aid. It is proposed to open for soldiers coffee, reading, recreation, and dining-rooms, library, and Bible-class rooms, besides nightly Gospel and Temperance addresses, &c.

All who are interested in the Soldiers' welfare would (if they knew this town) agree with me that this "Home" is urgently needed, and the opportunity of possessing a building, at this particular moment, coupled with my earnest wish to do something in memory of my brother, clearly shows me that it is the Lord's work (before whom I have laid the whole scheme), and I confidently appeal to your Christian sympathy, being assured that, with the blessing of Him "whose are the silver and gold," I shall not make the appeal in vain.

Full particulars and circulars will be forwarded to anyone who will write for them. Collecting cards will be gratefully supplied, and Christian workers are earnestly asked to help in raising the necessary funds.—Believe me, very truly yours, AUGUSTA EVERETT.

Contributions will be most thankfully received by myself, the Rectory, Dorchester, or at Messrs. Williams' Bank, Dorchester, or the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

DEAR SIR,—I consider it a happy privilege to recommend the proposed scheme for a Soldiers' Home in Dorchester, in memory of the late distinguished soldier, Sir Herbert Stewart, K.C.B. I feel sure that you share the universal sorrow in the loss of this gallant and brave soldier, the youngest General in the British Army, and therefore I, in behalf of his sister, appeal through your paper to the liberality of all sympathisers in this excellent scheme.

The "Home" will greatly benefit our 600 soldiers, as a resort for quiet enjoyment, recreation, and Christian instruction. At present, out of barracks, the public-houses (of which we have a very liberal supply) are the chief places where our soldiers spend their evenings, and consequently, get into endless mischief, as I and other officers can fully testify.

H. MARSHALL, late 9th Lancers,
Commanding 39th Regimental District, Dorchester.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in, which in all now amount to £300. Thanks to kind helpers. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

ANNETTE CORKE, Hon. Sec.,

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

THE SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

"WHO WILL HELP US?"

Owing to the dilapidated state of our premises, we have been compelled to go to a considerable expense for repairing. One evening during the meeting the rain poured in in such torrents we had to stop, and seek shelter in different parts of the Hall. We earnestly ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to assist us in this unlooked-for expense. Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, "THE CHRISTIAN" Office, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

CONVALESCENT AND SEASIDE HOME, Beach Rocks, Sandgate, Kent.—Admission by small weekly payments, with recommendation by subscriber or by arrangement.—For particulars, apply to Henry H. Board, London Samaritan Society, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

HELP greatly wanted to carry on the preaching of the Gospel of the Grace of God at St Saviour's, Littlehampton. The minister labours at his own charges. No stipend Heavy debt. Summer bazaar now preparing. Cheques, remittances, and parcels will be thankfully received by Rev. W. H. Simms

HOME OF INDUSTRY, 60, Commercial-street, Spitalfields.—Monthly meeting for Christian Workers, Wednesday, August 19. China Inland Mission, Mr. Broomhall will preside. Valedictory meeting. Eight or ten brethren and sisters leaving shortly for China will be present. Also several missionaries who have returned recently for rest. Tea at 6 p.m., meeting at 7.

PERTH CONFERENCE.—This Annual Conference will be held (God willing) in the City Hall, Perth, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 8th, 9th, and 10th September. Information regarding lodgings will be furnished gratis by Mr. Thomas Russell, 65, South Methven-street.

URGENT APPEAL to the Benevolent.—St. Laurence's Home for Children.—Will twenty charitable persons give £5 each to support this Home, and to enable sickly London children to enjoy fresh country air? Funds are greatly needed.—Miss Forsyth, St. Laurence's Home, Upton, Slough.

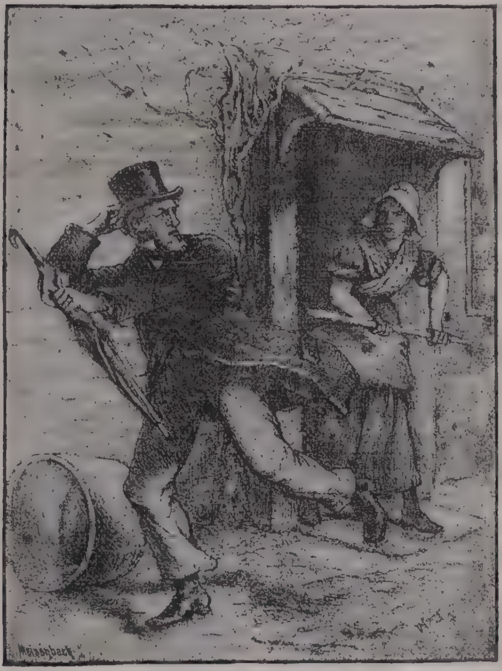
THE DEACON'S WEEK.

By ROSE TERRY COOKE.



This racy and telling narrative has been reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN for the purpose of Distribution in a neat form, suitable for enclosing in the modern square envelope.

"'Good mornin', ma'am,' and then I stopped. Words seemed to hang, somehow. I didn't want to pop right out that I'd come over to try'n convert her folks. I hemmed and swallered a little, and fin'lly I said, says I, 'We don't see you to meetin' very frequent, Mis' Vedder.'

"'No, you don't!' ses she, as quick as a wink. 'I stay to home, and mind my business.'

"'Well, we should like to hev you come along with us, and do ye good,' says I, sort of conciliatin'.

"'Look a here, Deacon!' she snapped, 'I've lived alongside of you fifteen year, and you knowed I never went to meetin'; we a'n't a pious lot, and you knowed it; we're poorer'n death and uglier'n sin. Jim, he drinks and swears, and Malvinny dono her letters. She knows a heap she hadn't ought to, besides. Now what are you a-coming here to-day for, I'd like to know, and talkin' so glib about meetin'? Go to meetin'! I'll go or come jest as I please, for all you. Now get out o' this!'

"Why, she come at me with a broomstick! There wasn't no need on't; what she said was enough. I hadn't never asked her nor her'n to so much as think of goodness before."

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE BIBLE INTERPRETER;

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY.

By the Author of "THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER."

This book is specially intended for the use of those who, whilst desiring information on Biblical subjects, cannot afford the purchase of large and expensive Bible dictionaries. The present small volume contains explanations of MORE THAN EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture words and subjects, and it is believed that many a painstaking Sabbath School teacher and many a humble Bible student will find "help by the way" from consulting this little manual.

In addition to the ordinary features of a BIBLE DICTIONARY, there will be found in an Appendix details of FULFILLED PROPHECIES, concerning the following peoples, places, and events:—

The Jewish Nation.
The Destruction of Jerusalem.
The Destruction of Samaria.
The Ammonites.
The Arabs.
Babylon.
Edom.
Egypt.
Moab.
Nineveh Philistia.
Tyre.
The Seven Churches of Asia.
Popery.

The volume also contains a Table, or List, of 361 HISTORICAL EVENTS AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES, by which the Bible reader is enabled to turn at once to the portion of Scripture where any particular event is referred to, or any Biblical character is named or described.

The Book also contains:—

A List of the Prayers Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Miracles Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Parables in the Bible;
A Table of the Reigns of the Kings of Judah and Israel: in parallel columns;
A Table of Scripture Proper Names, with their correct Pronunciation;
A Table of the Order and Dates of the Books of the Bible.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS, AND NUMEROUS SMALLER ENGRAVINGS.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of J. MOODY, ANLABY, HULL.

In February last this patient applied to me. Disease had been progressing for six months, in spite of all medical advice. It commenced with severe cold, which settled on the chest.

The symptoms when he came under me were: A most violent cough, difficult expectoration, fulness at the chest, which was painful in the extreme, short breathing, flushings, palpitations, loss of flesh, weakness.

For three months he was under my treatment; and writing me in May, he says: "With grateful heart I write to tell you I feel now quite a new man. My cough has left me, my voice is clear, my appetite is good. I shall be happy to give my testimony to the wonderful effect of your medicine. I first heard of it through the Primitive Methodist Magazine.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

Attractively printed, with Carmine Borders; and Beautifully Bound.

Very suitable for a Gift Book.

"Its counsels are wise, loving, and direct. Its aim is to lead the reader to have a clean heart and a clean life, to consecrate all to Christ. . . . All that art, taste, and skill can do to make the theme attractive has been done by the well-known publishers. The result is that, within and without, THE KING'S PALACE is simply perfect." Irish Congregational Magazine.

Birds of the Bible.

CHATS WITH THE CHILDREN ABOUT BIBLE BIRDS.

By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

An Attractive Gift Book. Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

With very attractive Coloured Frontispiece, and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully printed on toned paper, with carmine borders.

"The 'Chats' here given will be found both interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy of the work. . . . One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday School Rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."—The Christian Treasury.

FAITH HEALING.

This is a many-sided question, and calls for extreme cautiousness, mingled with no small amount of charity, in forming an opinion upon it. Already it has called forth much diversity of opinion in the Christian Church. The exercise of faith alone for healing purposes is too holy to treat lightly, but there is one consideration in no way antagonistic which is lost sight of. Advocates of Faith Healing often deprecate the use of means in toto, but in this they err; from their bright experience of one phase of the subject, they are apt to become exclusive in their own peculiar doctrinal views, overlooking equally forcible and reasonable arguments. They lose sight of the fact that He to whom they look for healing is the God of Nature, and a moment's reflection will reveal that for every unfavourable condition in this marvellous universe, there is a counterbalancing influence. For instance, He ruled that man should be subject to hunger, but He also created the means whereby it could be satisfied. So in disease, He, for wise purposes, permits man to be subject to suffering, and, following out a similar plan, He has provided remedial agents—as clearly of his ordaining in one case as in the other.

Do Faith Healers always bear in mind this fact when they deprecate human efforts for man's restoration? Do they suppose that it is right, in the sight of God, to ignore those various sanative agents with which Creation is replete, and come to Him seeking a miracle in preference to exerting themselves to obtain cure?

A calm consideration of this subject from every available standpoint is given in "Faith Healing Reviewed,"* the author having for many years devoted his energies to the work of healing in a manner which he has felt to be in accordance with the Divine plan. He has tested system after system of curing disease, and is prepared to render to each its due; but one agent impresses him as being most in accordance with the governing laws of the universe and of the human frame, and recognising God's blessing in its application, he is bold in his declaration that God does honour the efforts of those who, in using the means provided, bow to his will, and subject themselves to his ordinances.

Reports are constantly reaching us of healing by faith on the one hand, and on the other by the successful application of remedies from Nature's own storehouse, remedies in which no man can claim a proprietary right. Light, air, heat, water, oil, and Electricity are Nature's own provision, and their curative properties may be developed as the hydropath develops the virtues of water. Magnetism is that form of Electricity which Mr. B. Copson Garratt has applied in a most remarkable manner, and all who feel an interest in this matter are invited to send to him for his explanatory pamphlet—gratis, B. Copson Garratt, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

"Moon's" Society for Embossing the Scriptures and other Books for the Blind.

Dr. Moon's simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 250 languages and dialects. More than 150,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of The Christian.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

In Memory of

Major-Gen. Sir HERBERT STEWART, K.C.B.

Christian Friends,—It is my earnest wish and desire to raise some memorial in the town in which I live in memory of my late brother, Sir Herbert Stewart, and I appeal to your liberality and generous aid. It is proposed to open for soldiers coffee, reading, recreation, and dining-rooms, library, and Bible-class rooms, besides nightly Gospel and Temperance addresses, &c.

All who are interested in the Soldiers' welfare would (if they knew this town) agree with me that this "Home" is urgently needed, and the opportunity of possessing a building, at this particular moment, coupled with my earnest wish to do something in memory of my brother, clearly shows me that it is the Lord's work (before whom I have laid the whole scheme), and I confidently appeal to your Christian sympathy, being assured that, with the blessing of Him "whose are the silver and gold," I shall not make the appeal in vain.

Full particulars and circulars will be forwarded to anyone who will write for them. Collecting cards will be gratefully supplied, and Christian workers are earnestly asked to help in raising the necessary funds.—Believe me, very truly yours, Augusta Everett.

Contributions will be most thankfully received by myself, the Rectory, Dorchester, or at Messrs. Williams' Bank, Dorchester, or the Office of The Christian.

To the Editor of The Christian.

Dear Sir,—I consider it a happy privilege to recommend the proposed scheme for a Soldiers' Home in Dorchester, in memory of the late distinguished soldier, Sir Herbert Stewart, K.C.B. I feel sure that you share the universal sorrow in the loss of this gallant and brave soldier, the youngest General in the British Army, and therefore I, in behalf of his sister, appeal through your paper to the liberality of all sympathisers in this excellent scheme.

The "Home" will greatly benefit our 600 soldiers, as a resort for quiet enjoyment, recreation, and Christian instruction. At present, out of barracks, the public-houses (of which we have a very liberal supply) are the chief places where our soldiers spend their evenings, and consequently, get into endless mischief, as I and other officers can fully testify.

STERN MEMORIAL FUND.

President—Right Hon. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
Treasurer—JOHN DEACON, Esq.
Hon. Secretary—Rev. J. B. BARRACLOUGH, M.A.
Bankers—Messrs. WILLIAMS, DEACON & Co.

Such a noble career of missionary labour as that of the late Rev. H. A. Stern, D.D., deserves some lasting memorial.

The Stern Memorial Committee propose that the Wanderers' Home for Believing and Inquiring Israelites be placed on a permanent basis by an endowment raised to his memory, and called "The Stern Memorial Home."

This Home, of which Dr. Stern had charge during the last fifteen years of his life, is a most important auxiliary of the London Jews' Society's Home Missionary operations.

Contributions will be received by the Treasurer, 20, Birchin-lane, E.C.; or at the London Society's House, 16, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.; or by the Hon. Secretary, 46, King Edward-road, Hackney, E.

The Christian.

THE OVERCOMERS.—I.

THE Christian is an overcomer. And yet, alas! how many who profess to be followers of Christ are often overcome by the adversary, and so bring dishonour on the name they bear!

To overcome is all-important, that we may be to the glory of God, and live in the enjoyment of freedom and peace.

Though we are utter weakness, the Lord is Almighty. All our salvation is of God, all is in Christ for us, all is of grace, and all is enjoyed by us in believing. His strength is made perfect in weakness (2 Cor. xii. 9). Christ says, "Without Me ye can do nothing" (John xv. 5). By Christ's death, and by that alone, sin is put away; and by His risen power, and that alone, Satan is overcome. Jesus gives us true freedom from all evil (John viii. 36).

We live in an evil world, but Christ overcomes for all who have received the pardon of their sins, and who put their trust in Him. He comforts all His disciples with the words: "I have overcome the world" (John xvi. 33). The conflict will continue in this world till Satan be destroyed (see Gen. iii. 15, and Rev. xx. 10). We read: "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly" (Rom. xvi. 20). While here, let us not be afraid to know the power of our adversaries; and then we should be careful to know where all our strength is to overcome; and "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might; . . . and having done (or overcome) all, to stand" (Eph. vi. 10, 13).

Those who know the power for evil that is in the world, the flesh, and the devil, and yet fear neither, but fear the Lord alone, are like the young men whom John addressed in his Epistle: "I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. . . . I have written to you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one" (1 John ii. 13, 14). John also wrote, "Greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world" (1 John iv. 4). "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God. . . . For whatsoever (or, everyone who) is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" (1 John v. 1, 4, 5).

Unbelievers are slaves to sin and Satan; they have not true freedom here, and they will not be able to sit on the throne hereafter.

All the promises are to those who overcome, and all childlike believers in Christ do overcome.

There are some very special and precious promises in the Revelation to all those who overcome; let us carefully consider them It is written: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God" (ii. 7). "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death" (ver. 11).

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it" (ver. 17).

"He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star" (ver. 26—28).

"He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels" (iii. 5). "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name" (ver. 12). "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne" (ver. 21). "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son" (xxi. 7).

These are faithful words from our God, to encourage us to be faithful to Him, and so overcome the Evil One.

Who can imagine what will be the feeling of delight and satisfaction of an eternity with Christ and God, and of being one with Him for ever!

Alas! some who profess to be disciples of Christ yield to his enemies, and lose the throne and the kingdom and eternal life. "For of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning" (2 Peter ii. 19, 20).

The letters to the Churches give seven warnings. One is the evil of allowing love to Christ to lessen (Rev. ii. 4). The second is the evil of false doctrine (ver. 14). The third is the evil of men in the Church ruling as lords over Christians (ver. 6—15; see also Matt. xxiii. 8, and 1 Pet. v. 3). The fourth is the evil of fellowship with the world in their religion (ver. 14, 20; and see 1 John ii. 15—18). The fifth is the evil of being careless in the things of God, getting into a dying state, and becoming defiled (iii. 2—4). The sixth is the evil of spiritual death, not alive to God (iii. 1; see Rom. vi. 11). The seventh is the evil of lukewarmness; that, though abundant in outward service, there is no true and real love to Christ Himself (ver. 16, 17, and John xiv. 21—23).

CONSECRATON OF PRIESTS.

AMONG the many beauties of the Revised Version blemishes here and there appear which disappoint us the more, as they are little expected.

One of these, as to which I have seen no notice taken, is the retention in the text of the word "consecrate," in Exodus xxix. 9, and other verses. Worse than this, we find the marginal reading of the Authorised Version, "fill the hands," expunged.

It appears to me, though I thus write, somewhat hazardous to question the scholarship of the Revising Company in a matter of simple translation; but in this case, at least, one has the best support in so venturing in the explanation given by the chapter itself of the word in dispute.

The ceremony of "hallowing" Aaron and his sons for the Priest's office consisted, as we see, of many minutely specified details, into which we need not now enter particularly. Suffice it to show that the final act, up to which all that precedes was leading, was that which verse 24 describes, the filling of the hands of Aaron and his sons with the choice parts of the ram, and with the bread, and the waving of them for a wave-offering before Jehovah.

This done, and these offerings taken again from their hands and burned for a sweet savour, the hallowing is perfected.

Is it not manifest, then, with what intent the Hebrew word is used which our translators have feebly rendered "consecrate"?

"Thou shalt fill the hands of Aaron and the hands of his sons," ver. 9, is the literal and significant translation, according to Mr. Newbury, and so throughout the chapter. See margin of the Authorised Version.*

See, then, how the beautiful truth of priesthood, its qualification and its function, is obscured and lost by this unfortunate mistranslation.

Its qualification, to be full-handed; its function, to offer to God from full hands. We might pursue the subject further, and show how no mere cleansing by water or blood, or by both, no investment with the garments of glory and beauty, no anointing of the holy oil, no tipping with the blood of ear, hand, and foot, will suffice to make a priest. His hands must be filled. "For every high priest is appointed to offer gifts and sacrifices, wherefore it is of necessity that this high priest have somewhat to offer" (R.V. Heb. viii.).

We might point to the great truth that none but Christ Himself can fill the sinner's empty hands, who to the last, as at the first, can truly say: "Nothing in my hands I bring." Nothing, that is, of my own; none but Christ.

We might also enlarge on the priesthood of all believers in this glorious possibility and privilege of being offerers, full-handed offerers, exalting Christ, waving Him as a wave-offering before God, here below imperfectly; hereafter, worthily, as is shown, for example, in the transcendent scene of Rev. v.

* The word which is translated "consecration" is in the Hebrew milluim, from mahlee, to be full, and means "fillings," that is "offerings."

But our object is gained in pointing, through the very blemish of the Revised rendering, to the rich mine of truth that lies beneath the misleading sign of the word "consecrate." That the Revisers were not unmindful of the significance of the word is shown by their insertion, at 1 Chron. xxix. 5, of the marginal reading, "to fill his hand," although the objectionable word, "consecrate," is unmeaningly retained in the text. How pregnant and forcible, thus explained, becomes David's appeal to the princes of the tribes of Israel. "Who then is willing to fill his hand with an offering this day unto Jehovah?" Then the princes gave, along with King David's offering, more than nine hundred and sixty-six millions of English pounds in value for the building of the Temple! Can it be denied that they filled their hands? It was a nation of priests that day. Willing offerers to God of the fullness which God had given them. "For all things come of Thee, and of thine hand (margin) have we given Thee" (ver. 14).

To return to our chapter, Exod. xxix., the question cannot fail to arise in ver. 33, where we find "to consecrate and to sanctify them," as to the intention of these two synonymous expressions. By a literal translation, which we hoped the Revised Version would have given us, the difficulty is explained. It reads thus:—"To fill their hands, to sanctify them" (omitting the conjunction), that is, to sanctify or set apart for priesthood by filling their hands. And so, instead of a mere tautology without added strength, we have a most instructive and necessary truth of the New Testament set forth, viz., that worship truly understood must begin with the conscious possession and appreciation of Christ, this blessing filling the heart to overflowing and pouring forth thereout in adoration to God, in praise of Christ to Him and to his people from our lips, and in the publication of the glad tidings of his salvation to men around us. Full-handed, full-hearted worshippers, counting no service, no sacrifice, no surrender, too great for one so worthy.

Thus, too, we understand the joy which the blessed Lord received when Mary of Bethany filled her hand with the alabaster cruse of ten-guinea ointment, and anointed his body beforehand to the burying. And thus we have foreshadowed the priestly offerings of Barnabas and the others, when not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own, but laid them at the Apostles' feet, "not grudgingly nor of necessity," but with full hands, "for God loveth a cheerful giver."

And now, in conclusion, I commend in this connection the eighth and ninth chapters of 2 Corinthians to those who would read the mind of God as to filling the hands of the priest-worshippers of the present day.

DEACON ABRAHAM.—For some time past this worthy servant of God has been holding meetings and delivering lectures in various places on behalf of his mission work and orphanage in Urumiah, Persia, dressed in the patriarchal costume, with other persons in different Bible and Oriental dress. He describes the oldest missionary church, the Nestorians, and their residence in the old Bible lands of Media, Persia, Assyria, and its capital Nineveh, ancient Paradise, and Mount Ararat, with their inhabitants of old, as Persians, Kurds, Arabs, Turks, &c., with description of Eastern manners and customs of great interest, throwing much light on Holy Scripture. Any friends wishing to organise meetings on his behalf, may communicate with him at 36, Gloucester-street, Queen-square, W.C. He anticipates returning to his native land before the winter sets in.

CAMP AND CONFERENCE AT NIAGARA.

After travelling over the prairies 900 miles, from Winnipeg to Calgary, visiting many farming centres in the interests of young men suited for farm work, I returned from the locality of the late rebellion with the victorious volunteers, witnessing the magnificent reception given to them in each town we passed through, and have much enjoyed a quiet week's rest for mind and body at this camp. Camp meetings are very common in America, either located by some lake or on the seashore, where people stay in tents and wooden cottages for days or weeks, while meetings are going on all the time. This Camp is called Wesley Park, and consists of 200 acres of groves on the Canadian side of the Niagara River, opposite the American Falls. There is a splendid view of all the Falls from this Hotel, Wesley Park House, a neat four-story wooden building, only opened a month, very clean and comfortable, located just on the edge of the largest grove. In the centre of this grove is a very fine auditorium or preaching place, having seats for 2000 people under the beautiful maple, pine, and spruce trees, lit by electric lamps, sloping down on all sides to a fine raised platform, which is open in front, has a good harmonium, and seats for fifty people, and on the pointed roof, a bell, the American and English flags, and the words, "Holiness to the Lord," and "Welcome" underneath. In the camp there are supply stores for groceries, &c., post-office, telegraph-office, book-store, and a large room, which was crowded the other night, when a returned missionary gave an interesting lecture on India, illustrated by dissolving views. But all the other meetings have been held in the open auditorium, under the trees, and as we have full moon this week, illuminating the Falls and the country round after the intense heat of the day, it is very weird to pass from the bright moonlight, into the sombre paths of the forest, these paths through the groves being marked by naphtha lamps, hung here and there on the trees, until you reach the white light of the large electric lamps of the auditorium. This camp was started last year, when a Union Missionary Conference was held, and this week there are about sixty male and female returned missionaries present, from India, China, Burmah, Siam, Japan, South America, Hudson's Bay, &c., representing the several denominations of Canada and the United States. There are three meetings daily, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Gracey, and all through the singing and speaking you hear the dull thunder of Niagara, while the air is cooled by the spray from the cataract. This Missionary Conference was preceded by a United Temperance one, lasting a fortnight, and will be followed by the Canadian Holiness Association Meetings and the International Camp Meeting, each for a fortnight. I have also been able, for a part of each day, to attend the BELIEVERS' ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

This Conference was established in 1876, and has been held in different places yearly. This week it has been held in a light wooden pavilion with open sides, erected in the beautiful grounds of the Queen's Royal Hotel, on the Canadian side of the Niagara River, at the point where it flows into Lake Ontario. Here, daily, for the past week, about one thousand Christians, of all denominations, and from all parts of Canada and the United States, have met in Conference. The subjects were opened by Revs. Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, T. O. Lowe, of Ohio, Professor Cooper, of Pennsylvania, Dr. Kendall, of Indiana, Professor Kellogg, of Pennsylvania, Dr. Parsons, of Canada, Dr. Blackstone of Canada, and by the energetic Secretary of the Conference, Rev. W. J. Erdman, of New York; also, evangelistic addresses were delivered by Dr. Munhall, of Indiana, and Bible readings given by Mr. G. C. Needham, of Massachusetts. The singing was led by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, so well known to friends at home. Nothing could exceed the quiet beauty of the scene, for the sides of the pavilion being open, one could see (while listening to the addresses) the beautiful waters of Lake Ontario, like a vast inland sea, and the River Niagara emptying into it the combined waters of Lakes Superior, Huron, Michigan, and Erie, which this river has carried over the great Falls. I will not write of these Falls, they have been so often described, and language fails me to do them justice. Suffice it to say, after visiting them on several previous trips to this country, I have lived by them this week, I have watched them from my bedroom window as I undressed at night, and as I dressed in the morning, some nights so white in the clear moonlight, and one very dark night they were constantly lit up by incessant flashes of lightning. I have wandered about them at all hours, been above and below the Falls, on both the American and Canadian sides, have stood the pelting of wind and water in the "Cave of the Winds," have seen the spray rising 200 to 1000 feet carried in every direction, according to the wind, and whatever disappointment some may experience, the charm of the Niagara Falls for me increases every hour. W. H. Newett.

CHOLERA IN MARSEILLES.

Dear Sir,—Your readers are already aware of the sad fact that cholera is again in Marseilles. I grieve to say one case has already occurred at the Rest that terminated fatally at the Hospital on the following day.

If all our sympathies are awakened for seamen whose hard life and total ignorance of a better one beyond render them peculiar objects of interest, how much more so when, after a perilous voyage it may be, in order to procure some ordinary comfort, they arrive in port only to meet the terrible enemy of all, in a foreign land, far from kith and kin and all those kindlier influences we know so much of in moments of sickness. Let me then entreat very earnestly, first, for earnest prayer that it might please God to spare us a repetition of last year's desolation, the impoverishing results of which we are still feeling in a totally empty exchequer; secondly, that, according to our measure, we may be able to minister, with the alleviations for the physical sufferings of those who may yet sicken, those better and more enduring consolations that shall gladden the hearts of our poor sailors either for life or for death; and, thirdly, that if it might please God the Rest may be spared as last year, so that she may continue her mission of mercy. The manager writes that neither he nor his young wife, to whom he was only married in March, have any fear, and the good pastors and merchants who act as a council of management are rallying around these earnest workers with their help so far as they are able to give it.

I have only lately spent three weeks at the Rest and rejoice to be able to give a good report of all that goes forward there. The constant opportunities for doing good occurring not merely occasionally, but daily, I may say all day, make me long for what I have so long prayed, namely two lady workers who would consecrate themselves to this most needy field. Any such might communicate with me as under.—Yours in the Master's service, Chas. E. Faithfull.

Villa and Avenue Carbacel, Nice.

LITERATURE FOR THE BLIND.—The second of another year's labour is given in the annual report of the "Society for Embossing and Circulating the Holy Scriptures and other useful Books in Dr. Moon's Type for the Blind, adapted to 251 languages and dialects." This system is the most perfect of the kind in existence, and funds only are needed to multiply copies of the standard works already issued from the depôt at 104, Queen's-road, Brighton. As many friends will be visiting the South Coast, we recommend a visit to this useful establishment. Dr. Moon is now in Sweden; but his daughter, Miss Adelaide Moon, who is managing the institution, will gladly explain the peculiarities and details of the process employed. In view of the immense boon thus conferred upon the blind of all countries, the system deserves to be widely known and supported. The present great hindrance is the need of £1000, to prepare a new edition of the embossed Bible. The present plates have, from 37 years' constant use, become much worn, and it is now proposed to make a new electrotyped set of plates, and thus secure the Bible to the English-speaking blind, who are supposed to number more than 100,000 in various parts of the world. Donations will be gratefully received by Dr. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

ON THE WAY TO NORTHFIELD.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

DRINK AT SEA.

THIS curse, so omnipresent on both Atlantic shores, makes itself palpably seen and felt on board the Servia. The wine-bottle circulates pretty freely at the luncheon and dinner tables, though the water-drinkers are certainly in the majority. The smoking-room is the centre of attraction for those who are bibulously inclined; there the weed pollutes the air, the mixed liquors run down the thirsty throats, and other things go on that do not make for righteousness. To outward appearance, however, with scarce an exception, we are a perfectly sober company, thanks, as I believe, to the restraining influence of the total abstainers. I have seen only three blue ribbons in the saloon, and one, worn by a little girl, among the steerage crowd. I am told that a good deal of drinking goes on in a quiet way, bringing in a considerable revenue, no doubt, to the ship's proprietary.

On Saturday evening an entertainment was given in the music-room on behalf of the Liverpool Sailors' Orphan Institution, when over £45 were contributed to its funds. The Chairman of the evening, when introducing Mr. E. Parker (one of Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists, who is proposing to engage in Gospel work in the States, and who was on the programme for a sacred song), referred to him as a blue-ribbon man, and deprecated any references to the Temperance question at that juncture. But he reckoned without his host. Mr. William Noble had been put down last on the programme to offer some remarks. After greatly charming the auditors with some concertina selections, he took up the dropped thread of the chairman's allusions to the blue ribbon, and delivered himself of a very timely and effective Temperance speech, every word of which told. Feeling, perhaps, that they had been in some measure entrapped into hearing this manly and courageous testimony, certain fellows of the baser sort incited a sharp-witted, but notoriously intemperate, Irish-American New York lawyer, who was then in liquor, to step to the front and make a speech, with the view of counteracting the influence of Mr. Noble's weighty and earnest appeal. This clever and unscrupulous limb of the law certainly succeeded in evoking laughter from the uncircumcised portion of his audience, but he at the same time made a pitiable exhibition of himself, stating as facts what he admitted next day to be pure inventions of the moment, and generally proving himself to be a practical illustration of the evils he had been set to defend. The sober-minded folks who heard him agreed that his speech was quite as effective a plea for Total Abstinence as that of Mr. Noble.

THE GAMBLING FEVER.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN will recollect the ukase recently addressed to commanders of the Cunard vessels, requesting them to suppress, as far as possible, the gambling mania that has of late developed itself during Atlantic voyages. This well-meant decree has, to all intents and purposes, become a dead letter, as far, at any rate, as the Servia is concerned. Our worthy captain, whose broad and weather-beaten visage proclaims him a veteran son of the sea, possesses the most excellent quality of attending, with unflagging assiduity, to the functions of the wheel-house. Whether he is too deeply engrossed with the cares of navigating his noble vessel across the trackless waste, or whether he is not alive to the evils of the system, I know not, but I can personally vouch for the fact that betting is permitted to flourish in the smoking-room in the most open and unblushing way. I may not occupy your space by entering into minute details. The ship's run from day to day furnishes the chief stock-in-trade of this meanest and most contemptible of avocations. A "pool" is made up during the day, with, perhaps, twenty contributors of five shillings or one pound each. As many numbers as cover the average or prospective run of the vessel in miles, for twenty-four hours, are drawn and allotted. In the evening each number is resold by public auction in the smoking-room, those nearest the anticipated figure fetching the highest prices. When the run has been reckoned up by the chief officers, and posted after noon next day, the holder of the nearest number takes the whole "pool," which may reach £20, or several times that amount, according to the stakes and the sums fetched by the resale. The element of uncertainty, through the fickleness of wind and fog, enters so largely into the calculation, that everybody hopes his number will be the successful one; thus the unhealthy, demoralising and ruinous excitement is fed day after day. Every possible peg is seized on which a bet may hang—the number of the New York pilot cutter, the style of the pilot's hat, even the trivial circumstance as to which leg he will first throw over the ship's side when he boards her. There is plenty of card-playing, too, in the smoking-room, and that, I am assured, is not unattended by this feverish thirst for easily-gotten, but too often dearly bought, gain. It seems to me that, if the ship authorities were at all in earnest about it, a great deal could be done to stop these things, but it is tacitly permitted, if not approved; as long as that is the case it will continue to thrive, and much evil in varied ways will be the result.

The first Sunday of the voyage was broken in upon by the stay at Queenstown and the bustle of shipping the mails, so that no public religious service was held. In the forenoon of the second Sunday, as we were approaching Sandy Hook, the bells rang out for "church," but it amounted to nothing more than the reading of prayers by the Episcopal minister, the whole service not exceeding half an hour. Our captain, it is to be presumed, does not feel any special burden of responsibility with respect to the spiritual necessities of those under his care. A service of song was held among the saloon passengers in the afternoon. An evening Gospel meeting was also arranged for in the steerage end of the ship, but the preliminary singing excited some hostile demonstrations from the Irish Roman Catholics among them, and the officers of the ship requested that the service should not be further proceeded with. Gospel songs were occasionally sung during the week with evident acceptance both fore and aft, by Mr. Parker, assisted by some friends, and one can only hope that seeds of truth were lodged in hearts where they will take root and fructify.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

New York, Monday, August 3.—The Servia, with her valuable human freight, moved into the dock this morning, the last two days of the voyage being of the most enjoyable kind. The thing that struck me chiefly as a stranger, in moving about the city to-day, was the universal demonstration of respect shown to the memory of the deceased General Grant. As far as my observation has extended, on both sides of the East River which divides New York and Brooklyn, almost every building, public or private, is draped in the sombre symbols of mourning, while portraits of the late President-General are displayed in innumerable windows.

Notwithstanding a perfect deluge of rain that has flooded the city throughout the day, Mr. Noble and myself have called on and received a hearty welcome from various friends interested in the Temperance reformation. Among them were Mr. Aaron Powell, Editorial Secretary of the National Temperance Publication Union, a most discreet and well-informed gentleman, at the head of an organisation that seems to be doing priceless service in educating the public mind on the different phases of this burning question; Mr. J. B. Gibbs, a genuine specimen of the enthusiastic go-a-head Yankee, who, in addition to his more public efforts as President of the Manhattan Temperance Association, is successfully emulating on this side the sea, the People's Café Movement in London; and Mr. J. F. Shorey, who now superintends the Jerry McAuley Mission in Water-street. These brethren, who doubtless represent many more, are following with deep and watchful interest the movements on behalf of social reform in the old country, a fact that ought to encourage and stimulate English workers in their up-hill struggle with the demons of impurity and intemperance. Crossing the Fulton Ferry to see the far-famed Brooklyn Suspension Bridge, which is truly one of the wonders of the world, we discovered the temporary quarters of the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. which is soon to open a new and palatial building as the centre of its operations. The sight of fine portraits of Lord Shaftesbury and Mr. George Williams made us feel quite at home, and we were rejoiced to find these champions of Christian work held in such high esteem by our American cousins. To-morrow I proceed to Northfield, while my excellent brother in travel, Mr. Noble, goes to Worcester as the guest of the veteran J. B. Gough.

REVIVAL AT GRAHAMSTOWN.

IT has been put in my mind to drop you a line, giving you a sort of barometrical reading of the state of the religious atmosphere in and around Grahamstown.

While commerce has been depressed, and a general gloom has pervaded this part of the colony, owing to the long-continued drought, God's Spirit has been striving with the people, drawing many to seek help, and comfort, and salvation in Christ. A gracious spirit of revival seems to hover over our churches, and we hear of good being done on every hand. In the Wesleyan chapels in Grahamstown, souls are being saved. A band of young men have opened a mission-room in a low part of the town, where numbers are drawn to listen to the plain recital of the story of the Cross, and sinners are brought to Christ. Open-air services are also conducted with good results. At Easter a number of these young men, with their minister, the Rev. N. Abrahams, held a series of services at a country chapel at Manley's Flat, ten miles from Grahamstown, with grand success; nearly all in the neighbourhood found salvation. Last Sunday, eight young men received public baptism, at the Baptist Church in the city.

One means which has helped our churches not a little to a better state of spirituality has been the operations of the Salvation Army. They are gradually pushing forward. They have held Port Elizabeth a good while. About six months ago an advance guard under Captain Pascoe occupied Grahamstown. There they have done much good. Many of the careless, the dissolute, and the non-church-going class, have been attracted and brought to Christ; and our churches have, by their efforts, been stirred up to greater diligence and usefulness. Two officers of the Army, a few days ago, paid a short visit to the village of Bathurst, twenty-six miles from Grahamstown. During their stay many were brought under conviction, and twenty professed to find Christ.

We may not altogether fall in with their mode of procedure, yet we wish them God-speed, for "no man can do these things except God be with him." JOHN QUAIL.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—No large reform was ever accomplished without definite work. The Anti-Sunday-Travelling Union has made a start in organising a movement to suppress Sunday travelling, and if the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would join this union, they would be able, without any inroad upon their time or strength, to do very much towards stemming the tide of this great evil. Each member undertakes to abstain from travelling on Sunday, except under most urgent necessity. A little pamphlet and leaflet are issued by the Union; and those who, after joining themselves, will give one of these to friends who travel (many, possibly, through not giving the matter a thought), will be bringing nearer the day when tram, railway, omnibus, and cab men, shall cease to be robbed of Sunday rest. Notes and Comments.

MR. G. MÜLLER has just issued his "Brief Narrative of Facts," relative to his Orphan Houses, for the current year. It may be had at the Depôt, 34, Park-street, Bristol, or from J. Nisbet & Co., Berners-street, W. Price 6d.

In our last issue we quoted a few remarkable testimonies as to the facilities for preaching the Gospel in China. It is equally so in Japan. Mr. Thomson, agent there for the National Bible Society of Scotland, said at a recent meeting at the Bible Society's House, that the opportunities for circulating the Book of God among the Japanese are unprecedented. The people are able and willing to buy the Scriptures, but the difficulty is that of obtaining copies. Everywhere preaching can be carried on without molestation, and there is no longer need to ask for police authority when religious meetings are held. Within the past six years the number of converts has increased fivefold. Surely faithful men are called to note these wondrous events. Paul spake of a great and effectual door being opened, and many adversaries. In Japan it is the absence of difficulties which fills with astonishment. How God is answering prayer!

The annual address before the Victoria Institute is now published. It is by Dr. Leslie Porter, a distinguished Egyptologist, whose researches for thirty years go to confirm all that the Old Testament says of Egypt. It was distinguished at the time of Abraham; its earliest records point to the belief in Him who at the beginning "created all things;" its aboriginal state was not in savagery, as Evolutionism would demand, but in arts and civilisation; that a slave, like Joseph, should become viceroy was characteristic of its history; and that Moses should carry from it learning and the knowledge of writing is in accordance with all its early annals.

There seems to be good ground for the objection which Nonconformists urge, that in certain London Hospitals, supported by all parties, none but the Church of England sisters can act as nurses. But the mode in which such a paper as The Spectator defends distinctive creed teaching is still worse. All experience goes to show that if there be the earnestness which The Spectator demands in the efforts of a High Church Anglican Sisterhood, it is earnestness for the peculiarities of their creed, and not for the fundamental truths of Christianity.

A denominational paper quotes the letter of a pastor to his church choir, warning its members against irreverent laughing and talking during Divine service. It would be well if churches would solemnly ask before the Lord whether the singing of such choirs is worth the sacrifice that is made for it.

Time and good sense go to cure abuses. Speaking of choirs, it is pleasant to note a reaction which is in progress in the Established Church against the indecorous pace at which hymn music has lately been performed. No lower an authority than Mr. Barnby has said that there is a fast singing of sacred words which is a mockery. Than this the old drawling was nearer right. The new fashion which came in ruined music, and made the air of the sanctuary redolent of profanity.

M. Theo. Monod writes us that his friend, M. Jacob Keller, who is now in London, is seeking to bring before the Christian public the Protestant Boarding School founded in Paris by his father, over fifty years ago. M. Monod says that his father was one of the chief supporters of the school, that his brothers were all pupils, and that he himself spent the nine years of his college course under the care of M. Keller, senior. Mr. Jacob Keller may be addressed during the next few days at Harley House, Bow, E., or at 4, Rue de Chevreuse, Paris.

Miss E. Jane Whately drops a word to those who may be enjoying the beauties of the Bernese Oberland, on behalf of the one hospital in the whole of that mountain district. It is admirably managed by two good Christian Deaconesses who care for both body and soul; but it is far too small for the needs of the district, and many must be refused who sorely need help. £20, in addition to what can be done on the spot, would enable them to make the necessary enlargement. Address Mr. Simpkins, St. Beatus, Interlaken.

In addition to his many and onerous duties as a philanthropist and politician, Earl Shaftesbury finds time to interest himself in the Funeral and Mourning Reform Association. He would have been present at a Conference recently held in London, but for a prior engagement, and a letter from him fully expressed his sympathy with its objects. He wrote as follows:—

> "The lesson has yet to be learned that excess in mourning apparel, in flowers, in entertainments, and in funeral furniture is no real indication of affection or respect. The tyranny of public opinion still drives persons to spend on funerals sums out of all proportion to their circumstances. The custom still prevails of keeping the body too long, and this even in densely-populated districts. Bodies are still placed in imperishable coffins, to be preserved in half decomposed state, a practice dishonouring to the dead, and injurious to the living. The Society has, therefore, still much to do."

A funeral has often ruined a family, because expense was incurred which was beyond their means. Funerals, according to the old system of undertaking and charging, were "black jobs," in more senses than one.

How true it is that Bunyan wrote for all time. The following passage from "The Pilgrim's Progress" might have been written only yesterday, instead of at a time more than two centuries ago, and shortly after the Restoration, when, to the casual observer, there seemed to be grave reason to fear the spread of Romanism in England:—

> "Now I saw in my dream that at the end of the valley lay blood, bones, ashes, and mangled bodies of men, even of pilgrims, that had gone this way formerly, and while I was musing what should be the reason, I espied, a little way before me, a cave where two giants, Pope and Pagan, dwelt in old time, by whose power and tyranny the men, whose bones, blood, ashes, &c., lay there, were cruelly put to death. But by this place Christian went without much danger, whereat I somewhat wondered; but I have learnt since that Pagan has been dead many a day, and as for the other, though he be yet alive, he is, by reason of age, and also of the many shrewd brushes that he met with in his younger days, grown so crazy and stiff in his joints, that he can now do little more than sit in his cave's mouth, grinning at the pilgrims as they go by, and biting his nails because he cannot come at them."

The mass of correspondence we receive makes it impossible for us to do more than acknowledge it; but we heartily thank the writers for much valuable information and suggestions.

The letter of the Rev. Llewellyn Davies to The Times has been largely quoted by other writers, and his happy phrase, "this new apocalypse of evil," has been specially referred to, as though it summed up in one all the objurgations which have been denounced against the recent revelations. But an apocalypse (that is an unveiling) of evil is not itself an evil. He who discovers a danger or a wrong is generally considered a benefactor. "The Apocalypse, the Revelation, of Jesus Christ," with which Holy Scriptures closes, is an apocalypse of evil as will as of good. Does the Rev. J. Llewellyn Davies, or do his admiring echoes find fault with it on that account?

The following sentence occurs in a daily journal from the pen of one who makes on claim to being religious: "The old fear of hell-fire, as the reward of sinners, is dying, dying, dying, and no other positive 'sanction' is replacing it. The age is becoming more and more self-indulgent." Who are responsible for such a condition of things? Surely, in measure, the so-called teachers of religion, who have been toning down, and explaining away the sterner side of the truth of the Bible, until the impression has taken hold on the minds of the people that there is no retribution for sin in the next world, and that the punishment of sinners, as described in the Word of God, is not a reality. The old Garden of Eden lie, "Ye shall not surely die," has been repeated over and over again, until the "death-penalty" of sin is altogether denied, and so self-indulgence of every form, sensuous and sensual, has become the order of the day. Who will arise to preach fearlessly the righteousness of God, and the doom that inevitably awaits the unrighteous?

From the same article we quote again. "Lately the English have awoke to the fact that the world in general is a very pleasant and amusing place, that their own country is one of the loveliest in the world, that their climate is not a bad one, that stopping at home is dull, and that we had better eat, drink, and spend Sunday in Epping Forest, for to-morrow we die." Awfully true words! "The whole world lieth in the wicked one," says the Word of God. A very pleasant and amusing place, says the secular Press. How perfectly "the wicked one" has succeeded in deluding the minds of men.

In 2 Tim. iii. 2—5, the Holy Spirit has given a description of the characters of the men of the "last days," from which we quote the following (R.V.): "Men shall be lovers of self . . . . lovers of money . . . . no lovers of good . . . . lovers of pleasure, rather than lovers of God." There is no discrepancy between this statement and the one already quoted from the secular Press. And yet we are asked to throw over the Bible as an unsound and untrue Book! Not until we find its statements falsified by the existing facts of the day will we consent to do so. Those whose characters are found so literally portrayed in so old a book may well wish the extinction of the book that with equal accuracy and literalness foretells their impending doom, and the outpouring on them of the wrath of a holy God.

Many Christians flatter themselves that by degrees the churches are gaining, and that every year the strength of the churches is increased. The following sentence from one outside the churches is more probably the truth; "The majority is growing up outside the influence of the Churches ;" and again : "The majority of Englishmen do not go to church or chapel on Sundays, and as the belief in theology decays this must become more and more the case." We fear all this is only too true. Tens of thousands in our great centres of industry and commerce drift past our churches, and never darken the doors. Youths of both sexes say good-bye to the Sunday-schools at the age of fifteen or sixteen, and all further hold is lost over them by the Church. What will attract men to the churches ? Nothing but the plain and vigorous preaching of the old truths in the old-fashioned Bible way. The preaching of the Gospel must include the laying bare of heart sin ; there must be no more explaining away of the consequences of sin, and of the wrath of God against it. The Cross of Christ must be uplifted as the manifestation of God's righteous indignation against sin, as well as of his unspeakable love to the sinner. Preachers who are bold enough to tear the mask of hypocrisy off nominal Christians and nominal sceptics, and then point their wearers to a living personal Saviour, will never mourn over empty pews. The tides of sin and self-indulgence are running strong and deep. The tides of earnestness and thoroughness in word and life must run equally deep amongst the people of God. "Cry aloud ; spare not !" must be the motto of all who are courageous for God and the right.

There is a picture which is well worth a journey to Birmingham to see : "Johanne de Santhova, a Lutheran martyr of the 16th century, being led out to be buried alive." Every face is a study, and the picture evidently creates a great impression, if one may judge from the exclamations I overheard as I sat a few minutes taking in the details. As I was leaving I put my hand on the shoulder of a respectable mechanic, who had been gazing long and earnestly at the painting, and said, "Well, what's your opinion of that ?" His reply is worth pondering, "It ought to be engraved, sir, so as to find its way into every Protestant home in England, as a standing protest against Romanism."

Just now when many of our readers are travelling by rail, for various purposes, we would urge them to think of the many hard-working employés by whom a kind word or book would be much appreciated. The Railway Mission, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., publishes a paper, The Railway Signal, which is much liked by the men, and which, we think, many who have means would be glad to distribute.

Not only in these columns, but in several other magazines and newspapers, Mrs. Reaney has nobly and powerfully advocated the cause of the tramcar drivers and conductors. Sixteen and seventeen hours a day are an inhuman demand from any employer of any employé. We earnestly hope that although there may be difficulties to overcome these will be fairly and manfully grappled with. We are very sure they are not insuperable. The proposed reduction to fourteen hours a day, and every other Sunday off if desired, appears to us an inadequate measure of amelioration.

Since the remuneration for Christian work seldom amounts to more than a hand-to-mouth living, ought not all missionary and evangelistic societies to have a fund for the support of their agents when partially or entirely disabled in their service ?

We greatly regret to state that from having been put into a damp bed, Mr. Rosenzweig, one of the ablest and most useful agents of the Evangelisation Society, has suffered for six months from paralysis of the spinal cord. Dr. Kidd fears he will never be able to resume work as a regular evangelistic. Will our readers pray that he may be restored. Meanwhile it is proposed that he should enter upon some business, for which help is needed, and this is certainly a case in which it should be heartily given.

The failure of the Munster Bank has not been without disastrous effect upon some agencies for promoting God's work in Ireland. Captain J. Kearney White, the well-known and indefatigable Secretary of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, unhappily finds himself compelled to issue a circular letter, of which he sends us a copy. He says :—

> "I am obliged to inform you that in consequence of the failure of the Munster Bank all our resources are brought to a standstill for the present. We are in hopes, however, to send the usual quarterly payment very soon for our Scripture reader, as we hope to get the usual indulgence required at this time of year through friends from another Bank, and, in the meantime, pray kindly help the Society all you can, and, if possible, send in any collections or subscriptions you may have obtained. May we ask your prayers in this our time of need and unexpected distress ?"

We trust that this excellent Society will not be allowed to come to a standstill by this disaster. Captain White's own property is, we regret to learn, involved in the same embarrassment, but he has, nevertheless, obtained means on his own security to carry on the work for a time. In such distressing circumstances we can but urge on the stewards of the Lord's wealth to come at once to the help of this noble and invaluable Society.

Parliament must be purged. At the coming election every voter should ask, not whether the candidates are Liberal or Conservative, but are they men of good character.

Some years ago, being in an American city on the eve of a Presidential election, we asked our host what was the difference between Republican and Democrat. He replied, "The one is in, and the other out." It is much the same at home, but it must be the settled resolve of every right-minded Englishman not to be misrepresented by men of impure mind and immoral life, but to be represented by men who fear God and love righteousness, and who understand that the first duty of a Government is to rule well at home.

We must rightly divide the word of truth if we would be good stewards of the manifold grace of God. We must, therefore, not despise the context, and we must be accurate in stating not what the text taken separately may seem to mean, but what it evidently and necessarily means taken together with its context.

Just now, all discussion, or even mention of certain sins, is forbidden, and the veto is justified by Eph. v. 3, 12 : "Let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints." "For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." The Apostle is exhorting the saints as to their own behaviour. Comparing Eph. v. 3 with 1 Cor. v. 1, it is evident that the command, "Let it not be once named among you" is a strong way of forbidding it. Dr. Whedon, a judicious and able commentator, thus paraphrases and expounds : "Let these vices be so far from you that the very allusion to them shall cease. It is not so much the verbal naming that is forbidden as the behaviour and thoughts that induce their naming. The effort should be to render such vices unthought of—strange and surprising, as becometh a holy community." Bengel's note is, "Not once named, i.e., as done (comp. 1 Cor. v. 1), not named unnecessarily (comp. Eph. v. 4, 12)." In this very passage the Apostle does name them emphatically. He does not blame the Corinthians that it was "reported commonly," but that they were puffed up, and had not mourned concerning it.

Eph. v. 12 gives the reason, not for being silent, but for reproving, these sins. It is a shame to speak of them, because "to pronounce the words that express their deeds sullies the purity of the mind. And this fully decides that the entire paragraph hints at almost unmentionable sins." The previous verse says : "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove [convict, R.V.] them," on which Bengel says, "It is not enough to abstain. Reprove by words and deeds worthy of the light." Meyer says the meaning is by words. Whedon thus comments on the word reprove, rendered convict by R.V. :—

> "A very significant term. First, it indicates a refutation, as in an argument ; second, a detection, as of some complication or concealment ; and, third, an exposure, resulting from both the refutation and the detection. Let your life, conduct, and intellectual powers be all effective in refuting the sophisms with which license justifies or ennobles itself, as well as in detecting and exposing the turpitude of the license itself.

We hope this is a sufficient reply to the argument for silence. If not, let us ask this question. If sin of such a character is found in a family, a school, or a church, is it not named, but allowed to proceed ? At any cost it must be put away. How much more when it threatens the very existence of a nation !

Rev. W. Haslam has just issued a new book of a prophetical character. It is entitled "The Lord is Coming : a Plain Narrative of Prophetic Events in their Order." To some it will be a surprise to meet with Mr. Haslam as a prophetical writer ; but his preface tells us that for more than thirty-three years he has been a student of Prophetic and Dispensational truth. With considerable labour Mr. Haslam endeavours to indicate the probable consecutive order of the "things which are coming on the earth," upon the basis of a Futurist interpretation.

One night, not long ago, near Finsbury Park Station, a young servant girl asked us for direction to the street in which she lived. She had come by train, and a young man had volunteered to show her the way if she would follow him. He was leading her in an opposite direction, and the girl, suspecting that she was being misled, asked again. We found that she came from George Müller's Orphan House at Bristol. Doubtless in that house of prayer those who have left are remembered before God, and here was the answer to one of them. This shows, however, how needful it is that girls before they leave Home or Orphanage should be thoroughly informed and warned as to the dangers to which they will be exposed.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION. — The thirteenth annual report of this Mission can be had by applying to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury New Park, N., or Mr. W. Penrose, Superintendent, Vinegar Ground, City-road, E.C.

MR. VARLEY'S VISIT TO AMERICA.

I HAVE just returned to London, per Cunard ss. Etruria, after, it is said, the quickest passage on record across the Atlantic. We closed the sixth day of our voyage from New York at noon on August 7, the log showing 2489 knots, or 2929 miles. This (allowing for the difference of time, say forty minutes in the twenty-four hours) gives an actual average of more than 500 miles per day.

On my arrival in New York I found a wide and effectual door opened in the goodly tabernacle in 23rd-street and 6th Avenue, where our esteemed brother, Mr. Simpson, labours. He started for England before we reached New York, to take part in the Faith Healing Conference. I had no personal knowledge of him, but soon found a large and devoted band of men and women, fully prepared to give themselves heartily to the preaching of Christ. This, indeed, is the main issue of his work. Crowds assembled daily both at the Bible-teachings and the evening Gospel meetings; and, despite the hot weather, the numbers and the interest increased. I felt deeply grateful to God that so many came to tell how they had been called to the Lord ten years since, when I was permitted to preach Christ in that city. Verily, as some brethren expressed it, "the day of the Lord alone will show how widespread and blessed that work was." To find so many established in the faith of Christ, separated unto our Lord, oh! what joy is there equal to this? unless it be the deeper revelation of the personal Christ to our own hearts.

I rejoice to bear testimony that again the lifting up of Christ has resulted in many being quickened into "newness of life." Many to whom the living and coming One was as "a root out of a dry ground," now see his glory, and are resting in the sufficiency of his atonement and advocacy, and his ability as the merciful and faithful High Priest to save them to the uttermost (for evermore) who come unto God by Him.

I am not sure that I am competent to speak upon the subject of faith-healing, and yet my presence for some weeks, preaching Christ, in one of the chief centres of this work, seems to require that I should give some testimony. It appears to me clear that, in the past, sufficient prominence has not been given to the fact that our Lord, both in his ministry on earth and in the testimony of his Word, has revealed Himself as the Saviour of the body—not only of the body, the Church, but of the body of the believer as his own purchased possession (1 Cor. iii., vi). It is also clear that, on the human side, the exercise of faith in Him on the lines of a ready and loyal obedience are important factors in regard to his direct intervention and aid. That, in the nature of the case, our blessed Lord must be deeply interested in the welfare of his people seems perfectly clear, and, further, that real, definite, and most beneficent results may be seen in many cases, where the definite exercise of faith, prayer, confession, and anointing, is made in His name.

Some of the strongest opponents of faith-healing admit all this; and yet, when you come to ask them whether in their own experience, or in the experience of the church or churches with which they have been connected, they have either shared in or seen these beneficent results, they are compelled to say, No. To say the least, there is much inconsistency in this position. Possibly some who are giving such unqualified opposition to faith-healing, or, perhaps, more accurately, to the extreme statements advanced in its behalf, might hear the voice of Him who, in reply to John's statement, "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him because he followeth not us," said, "Forbid him not, for there is no man who shall do a miracle in my name that shall lightly speak evil of Me." There is a zeal for truth which ofttimes arises from contracted views and absence of knowledge. Probably the truth in regard to faith-healing is somewhere near the mean between opposing minds.

I frankly confess that I cannot endorse the whole of the teaching contained in Mr. Simpson's little book, "The Gospel of Healing." To lay down clear and sharply defined lines which, if I understand Mr. Simpson rightly, involve the tremendous issues that disease, sickness, and weakness, are conconsequences either of ignorance or unbelief in regard to Christ's willingness or ability to heal the same, appears to me to be contrary to the experience of God's people, and also to his clearly revealed Word. We may admit freely that great deliverances may be wrought in the name of the Lord Jesus, and in our own experience prove the same, without fashioning a principle which would become a yoke of iron to many weak and suffering ones, and, as it appears to me, a practical shutting out of our Lord's tender and gracious ministry as the merciful and faithful High Priest, Himself compassed with infirmity, touched with the feeling of our infirmities, tempted (tried) in all points like as we are, yet without sin.

If anything in human experience be certain, this is: that many suffering saints have inherited conditions of disease for which they are in no wise to blame or responsible, and that they are waiting with expectant joy his coming, when not only the whole creation shall be delivered from its groaning, but we also who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, and who groan within ourselves, await the adoption, the redemption of the body.

I believe there is considerable force in the exception taken by those who object to the application of certain passages used to sustain the faith-healing theory which evidently belong to the millennial age, and to the millennial conditions.

This leads me to remark that I never felt so deeply as I do to-day the vital importance of the teaching of Scripture concerning the premillennial advent of our Lord. In every city which I have visited I have given a series of Bible-readings on this momentous subject, and I am persuaded that our Lord has greatly used the testimony given.

Important and necessary as the work has been which has dragged into light of day the shameless workers of iniquity, it must not be forgotten that our Lord said of the character of the times which would immediately precede his second advent: As it was in the days of Lot and Noah so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man. Days of utmost iniquity, bringing in the fearful and overwhelming judgments of the Divine vengeance. Infidelity of a refined and highly civilised sort is everywhere abroad amongst intelligent men in the United States. The preaching is abjectly apologetic. The truth concerning sin and the sinner, the wrath of God and the coming judgment, is scarcely declared, besides intemperance, covetousness and licentiousness, beyond political, social, and moral corruption, infidelity and scepticism. The sacrifice of Christ as the only way whereby sin can be put away or its dreadful guilt expiated is scarcely made known.

One of the most miserable travesties of a Christian service, which it has ever been my lot to have presence in was that in Brooklyn, the last Lord's Day morning in May last. Henry Ward Beecher was the preacher, his subject, "The Theory of Evolution"; the audience a spectatorship, the singing artistic, the prayers cold, lifeless, and perfunctory; the reading without spiritual intelligence, unction, or fervour; the preaching, a reading, in which the testimony of Genesis was made light of, and described as inconsistent with the scientific doctrine of Evolution, which, though not actually demonstrated, might be regarded as truth, because of its widespread acceptance on the part of educated minds. The testimony of Genesis might be regarded, Mr. Beecher said, as "allegory or parable in the direction of truth."

I need hardly say that I found many true and faithful men in every place I visited, but my firm conviction is that we are well into the perilous character of the last days (2 Tim. iii. 1—6), and nowhere, in my judgment, is this more solemnly seen than in the great Western Republic of the United States.

Yours truly, Henry Varley.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. J. B. Gough has entered upon the forty-fifth year of his Temperance advocacy, and seems to have vigour to continue the work for years to come.

The Government inquiry into the [mis-]management of the Eastern Hospitals of the Metropolitan Asylums Board has been completed, and the charges as to the reckless expenditure on luxuries and intoxicants are confirmed.

In Troy (U.S.) some few years since there were 780 public-houses, but now there are only 125. The cause assigned for the decrease is successful Temperance mission work, which has secured 2000 converts to total abstinence.

The Jubilee of the Darlington Temperance Society was celebrated August 1 to 3 inclusive. The beginning was really in 1831, when a Moderation Society was founded, but the Society, on its present basis, dates from 1835.

The Jubilee of Temperance work at Southampton was celebrated recently with great success. There was a procession and "monster children's fête." There are forty-one juvenile societies, with 5,500 members, in connection with the local union.

At Glasgow recently, on the Sunday after "Fair Saturday," two or three hundred showmen and their families were entertained to tea by the Glasgow branch of the British Women's Temperance Association. Forty joined the "Travellers' Total Abstainers' Union."

The Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission on August 3 had a most successful demonstration in the spacious grounds of Mr. Richard Cadbury, kindly thrown open for the occasion. More than 30,000 persons were present, and several hundred pledges were taken.

The Central Women's Temperance Union, Chicago, has issued a letter to the doctors asking them to subscribe to ten propositions therein stated. The first is:—"Alcohol is a poison," and the tenth:—"That it is the duty of physicians to prescribe alcohol as they prescribe strychnine." The tone of the intervening eight may be inferred.

Mr. Sims, of the National Temperance League, recently addressed the boys on board the Arethusa and Exmouth training-ships. On the Arethusa there were 198 total abstainers, but at the close of Mr. Sims' address fifty-nine others joined, thus including the whole number on board. On the Exmouth over 100 joined, making 400 teetotalers out of the 500 boys on board.

The Western Branch of the Metropolitan and City Police Temperance Union recently held a meeting in Exeter Hall. Mr. S. Morley, M.P., presided, and over 200 men were present. Many accompanied by their wives and children. Earnest addresses on Temperance were given, one of the speakers, Mr. T. S. Johnson, being a liberated slave, who obtained his freedom when General Grant took Richmond.

In connection with the Wesleyan Conference, Temperance meetings were held at Newcastle-on-Tyne. There was the customary Connexional meeting and in addition an imposing Band of Hope demonstration at which Mr. Stephens, J.P., presided, supported by several noted ministers. At the usual Central Hall meeting, Mr. Stephens took the chair, and Rev. C. Garrett delivered an address which was received with great applause. In the Connexion during the year, there has been an increase of 151 Bands of Hope and 13,135 members, but the report on adult Temperance societies is regarded as very discouraging.

A HOLIDAY SUGGESTION.—A friend writes, we have just returned from the Continent, where I went for my health. We met Christians at every place. We were at Hamburg and Engleberg, and every morning we had nice Bible-readings in the woods, our little congregation mustering seven souls. I believe if Christians would only try the plan of assembling together in little companies in the mountain health resorts where they spend their summer holidays to read the Word of God, they would be greatly blessed.

HIGHBURY GOSPEL MISSION.—The Lord has greatly blessed this work of late, and we have been cheered in bringing in the sheaves from the great harvest-field of this promenade from Highbury to "The Angel." Our hearts often ache on Sunday evenings to see the thousands of young people who will not attend church or chapel; but eternity alone will reveal the results of the past nine months, since we opened our shop as a Mission Hall. We shall welcome any Christian worker who will come and help, especially as many of our workers are away. Communications to be addressed to Mr. Higlett, 94, Buckingham-road, Kingsland, N.

ENGLAND'S DANGER.

WE feel all our correspondents say of the exceeding painfulness of this subject, but the events of every day remind us of the frightful perils which beset the young, because "evil men and seducers wax worse and worse," and we are more and more deeply convinced that young ladies of the upper classes and young girls of the poorer, must, for their own sakes and for the sakes of others, be informed of the condition of things around them. From sheer thoughtlessness or ignorance, mistresses place their servants, and parents their children, in the most dangerous positions. We simply dare not journey onward to the judgment seat of Christ without doing all we can to enlighten this ignorance and press upon Christians their responsibility.

We are deeply convinced that silence on these subjects is not in accordance with the teaching or the spirit of Scripture, and is of modern date, while concurrently with it there is a decline in morals and in detestation of this particular sin.

The tone of Shakspere is much higher in regard to this vice than that manifested by many Peers of the realm, many members of the House of Commons, and many people in all classes of society; and the private life of many men in high position, as well as wealthy men of business, sets an example to other classes which is a real danger to the country.

The other day a girl came to a Christian lady and said, "You have a kind face: I believe you would be willing to help me out of my dreadful life." Every Christian lady ought to have in her face the look of sympathy and kindness which comes of the knowledge of the sin and sorrow around her, and ought to have such information as would enable her to answer such an appeal with help. In this case the lady took the young girl to her home, showed her the kindness of God, and won her soul for Christ.

We are the salt of the earth. In applying salt to meat, no part is left unsalted, or it would putrefy. If we leave one part of the sinful world unsalted, it will be with a like result. The Bible is itself an education as to sins of the flesh. No kind of sin is so frequently dealt with, or so often used as an illustration of unfaithfulness to God. Our Lord Jesus offended the religious people of his day because He received sinners and ate with them. Surely those women who were fellow-labourers with the Apostle Paul were not ignorant of the social impurities around them, nor did they shrink from dealing with them.

We doubt if ever in the world's history there was such crime against the young and weak and helpless as exists in England to-day. There are men and women whose life-work it is to entrap, ensnare, kidnap, and destroy. Canon Wilberforce in his illness has been so moved by the atrocities which have come to light that he says when he recovers he shall throw himself into this battle.

An old lady of eighty, a returned missionary from India, tells us that after the Mutiny the women used to say to her, "Oh, it was dreadful; and we do pity the English ladies. But you know how your men have treated our women." Those awful scenes were the terrible retribution, and we fear that the English women of this generation, by their reception in society of men of evil life, and by their cruel neglect of the young of their own sex who are in peril, and their still more cruel behaviour to those who have fallen, are treasuring up to themselves wrath against a day of wrath, which may be more terrible than even the horrors of Lucknow and Cawnpore. Let them ponder Zech. xiv. 1, 2, and consider that the like causes may produce the same results in London as in Jerusalem. For He is one Lord, and his name one—the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. We are within measurable distance of a state of things in which the ears of tender and delicate women will tingle and burn with words hissed or shouted into them which decent people cannot utter, but which are only descriptive of the lives of men with whom they have been in familiar association —their own husbands and brothers and sons.

"Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the hurt of the daughter of my people!"

"If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not: doth not He that pondereth the heart consider? and He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know? and shall not He render to every man according to his works?"

THE MASS MEETING IN HYDE PARK.

THE ablest paper against the public agitation for the Protection of Young Girls has appeared in The Spectator, and it is desirable that the objections urged should be considered before the Hyde-park meeting. It is said that the line taken in the public exposure of the immorality is a calamity; that it sows poisonous seeds of evil; that the publication of "horrible facts" corrupts public thought; and that such facts should never have been brought before the public at all, but should have been submitted to men who could really intervene with effect in penal legislation. We contend, on the contrary, that however odious the exposure is, and whatever may be the effect on impure imaginations, the growth and appalling nature of the evil, the wide-spreading ruin and murder it was bringing on the poor, made the exposure a philanthropic and awful necessity.

The Spectator admits the demand for repressive penal legislation. The only alternative it has to offer, with a view to quickening legislation, is (instead of public exposure) to submit the matter to select and competent men. All the facts of the case, and of past history, go to show that this is in reality no alternative at all. Suppose our legislators had been secretly summoned to hear the "horrible facts." Would they have intervened? It has, we are informed, been most significantly stated by more than one member of Parliament, that if the votes on the Criminal Law Amendment Bill could have been taken by secret ballot the probable result would have been very different. To what have the majorities on the Bill been owing? To the pressure of outraged public opinion, and the wholesome fear of a coming meeting with constituencies. The truth is, the so-called competent men before whom such facts could have been submitted, are invariably less courageous to meet such an iniquity than the people themselves. The intimacies that have been formed, conventional sentiment, lukewarmness or ignorance as to the condition of the poor, professional connections and other motives, give birth to "prudential" considerations that impede or stifle adequate action.

The history of the Reform of Parliament, the abolition of Colonial Slavery, and the Repeal of the Corn Laws, prove that the only sufficient impetus to force on legislation is that of general public opinion. So far back as the days of Pitt the monstrous inequalities of the old Parliamentary system were admitted, but nothing was done. If we go to the United States, it must be held that long ago the evils of slavery were known and deplored. It was not, however, till "Uncle Tom's Cabin" had informed the million that the people arose, and gave invincible force to the appeals of abolitionists. In all questions that have touched the selfishness of men it has not been the opinion of doctrinaires, but that of the people, that has awakened a nation's conscience, and originated reforms and legislative remedies. In America, timid men said again and again that the laying bare of all the evils of slavery would exasperate the South, and do fifty times as much mischief as good. But in this case it was publicity per se, with all its exposure of lecherous and other abominations, that wrought the sweeping cure.

In the matter now in hand the unveiling is a heavy cross, but no alternative is before good men. Multitudes have yet to be told what the law is, and excited to carry out its provisions. A network of procuration has been spread over our country, and has entangled in its meshes the incautious maidenhood of villages and towns. The calls for new victims have been ravenous and unsated. The degradation and death, that soon came, have created loathsome and inappeasable demands. The devilry has been covered by lying pretensions. The rich have had their agents, have commanded silence, and held out alluring temptations. Instead of the old English chivalry that should protect the weak, mere children have been assailed by bewildering seductions. Girlhood has been powerless, virginal beauty fouled, and the family ties of the poor outraged. This has long gone on with its unutterable cruelties and desolations; and, however imperative legislation may be, it will be inadequate unless sustained by the public voice, and by the united and indignant resolves of the people of England.

It remains to be said, however, that the forthcoming demonstration will be in sorrow rather than anger. It will be a grave and serious appeal to the people of England on a sensual iniquity of such portentous growth, and menacing national degradation, as forbids anything less than public and appealing protest.

EDUCATION NEEDED.

SIR,—May I be permitted to suggest what appears to me would cut at the root of the evil to which your journal is just now calling attention. It is this, that young persons of both sexes should be systematically taught all that is necessary appertaining to these matters, by thoroughly qualified and responsible persons, specially appointed for the purpose, and that this should be as much acknowledged as a necessary branch of education as any other subject.

Government is careful to see that each child is taught to read and write and this is considered essential to its getting on in this life; but, recognising how fearfully and wonderfully God has made us, and knowing that all that comes from his hands is good and pure, and meant for our highest welfare both here and hereafter, as well as for his glory, surely it is much more important that we should rightly understand those bodies upon which He has bestowed so much care—should know how best to preserve them in health, and to avoid all which would be in any way injurious to what He designed as a temple for Himself.

Seeing there are dangers into which one may fall, through ignorance, surely it cannot but be God's will that this ignorance should be dispelled, and if there be those who possess the knowledge, and also the influence, and yet do not use it, may they not, very probably, bring upon themselves the judgment of Ezekiel iii. 18.

It is because I realise my own responsibility in the matter that I pen these lines, for I feel how very ignorant I am of much which it would have done me, I believe, no harm, but very much good, to have known, and would have enabled me now, by God's blessing, to have been much more useful in his vineyard.

Will any one object to such a subject being universally taught, and universally understood? I confess that I cannot see why. It does appear to me that both reason and nature point to it as an essential one, and the very fact of its being so taught would do away with any plea of ignorance, and also with much which I consider to be very, very false. It is God who has made us as we are, and surely it is a reflection upon our Creator, to think that there can be any shame, or anything to cause a blush, in connection with aught which He has planned.

"To the pure all things are pure," and that the day may not be far distant when all in connection with this subject may be as He would have it, and as He intended, is the earnest desire and prayer of, yours truly, A Woman.

OPINIONS OF OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

A CALL FOR PRAYER.

"Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly."—Joel ii. 15.

Dear Sir,—The hearts of God's people, through the length and breadth of the land, have been wrung by the revelations made in these last days of the wrongs of outraged childhood and womanhood. Yet painful though the awakening has been to the existence of such a system of iniquity in a country which has become, through the blessing of God, a glory among nations, thanks, oh thanks, be to God that the plague-spot has been laid bare. Now is the time for the Lord's witnesses to arise and be valiant to fight the Lord's battles.

It seems to me that God is crying from heaven to his people in the land that he has favoured so highly, notwithstanding her many and grievous sins: "Sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders: . . . let the ministers of the Lord weep between the porch and the altar" (Joel ii. 15-17).

Yes! first of all, we must humble ourselves unitedly, before the Lord, on behalf of the nation, that such a thing should be in our midst, and, turning to Him, with "weeping, and fasting, and mourning," get from Himself the wisdom and the strength that are necessary for dealing with this great evil.

In his name I appeal to my fellow-weepers and fellow-workers to set apart an early day on which to come together before the Lord, that He may teach us what his will in this matter is. Let us remember that the eyes of all nations are upon us, and if there is no recognition of the necessity of the all-wise and all-merciful guidance of the Lord God Almighty by the Government of the land, in such a time of national calamity, surely those inhabitants of the land who are his true followers should publicly and collectively testify to their sense of the gravity of the situation, and their belief in the power of the God of all the families of the earth, both to avenge the oppressed, and, for the sake of the thousands who shall thus humble themselves, to "return and have mercy" upon the land that has so sorely provoked Him to anger.

Oh, let us not suffer this month to close without a "day of humiliation" being observed.

As a heathen city, like Nineveh, repented and humbled itself at the voice of one man, and was forgiven, who knows whether London may not do the same? And as God offered to spare Sodom at the intercession of one man, if ten righteous persons could be found in it, who knows whether He may not be gracious to our land at the intercession of thousands of his own people, if they agree unitedly to cry unto Him?—Believe me, dear sir, yours in Christian regard,

Dear Friend,—I rejoice in your noble testimony against the terrible corruptions existing in our so-called "Christian" land. I have not seen the articles in The Pall Mall Gazette, but from your remarks I think my own experience will fully verify the statements.

We have had before us case after case of unsuspecting young girls decoyed, entrapped, drugged mostly through strong drink), and ruined. One such, on discovering her condition, five times attempted suicide, but at last found peace at the feet of Jesus.

Another, decoyed by one who appeared to be a lady, and professed religious interest, and who offered her a cup of tea, had only just time to escape into the street, and fell, crying out, "Take me to Mrs. ——'s."

And these wretches know they are nearly safe from prosecution, as a virtuous girl cannot bear to appear in such a case.

Thus justice, which ought to reach the guilty man, reaches him not. In the language of the poet Bloomfield, he says, as he puffs his pipe and strokes his beard:—

"Above the reach of justice I shall soar,
Her friends may weep, not punish; they're too poor:
That very thought the rapture will enhance—
Poor, young, and friendless, what a glorious chance!

"A few spare guineas may the conquest make;
I love the treachery, for treachery's sake.
And when her wounded honour jealous grows,
I'll cut away ten thousand oaths and vows;
And tell my comrades, with a manly stride,
How I a girl out-witted and outlied."

I ask not vengeance, for God says: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay." But (whether it is a Christian feeling or not I hardly know) I would consign these murderers of body and soul to severe corporal punishment, be they found among our legislators or our so-called nobility.

Knowing what I know, and having seen what I have seen among the hundreds of poor victims to whom it has been my privilege to speak of a Saviour's pardoning love, I hardly dare to trust myself to write, for my indignation is beyond control: but I do feel it a duty at the present moment to encourage those who, like yourself, are boldly pleading the cause of the cruelly downtrodden and oppressed—the cause of injured innocence—for it is the cause of God.

Yours very truly, Jonathan Grubb.
Sudbury, Suffolk.

"A SHAME TO SPEAK."

Dear Sir,—Your well-known desire to leave free scope for the expression of opinion induces me to venture a few words on the letter you published in a recent issue, on the burning question which occupies all minds.

I yield to none in my desire to do all possible to shield the young from the awful perils abroad, as well as to help, if possible, efforts to have them abolished, but I believe the "mother" who wrote the remonstrance which was published was probably actuated by the desire to shield the young under her care, not from pain or annoyance, but from those very dangers that we dread.

I believe that by familiarising children and young girls with these frightful details, we shall perpetuate rather than hinder the evil. Why does the Apostle Paul lay such stress (in a far more plainspoken age than our own) on the importance of not speaking of such things? "Let them not be once named among you." "It is a shame even to speak of the things that are done of them in secret." Is it not because he well knew that in this peculiar form of moral evil, speaking of it had a tendency to create or increase it.*

We know that when a new idea of any kind is brought before children and young people, they will talk and think of it to an extent to which their elders, with pre-occupied minds and weight of cares, can little comprehend. A morbid curiosity will be stimulated, and the evil will thus be increased; and no warnings or prohibitions can guard against this. We know how the Confessional in Roman Catholic countries has acted in this way. Why can it not be possible to guard the young without thus destroying their purity, innocence, and simplicity? Let us teach them to love whatsoever things are pure, and to hate anything of the contrary kind; tell them to avoid all books that try to make evil good, and keep such out of their way; tell them never to listen to discourses they would not like to repeat to their mothers—they need no instruction to show what such are; and to cultivate modesty and propriety of manner.

If these precautions are followed, and accompanied with earnest prayer and careful training in the ways of holiness, we may confidently look for success. The Lord, who has said, "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee," will remember and hear the prayers of believing parents, and strengthen the hands of all who labour to keep the young in the ways of purity and holiness.—I remain, yours faithfully, E. J. Whately.

IMMORAL RAILWAY LITERATURE.

Sir,—I beg for the publicity of your pages in order to draw more attention to a great and a growing evil influence. As a railway season-ticket holder I have become painfully aware of the wide distribution, from railway bookstalls especially, of a new toad-stool literature; scrappy and sensuously illustrated weeklies of the lowest taste and tone. Those holding a public function are surely not irresponsible as to its exercise. This is a part of the great "question of the hour." When men in one way or another deliberately defile the temple of God, which in this dispensation is acknowledged to be the very bodies of men and women and children, will not Christians arise to protest against the desecration of the physical, mental, and moral temple of God? But He will suddenly come to his temple, and purify it finally. Only, it is yet to be seen whether his way will be prepared by organised Christian effort, or by a popular revolution against immoral monopolies.—I am, sir, yours very truly, J. Martyn Milne.
Springfield, Ravensbourne-road, Catford.

A LETTER BY REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

It is blessed to see the country so moved against vice and crime which is not human and certainly not beastly. But I think, as I have long thought, that the Church needs to preach "Increase and multiply, and replenish the earth"—that the holy, holy, holy God ever speaks of offspring as blessings—that marriage ennobles both bride and bridegroom—that the father is morally ennobled by the birth of his firstborn, and if he never felt it before he has now something beyond his young wife and himself to live for—and, however low his own moral standing may be, he would love his child to be kept from evil. To preach that parents should be reformed so as to teach their sons to be not cowards, shrinking from public opinion of a mean kind, but brave, and bravely to commence their wedded life in very humble style; and that daughters, instead of reading trash, and often trash not over pure, should be so taught as to be able to do anything and everything about a house, to dress accordingly, and to be brought up so as to be able to use their limbs and hands and faculties. So I commenced, and so most gladly would I commence again.

The parents are wrong, wrong, very wrong; e.g., how many young lawyers are passed annually for whom there is not, and cannot, be work—then allowed say £200 a year—walk the streets in idleness for a while, and are not too many of them to be found as poor wrecks now living in utter poverty? But you see we like to have our sons in what is supposed to be a respectable calling.

We parents are apt to make our young men cowards who are not naturally cowards. How much more honourable for a brave young fellow to speak out candidly to a girl and to her parents—"You see all that I am. There is only one thing I dare say for myself: I am not a sham. I can give my whole heart, and am prepared to start from the bottom of the ladder, and work up."

England's population is no more too great than Scotland's; it merely wants removing to Greater Britain. We have seen for many generations that Scotland's children were born and reared in Scotland, but were never intended to live or die in Scotland, and so peculiarly has Scotland made a name for itself in almost every country in the world. Let England imitate Scotland in this respect, and its sons and daughters forget—the sooner the better—that they must live and die in little England; let at once the puny sentiment about England being our native land be extended to Greater Britain, amongst even worldly men; whilst let the true follower of Christ have a bigger heart, and love all nations, and take in the whole world, and, as he plants himself abroad, say to himself (resting upon the command to go, and on the promise that He will be with him to the end of the world) "this is my own, my promised land.

If this foul plague from hell (beneath humanity and beneath bestiality) shall thus arouse the Church to preach thorough-going family and domestic purity as I have hinted, and wonderfully to quicken the living of Christians, and to a glorious exodus of men and women filled with the Holy Ghost spreading to the ends of the earth, then shall it be said seven devils have come out upon us, but seventy times seven have fled away.

How this foul thing should summon Christians to holy living and prayer, and to a glorious advance all along the line.

It is grand to get an Act of Parliament, but let not Christians be carried away or content with any such trifle.

For years I have advocated our young people of both sexes being brought more together. God would have it so.

"TO OPEN THEIR EYES."

Sir,—Allow me, as an old clergyman to thank you for the fidelity and openness with which you have spoken upon the sad subject which has so tirred the nation, and which, I hope, will still stir t until something effectual has been done, to eradicate at least the crime, and all its accessories.

But much more than this is necessary. The vice has to be dealt with, and can only be dealt with by equally faithful teaching of the young. If they are left in ignorance they become an easy prey to the seducer and his agents.

For this instruction, parents and teachers are under great and solemn responsibilities, on the behalf of their children and pupils,—parents especially. They should instruct their children in the true end and design of their physical nature, as soon as they can intelligently receive the instruction; and lovingly warn them of the temptations in their path, and of the ruin that must attend sinful and immoral practices (Prov. i. 17). Is it not much better they should learn these from them than from companions?

In reference to teaching and preventive measures, I would just observe that the luxury of the age, the excitements and late hours of fashionable life, especially intoxicating drinks and high-seasoned foods, acting upon the physical nature, have much to do with the sensuality and vice of the age.

Human nature is indeed fallen and corrupt; but it is fostered and aggravated by ignorance. Ignorance is the open door by which the emissaries of vice gain admittance. Is it not, then, the sacred duty of all who are concerned in the welfare of the rising generation, to see that this door at all events shall be closed? Virtue must not be sacrificed to an unreasonable and conventional prudery. It is of little use cleansing the stream while the source and the spring are uncared for.—Believe me to remain, very truly yours,

Heywood Lodge, Chelsea. R. D. Thomas.

THE TOUCHING IGNORANCE OF THE VICTIMS.

Dear Sir,—Girls need both protection and warning. In your ar icle on "Religious Cant," and in the letter headed "Suggestions to Parents," the latter subject is spoken of. It needs enforcing. "Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird." One of the saddest features of The Pall Mall exposure was the touching ignorance of some of the victims.

Over a Bible lesson, as I know from experience, God's appointed method of giving rise to life, his law of marriage, and man's violations of it, can be taught to girls under 13 years of age. When they have that knowledge, they can be warned (if need be) of danger.

My first object in so teaching my daughters was truth; I felt that God had laid it on my heart not to use evasions or imply falsehoods. I thought also that this knowledge ought to be taught in a holy way, otherwise young people's consciences get hurt by furtive guesses and thoughts on such subjects. Moreover, true hatred of sin is better learnt from God's Word than from man's silence.

The huge evil of prostitution will never be much reduced, except by God's own remedy—marriage. Early marriage should be promoted before vice has become a habit. If young ladies were brought up to dress plainly, and to understand cheap housekeeping, so that they should not be, as wives, expensive luxuries, but helps meet for man, many a young man would keep from impurity altogether. My experience has been among young barristers and students, who looked upon a wife as one of the far-off results of success, and acted accordingly. Christians are the salt of the earth, keeping it from corruption; but the salt must not lose its savour. We must by example and word lead public opinion to right views on the bringing up of the young, or the evil will lie at our doors. Lastly, we ought to pray and labour for early conversions.

Yours faithfully, O. C.

"THEM THAT SIN REBUKE BEFORE ALL."

Dear Sir,—I have read with deep interest your remarks, also those of other subscribers to your journal, on the subject of "London's Shame," but I am somewhat at a loss to understand why it is those in possession of the information have not publicly announced the names of those men who cause and encourage this iniquitous traffic in young girls. To my own way of thinking the publication of their names would do a great deal more good than the publication of their iniquities.—Yours faithfully, An Englishman and a Father.

PROTECTION OF MINORS.

Sir,—The Criminal Law Amendment Bill has now been passed, and in a form which, if it will not entirely satisfy the public, at least will afford scope for vigorous action. Recent disclosures have shown that it is not only the structure, but even more the administration, of the law which requires prompt amendment, and the public excitement which has been aroused will have bad results instead of good if it be not directed to energetic practical steps to remedy the terrible evils which are in our midst.

The Minors' Protection Committee — a Committee formed three sessions ago for the purpose of passing the Bill—hail with great satisfaction the approaching completion of their original task. But in view of this the Committee have now resolved to extend their objects, and to undertake, as far as in them lies, to enforce, and assist others in enforcing, both the new and the old law. The Bill must not be allowed to be a dead letter; and the Committee believe that the public will support them in striving to bring to justice persons guilty of such practices as have been recently exposed, but who have until now been, in effect, beyond the reach of the law.

The work of the Committee has so far involved personal labour rather than large outlay, but in prospect of the more expensive operations now contemplated the Committee ask for substantial assistance. Mr. Samuel Morley has accepted the office of treasurer, and an account has been opened at the Lincoln's-inn Branch of the National Provincial Bank of England, but all branches of the Bank will receive contributions paid to the account of the Minors' Protection Committee; or cheques may be sent to the Treasurer, or to the Hon. Sec., Ralph Thicknesse, Esq., 1, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
Chas. T. Mitchell, Chairman of the Committee.
Lincoln's Inn.

THE PROPOSED HYDE PARK DEMONSTRATION.

The following letter has been sent to The Nonconformist and Independent by Rev. Bowman Stephenson, who is so well known in connection with the Children's Home, Bonner-road, Victoria Park, E.:—

"Sir,—The Criminal Law Amendment Bill is now safe; and all men of fine Christian sensibility will desire that the public attention shall, as soon as possible, be released from this painful subject. It has been felt, however, by many influential persons, that some great, solemn, and impressive record of public opinion on this subject should be made before the matter is dismissed to those quieter but, it is hoped, very earnest and persistent methods of prevention and rescue which are most desirable and necessary. Accordingly, a conference is to be held at St. James's Hall, on Friday, Aug. 21, and a demonstration will be made in Hyde Park on Saturday, 22nd. This, though the outcome of the recent agitation, is being promoted by many who cannot entirely approve of all the methods recently adopted for arousing public attention, and is not intended to represent the particular views of any person or paper. It is believed that a strong expression of public opinion in favour of purity is necessary in order that the new law may be made practically effective; and that such an expression will greatly stimulate those quieter practical measures which will be needed if the fearful evils recently exposed are to be discouraged and repressed. The demonstration will be no noisy manifestation of party or sectional opinions or objects. It will be a grave, serious, even sorrowful, protest against national vice. Many of the clergy of the Established Church will head their congregations, and, in some instances, be attended by their choirs. Many of the trade societies will be there in force. The women from the Military Stores at Pimlico will attend in a body. The Secularists and "Social Democratic Federation" will be represented. On the other hand, a large number of highly respectable ladies will make a point of attending, making the journey in a sort of procession of carriages. It will be such a demonstration as has never before been seen in this country. What is English Nonconformity going to do in the matter? Many ministers will attend, and will invite the adult persons of their congregation. May I most respectfully suggest that in connection with next Sunday's services special mention be made of this demonstration; the congregations be urged to attend; and special prayer be offered for Divine help in the effort to repress the terrible and cancerous vice which is threatening the national life? Many ministers are, no doubt, just now, enjoying their well-earned holiday; but will the secretaries of churches take care that this matter receives due attention? Let us, once for all, speak solemnly and earnestly to the nation, and then betake ourselves, resolutely and lovingly, to that work of prevention and rescue which will tax all the energies of English Christianity for years to come.

"P.S.—It is not the work of the committee to insist upon any one method of going to the Park. Many will form processions; others will prefer to go singly to the meeting place. It matters not how people go, if only they be there. Children will not be invited."

PREVENTION BETTER THAN CURE.

Sir,—May I tell what we have succeeded in doing on a small scale in the cases of young men coming up for the first time to London? I have had a very happy experience of what effectual good can be done if attempted in time. By the means of circulars to ministers, and standing notices in one or two Church organs in Scotland, we made it known that we were prepared to find respectable lodgings in any locality for any young man coming to London. The lodgings we always procured by some Christian young man in the same neighbourhood, who was put in direct communication with the applicant. The consequence was a link of gratitude that enabled the former to draw the new-comer into congregational life, and to introduce him to reliable and congenial friends before he had time or opportunity to make others.

Ought not something similar to be organised at once for young women and girls? Surely there is no neighbourhood in London where Christian friends in her own sphere and station could not be found for every girl coming up here. Surely there is no large shop where some Christians are not already to be found, and it ought to be possible so to organise our Christian forces as to secure an immediate welcome by Christian companions for girls coming to London as shop assistants, servants, or otherwise. The immediate welcome is the important thing. We have found the delay of only a week or two with young men to make all the difference; with girls this is still more evident.

The late Archbishop was very willing to join an extended scheme we had with regard to young men. I doubt not the present Archbishop would not fail to help a movement such as I have sketched, and his imprimatur would be of great importance in recommending it to the notice of clergymen throughout our country towns and villages from which so many girls arrive friendless in London. The movement, however, ought not to be sectarian, it ought to be national, even, if possible, international, like our Y.M.C.A. If, as I believe, the Y.W.C.A. is on unsectarian lines here is a grand opportunity for its leaders and members.

PARIS, PART OF "MODERN BABYLON."

Pastor Hirsch writes to Le Matin, a Parisian publication, eloquently and truthfully, as follows:—

I quite understand the satisfaction that many Parisians feel at the disclosures of The Pall Mall Gazette. The subject of "Modern Babylon," about which our neighbours on the other side of the Channel have long been ashamed, has at length been disclosed. But I wish that this terrible lesson may not profit the English alone. That they will profit by it you may rest assured. Those among them who, overcoming their national pride, have dared to lay bare the wound, and that in a measure before the eyes of all the world, will know how to cauterise it with a hot iron till it be perfectly healed. I desire that a similar work should take place among ourselves. Let us not recriminate nor cover ourselves with the garment of hypocrisy. The evil is among ourselves, as it is yonder; it is practised here, perhaps, under different phases; and not on so great a scale, but, such as it is, it must be seized by the throat, and be combated without mercy.

Our customs, do you know them? Do you know that in the midst of Paris, in houses set apart for the purpose, which pay a tax to the Government, and in exchange enjoy its protection, there are perpetrated, day after day, monstrosities and crimes exactly like those which have spread a cry of horror throughout the civilised world? Do you know that here also the torrent of infamy carries on its tide those unfortunates that sophists and fools tell us are necessary though they be sometimes children of ten years, of both sexes? I do not now speak of all these "glass houses," as an ex-police officer ingeniously called them, where human beasts wallow in mire and blood.

We must do away with these base things, with those who prepare, facilitate, or make them possible. We must reform man by man, and cause him to respect his mother, his wife, and his sister whom he degrades when he degrades the mother, the wife, or the sister of others.

We must pursue into its most secret recesses, this theory that it is necessary, and, at the risk of being called dreamers, we must cry from the house-tops that what is necessary is righteousness at all times, and that what is never necessary is the opposite.

We must mercilessly unmask this evil by virtue of which immorality is excused to men, when at the same time it brands the woman with an indelible disgrace.

ENGLAND'S CHILDREN.

THE whirling snowflakes fall with gentle touch,
And cover o'er the slumbering earth, till all
Is dazzling white. Some lie upon the hills,
And some the valley clothe. Some cover o'er
The lowly cottage thatch, and some look down
From battlemented tower and lordly roof.
Some fall and vanish in the whirling stream,
And some upon the beaten highways lie,
All pure and spotless, till the passing foot
Of man or beast the glittering crystals crush
With heedless step into the mud beneath.
A parable this of our selfish times,
When lust, begat of luxury and wealth,
Can put, relentlessly, its iron heel
Upon the form of innocence and youth;
Yea, artless childhood too, and leave them crushed
And earth-stained, to pursue a hideous life,
Or sink unheeded to the kindly grave.
If Christ should ask a people's coin to see,
Would not our penny show a queenly head,
Of aspect mild and pure: on the obverse
Britannia with her shield and trident spear,
To avenge the wrong, or else the weak protect?
Is this indeed the tribute that we pay?
Shall Britain, with her helmet on the ground
And spear reversed, use but her ample shield
To hide her blushing cheek and falling tears
For her own helpless daughters' cruel wrongs?
The Lord and righteous law forbid the shame.

HEREDITARY DISEASE.

SIR,—I have read with interest the correspondence which has appeared in the columns of your paper on the subject of Faith Healing, and your own judicious remarks thereon. Allow me, I beg of you, a little space for a few words on this question so deeply important to the Church, and the family, and the individual.

I desire to call attention to the case of "Hereditary Diseases"—diseases, as a rule, incurable, and yet entailing such misery, and often sin, on the generation which suffers them, and on the generation to which they are transmitted. The tender-hearted and trusted "family doctor," who knows "the family constitution," knows with what pain his eye has detected in the son or daughter the sure signs of hereditary disease, and can tell of the grief of parents when told "human science is impotent, there is no remedy." And so one and another of loved ones are swept away, or left to them, a source of mourning and woe.

Has God no remedy but death for these innocent sufferers who have not sinned, though their ancestors did, in one way or another? Can it be truly said to such as a consolation, "God has sent you this sickness, bear it patiently, for it comes from his loving hand for your good"? Is it not rather the inheritance of some one's sin, and for the removal of which God has found a ransom?

In Exod. xx. 5, we read, "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate Me;" here, I suppose, is "law given by Moses," and "showing mercy unto thousands of them that love Me, and keep my commandments," here is, may it not be said, "grace and truth by Jesus Christ"?

What is the commandment? Is it not faith in a God-given, and, therefore, full remedy for sin, i.e., in Jesus Christ? For it is difficult to accept as a fact that the gracious One, "whose mercy endureth for ever," foresaw the consequences of sin and made a provision to meet only a part of them in the salvation worked out by his Son Jesus Christ. Is it not, then, a partial salvation? After his sermon in Nazareth, in which He announced his mission, stupid unbelief drove Jesus from the village ere He could carry it out. He went, therefore, elsewhere, where He was allowed to do as He would; and we read, "He cast out devils, and healed many of divers diseases," thus reaching soul and body.

The question, then, is this. Looking at the mass of innocent sufferers from hereditary and incurable diseases, more especially the little children for whom Jesus had such a tender love, bearing in mind, moreover, that with hereditary disease there is often a marked predisposition to vice, for which they are not responsible, ought Christians to accept the generally received theory of "no remedy in this life," or to teach the sufferers that there is a remedy in Jesus Christ for those who in faith claim it from Him.—Yours, CHRISTIAN INQUIRER.

A VICTIM—SARAH LODGE.

[This case was told by the mother to Miss Ellice Hopkins, and retold by her at the Y.M.C.A. London.]

LISTEN! I had a daughter,
Beautiful, bright, and fair;
One I had ever prayed for,
And trained with a holy care.

At fifteen years I had chosen
A place in a goodly home;
But my Sarah's heart was restless,
And a tempter bade her roam.

It was near to this cursèd city,
That my darling girl was lost;
And never a sign nor a fragment
Of that wreck has ashore been tost.

I lavished my little savings
In seeking her on life's deep;
And now nine years have crushed me,
Still the waters their secret keep.

If ever I hear of a death-deed
That seems that it might be her,
I spend my little, or tramping,
Let nothing my steps deter.

To the dead-house door I hasten,
And gaze on the sickening sight,
Perhaps on the features battered
By a human fiend of night.

Sometimes 'tis the swollen body
That tells of the fatal leap,
Where the river flowed dark and silent,
And the soul's last curses sleep.

Sometimes in the pauper's coffin
Is the trace of a cut-throat's knife,
The gash, and the starting eye-balls,
Revealing a taken life.

But I turn from them all, and wonder Whose daughters they may have been,
And if they have weeping mothers,
Who guess of that last dark scene.

But I find not my long-lost Sarah,
So perhaps she is still below;
Will you mention her name, dear lady,
Wherever your feet may go?

She is Sarah Lodge, my daughter,
And someone perhaps may hear,
Who will tell her her mother wants her,
And waits in despairing fear.

Have I no comfort? Listen!
I once had a sunny dream:
And she, my belovèd daughter,
Burst forth in a glory-gleam.

"Oh mother," she said, "dear mother!
I'm safe and I'm happy here."
So I fancy perhaps she's yonder,
And it hushes the falling tear.

* * * * *

'Twas only a dream of comfort—
Perhaps could she know the truth,
'Twere worse than the pauper's dead-house,
Or the life cut short in youth.

We thought of the foreign "exports,"
And the victims kept for sin;
"Foul wards" in the parish workhouse,
And the rotting forms therein.

And this was a stolen maiden—
And they steal our maids to-day,
While we must be gagged with silence!
In the name of God, sirs, Nay!

For the thousands duped and ruined,
Let the Church's thunders roll;
Lest the curse of the poor young creatures
Fall hard on the silent soul.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

THE NEW SCHEME FOR THE RESCUE OF THE FALLEN.

FULL particulars of the above scheme appeared in last week's CHRISTIAN. Circulars can be had on application at 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C. The scheme has two branches. (1) A central office of help and inquiry, in London (with agents in this country and abroad), at which girls who either have fallen, or who find themselves in danger, can obtain counsel and assistance, and to which parents, guardians, and friends, in any part of the world, can apply for information respecting those who they may fear have gone astray. The doors of such an office would be open day and night, and connected with it would be officers in sympathy with its purposes, skilled in investigation, speaking different languages, and familiar with the haunts and ways of the traffic in London, on the Continent, and elsewhere. The advantages of such an institution will be self-evident. Many of the "fallen" class would soon learn to place confidence in it, and, though not abandoning the life, would give information that would be most useful in rescuing others. (2) Refuges in different parts of London and the provinces, to contain at least 1000 girls. For one of these a suitable site of five acres has been given, on which it is proposed to erect an industrial home. Receiving houses will be established at once in Canada and the Western States. The principles on which these homes will be conducted are a change of heart; the open door to restoration to respectable society; the spirit of love, the girls being received into the family; no imprisonment, all being perfectly free to leave at any time; obedience, instruction, and industry—every girl being taught a mode of earning a livelihood if she does not know one self-support—laundry work, boot sewing, box, bag, and brush making, straw plait work, and other modes of earning money being contemplated.

As to the success of the scheme, judging from our own experience, we anticipate most satisfactory results.

Various commendable societies are already at work, but the present circumstances demand much more extended effort. In raising the age of protection to 16, the Act must necessarily throw between 4000 and 5000 young girls in London alone into circumstances of great hardship if not actual starvation. This scheme will enable us to meet the needs of multitudes of this class.

To carry out these proposals at least £20,000 will be required. The already overburdened Salvation Army cannot have this load added to its liabilities. We can only work out this plan as far as extra means are supplied. We pledge ourselves no further. We have been much encouraged by the promises and donations mentioned below, but nearly two-thirds of the amount are still required. Who will help at once?

Remittances can be sent to the Headquarters of the Salvation Army, 101, Queen Victoria-street, London; or to Messrs. Morgan and Scott of The Christian. WILLIAM BOOTH.

THE PALACE OF PAIN.

WHAT a place to study character, if such an expression does not seem too in- ferent and almost unkind." The ready pen, e fruitful brain, the gentle heart that wrote d felt these words are laid to rest.* But emory loves to linger about the interests and bours that stirred the pulses of those now gone, d so with softened tread she hovers around the rtals of that place where he, who so fully ercised "the heart-enriching grace of sym- thy," had thought and felt the words we have oted.

"Palace of Pain!" Where? hat is it? "It is," he says, "a ble edifice—it is palatial. It s formerly a ducal residence. stands in a most refreshingly autiful position;" there are ovely walks and pathways," ady oak and elm, to invite from e glare of the noonday sun; "the ion wanders away for miles ong the pleasant meadows, and lds, and orchards, and woods;" ile inside, "through the long lleries," the eye regales itself, d the ear hears from many lips he words of a most grateful e for such a house"—yet it is "Palace of Pain." For "pain s, beyond doubt, the chief inbitant there—pain of many kinds, quently sharp, agonising, pro- cted; pain suffered during many g years"—pain that chained the fferer to the bed for five, ten, teen, twenty, twenty-five years! s, a palace inside and out; resting "a pomp of foliage and pleasant clusion;" but "I could not but y to myself, as I walked away, t is a PALACE OF PAIN,'" and inhabitants are the "victims of in."

"Incurable! Did the reader ever ink what that means? Did we er attempt to realise what an ony there must be in that word some who, as long as life shall t, are to be held down perpetu- y, beyond hope, and beyond help? e who are in health and life do t know what it means. . . . I shed, as I went from patient to tient, and ward to ward, I could ve had the Countess de Gas- rin for my companion; for here e would have found a new and autiful series of her 'Near and eavenly Horizons.' The 'near' ere there, as the reader knows, stinct enough—the horizon of ffering and pain—the environing ew of weakness, and perpetually newed prostration and debility. . . The near horizon seems full of dness; and, indeed, if it be per- itted to extend it to years in time, ill the word is—Incurable." The entle visitor tells of many—some ralysed, others hopelessly crippled rheumatism; yet others perfectly lpless in body and limb; another suffering om lock-jaw, the teeth rigidly fixed; one, hose suffering places her among "the aristo- acy of painful experience," has lain on her bed r nineteen years; another "was a sufferer who ad been confined to her room for fifteen years. he arrangements round her bed were certainly harmingly ideal. But it was very pitiful." nother, never free from pain, had been fourteen ears lying there, quite helpless. She was the aughter of a City missionary, suffering cheer- lly, yet longing to be at Home, and at rest. The afflicted "child of literature" is there, "released from all anxiety for the future," his distorted body safe in this comfortable home. One young lady "has taught herself to write by having the pencil fixed somehow between her teeth." "Such are some of the many instances (out of 200) of a nature magnified by sorrow which would meet the visitor in this Palace of Pain."

Who can read of those "rescued to a little repose, saved from some of the wretched, corroding anxieties and cares inevitable to their lot," without echoing the thought that it was a Divine idea which came to the heart and mind of the good and great Dr. Andrew Reed, to found this Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney Heath? "At this moment, without any enlargement, or much additional provision, there is room for the accommodation of seventy more patients." Untenanted rooms—empty beds here, while every year 6000 persons are sent away from our hospitals as incurable, though this represents but a small proportion of such sufferers. Five hundred out-patients receive £20 a year. If any, who are blessed with health and vigour to fight the battle and to earn the comforts of life, desire "to bear the infirmities of the weak," let them get this book, "The Palace of Pain," to learn how they may ameliorate the lot of some sufferer, and so extend the glory of Him, out of whose sufferings we seem to hear the words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

THE FRENCH MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

THE Committee have just issued a circular urging their supporters to more generous sacrifice on behalf of the heathen world. Reference is made to French Colonial expansion, and to the consequent necessity for increase in Missionary work.

One bright point at Lessonto, Africa, is a work among the young at Thaba-Bossion by M. Keck on the model of the Y.M.C.A. Every week from sixty to eighty young men gather round the missionary. This is very promising for the future. The churches are developing, slowly it is true, yet, in the unsettled state of the country, it is a matter for praise that advance is recorded and not retreat. M. Bertschy arrived at Massitissi, June 13, just thirty-two days after leaving Paris, the quickest journey yet effected between Paris and Lessonto. On board the Hawarden Castle he met three American missionaries who were going out to join M. Coillard at Limpopo, the seat of his first expedition.

The latest news from M. Coillard is dated April 17, Leshoma, Zambesi. The welcome everywhere accorded to his companions and himself augurs well for the future, notwithstanding the formidable obstacles which the mission may meet with from the moral corruption of the Zambesians. A long and very interesting communication from M. Coillard appears in the Journal des Missions Evangéliques, in which he speaks of traversing large tracts of beautiful, rich, and fertile land with no inhabitants. Compare these African solitudes with our crowded European cities, where the struggle for life is constantly being carried on. How little have we entered into the purpose of Him who, when blessing man, said, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth."

The Nyonge Falls are of colossal proportions, and are said to be the entrance to the infernal regions; the natives never visit them without some offering to the god of the place. M. Coillard failing to conform to this custom, the guides were amazed, and were with difficulty persuaded to go on. As soon as the falls came in view one of the guides fell on his face and began some long incantations in a tone denoting as much sincerity as distress: "Oh, Nyambe, who inhabitest these abysses, appease thy wrath! These whites are poor and have nothing to offer thee. If they had stuffs or glass ornaments we should know it, and we would not hide it from thee. They are poor, they have nothing. O Nyambe, do not take vengeance, do not swallow them up; appease thy wrath, Nyambe." It was a great comfort to these poor Makalakas when the party returned safe and sound.

January they visited Nalolo and its Queen Maïbiba, a woman past her first youth, amiable, gracious, intelligent, and conversational. "She received us," says M. Coillard, "with great affability, and, after the first diffidence was over, asked us many questions about our country and the object of our mission. She pressed us to remain that she and her people might learn more of the Gospel of peace, and listened with a surprised interest when I spoke to her of the sovereignty of God, and of her duty towards Him and towards the nation.

"'Our country,' she remarked, sadly, 'is a country of blood; its kings and chiefs succeed each other like shadows. They are not suffered to grow old. If you return in a few months, will you find us still in power? After all, the slaves are to be envied, revolutions do not reach to them. Ah!' added she, sighing, and turning to her counsellors, 'Robosi is no longer king, he has lost all, but he has been received by people like these, so he may esteem himself happy, he has nothing to regret!' Poor Maïbiba, she knows that the sword of Damocles is suspended over her head. All the natives praise her fine qualities, her affability, her horror of blood, her business tact, her princely hospitality. She did all she could to expedite our journey, and was the only chief who seriously troubled herself to inquire into the pillage of our goods at Sesheke, and who deplored it. One could wish she was invested with supreme power, there would then be some hope for this unhappy country."

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

DEAR SIR,—We have been greatly encouraged by the reports which have come in from the various friends who are conducting the Children's Services at the seaside.

At Llandudno, where Mr. Arrowsmith, and a band of about twenty University men are engaged, there is a very full programme. The day's proceedings commence with a prayer-meeting for Christian workers, in St. George's Hall, followed by the service on the beach. Cricket and games for the girls fill up the afternoon, when the evening service follows, again on the beach.

There are special meetings for boys on Thursdays, and addresses to adults on Tuesdays and Fridays, while on the pearl of days, a large gathering takes place in the happy valley. Major Poole is also holding meetings in connection with Mr. Arrowsmith's work.

From Llandudno, our friends deploy for meetings at Pensarn, Penmaenmawr, Llanfairfechan, and Colwyn Bay, whilst a detachment of four workers find ample scope amongst the hundreds of children at Rhyl.

Bridlington.—Here Mr. G. A. King, M.A., assisted by Messrs. Oswald Bird, G. Young, A. H. Storrs, and Rev. Wesley Bothamley, have had capital meetings. On Monday, August 10, in spite of the strong winds, over 300 children gathered in the sand church, whilst two or three times that number of adults stood round. Special meetings for boys and girls (the latter conducted by two ladies), are also held. In the evening a good service is held for adults.

Saltburn-by-the-Sea, and Redcar.—Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, who is accompanied by a goodly band of workers, writes: "We continue to have excellent morning meetings here with very much interest evinced. On Sunday last a good service was held at Saltburn, and another at Redcar. With three of our party I walked over to Redcar and back (eleven miles).

Our other meetings have also been encouraging, but the wet weather has hindered our outdoor work."

Brighton.—Mr. H. W. Figgis (of Dublin) reports: "Very good congregations, both on the beach and indoors. It is very encouraging to meet with so many who found Christ at the services I held here three and four years ago, or whose conversion resulted from them, and who are continuing bright and happy in their Christian lives. Already God has given gracious tokens of the power of his Holy Spirit in the conviction of sin. Do pray that many may be born from above. Mr. Figgis's time is comfortably filled up by a morning and evening service on the beach, later evening services for adults at eight o'clock, held either in the Countess of Huntingdon's Church, or Emmanuel Church Room, or St. Margaret's Rooms. Sunday afternoons and evenings are also occupied, the former by services for the Sunday-schools, the latter by meetings for adults in one or other of the above buildings."

Aberystwith.—Mr. Josiah Spiers, accompanied by Mr. Hawkesly Westall, has been having good gatherings, though much interfered with last week by the storms of wind and rain. At the morning prayer-meeting some seventy or eighty gather, the room being quite full. Between 300 and 400 children have made portfolios for their hymn-sheets, &c. Many friends have rallied round, some of whom found the Saviour when children at the earliest seaside meetings.

Hastings and St. Leonard's.—Mr. Pericles Green has for the past month had Children's Services here, and on Sunday, August 9, Mr. W. Frank Seagrove took up the work. There were nearly 1000 present, and a most happy service was held, whilst at the first beach meeting held on the following Monday, quite 500 gathered together.

Sandown.—Rev. Llewellyn Caley and Mr. Colin C. Walker, of Corpus College, Cambridge, report good meetings. A large awning has been erected on the sands, surmounted by a good-sized red flag. The children greatly appreciate this, and the numbers gathered underneath its shade, with adults standing round, present a pretty sight. Bible-readings for adults are held on Monday and Wednesday afternoons, and on Fridays an excursion is made to Shanklin, for the purpose of holding a service.

Weston-super-Mare.—Mr. H. G. Harris, B.A., has commenced work with a good gathering of children in the mornings.

Ilfracombe.—Mr. W. A. Moore and Mr. S. Sydney Weatherley report: "We have very much cause for thankfulness to God in that He has been pleased to show us that great blessing has followed the word spoken on the beach and in the Town Hall."

Margate.—Rev. G. F. Grace, B.A., and Messrs. Swann Hurrell, A. A. Grace, and H. Lee, B.A., of Cavendish College, Cambridge, are having good meetings every morning on the sands. Services are also being held in Holy Trinity Church on Sunday afternoons, and on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Our friends are deeply encouraged by the manifest blessing vouchsafed.

Broadstairs.—Messrs. W. L. Seyler, J. Taylor, E. and C. H. Collier, have had good meetings for the past fortnight. Each day has been filled to overflowing, with prayer meetings, sand-church building, the morning service, games and boating in the afternoons, and an indoor meeting in the evening.

Eastbourne.—Messrs. E. Salisbury, B.A., J. H. Butterworth, St. John's College, Cambridge, A. V. Grace, and H. M. Trickett, are having a capital work here. On Sunday August 9, some 600 gathered in St. Paul's Church (kindly lent by the vicar) while there are large gatherings on the beach each morning. Meetings are held for boys only every Wednesday evening, whilst each day's proceeding is commenced by a short meeting for prayer in Holy Trinity Schoolroom. Cricket and games each afternoon are much appreciated by the young people.

The "Kingfisher."—The yacht Kingfisher is at present at Ramsay, Isle of Man, whither Mr. Banaster went after leaving Llandudno.

We ask the earnest prayers of your readers that the work may be richly blessed, and result in the winning of many young souls for the Redeemer's kingdom.—Yours very faithfully,

T. B. Bishop, Hon. Sec.
H. Hankinson, Sec.

PRIZE ESSAY.—The Rev. C. H. Nash, B.A., of East Croydon, has received a cheque from the proprietors of The Christian Commonwealth for one hundred guineas, as the prize money which was offered by them for the best essay on "The Law and the Gospel." The essay will now be published in successive issues of that journal to begin with the first week in September.

HYDE PARK HALL.—A very interesting Service of Song was given at Stafford Rooms by the United Choirs of the Hyde Park Hall work, on Monday, 10th inst., in celebration of the success which has attended the services in the Park this year. The chair was taken by Mr. Thomas Clark. The room was full before the time, while hundreds were unable to get in. The music was from Rev. Payson Hammond's new book, "Gems of Praise." Great appreciation was shown, and the Gospel was simply preached between the hymns, by Mr. Cook. One singular feature of the evening was the presence of three or four infidel leaders who conduct meetings in Hyde Park; and who, apparently, enjoyed the service as much as those who so differ from them.

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

ALL hearts must have been saddened by the awful accounts from Spain of the cholera. The post brings us most mournful details. One of our schoolmasters writes: "Painful indeed i is, dear pastor, to tell you that after not having seen my dear brother, sister, and nephew fo some years, death has fallen upon them, and al in one day! Then, sad to think, they could no have proper burial, but in the evening, when th cart went by, their poor bodies were put in altogether with the rest in a great heap, and taker away. What agony for those who remained What can we say? God is above it all, and w pray for submission." Another writes: "Th silence of death reigns! All who could go hav fled, and each one who remains fears that h may be the next one attacked. Keep this lette in remembrance of me, as it may be my last."

Our dear and faithful brother, Don Alexander who has superintended the mission in ou absence, begs us to send supplies of medicine saying, "We have given away all our chlorodine. The poor people come daily entreating m for more. Please send twenty bottles by retur of post. One hears nothing but lamentation all around us." How the sad wail thrills ou hearts! Loving friends urge us to stay in dea old England, but we are impatient to go to th scene of sorrow, to help the suffering, the bereaved, and the destitute.

Thousands of refugees are daily flocking int Figueras, heedless of where they are to obtai shelter or food, with only the one thought, t escape from the terrible plague. Will not thos who sympathise with them, stretch forth a han to help, by sending quickly and liberally mone for food and medicines? When distributin them, how blessed an opportunity will thus b given to tell the sweet message of "Jesus an His love." But the needed help, to be of an avail, must be promptly sent, so shall the blessing of the sick, the widow, the orphan, an "Him that was ready to perish," be yours. I another week we start (D.V.) for Spain.

Follow us with your prayers as we go forth i the Master's name to that stricken land.

Yours, in His service,
Luis and Emily Lopez Rodriguez.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on activ work carried on by the Evangelistic Christia Mission, Cardiff.

LOWER EGYPT.—The population of Low Egypt consists of Europeans of almost ever nationality, more or less mixed with Oriental race and a great number of Armenians, Syrians, Greek and Jews, who have made Egypt their home. Mo of them now desire education for daughters as we as sons, but the mission schools for Egyptian gir are not suitable, as they do not appreciate the sol and useful teaching there given, while French ar music are a sine quâ non with them. These the can get at a convent, or at the small Roma Catholic schools. I established a school to me this want about five years ago, as a branch (thoug distinct in its arrangements) of my sister's missio school for girls. At the time of the war there we thirteen English girls, most of whom would hav been either in a convent or totally neglected, b for this. Several Jewesses of respectable familie besides a few Greeks, Italians, &c., also attende The war dispersed the pupils, and though the wor was afterwards resumed, many adverse circun stances hindered it. We have now appointed highly-educated English lady as head teacher, ar it is hoped it may be made a blessing to man Scripture is daily taught, and thus the Jewish gi who attend the school hear the Word of Life. at present there is no mission for Jews in Egyp this gives the school a claim upon those who ha their welfare at heart. The great difficulty is t want of means to start, where so little can obtained for the pupils. Eventually we hope t school will be self-supporting, but for a year or tw this cannot be expected, and help is urgent needed. (Miss) E. J. Whately.

For the Young.

THE SOLDIER LADDIE.

The following touching incident occurs in a letter written om Cairo by an American lady. She was allowed to visit e military hospital soon after some wounded men had een brought in from a skirmish :—

THE three hours we could stay were full of work for heart and hand. One young boy rom a Highland regiment especially excited my nterest. He had lost a limb, and could not, the octor said, live through the night. I stopped t his side to see if there was anything I could o for him. He lay with closed eyes, murmuring, 'Mother, mother.' I dipped my handkerchief in a basin of ice-water and bathed his orehead, where the fever flushes burned. 'Oh, hat is good!' he said, opening his eyes. Seeing e bending over him, he caught my hand and issed it. 'Thank you, Lady,' he said and miled; 'it minds me o' my mother.'

"Could I write to his mother? I asked. No, e said, the surgeon promised to write; but ould I, would I sing to him?

"I hesitated a moment and looked around. The gleam of the sun on the yellow water of the Nile, as the western rays slanted down, caught y eye, and suggested the river the streams hereof shall make glad the city of God. I egan to sing in a low voice the Gospel hymn, Shall we gather at the river?' Eager heads ere raised around us to listen more intently, hile bass and tenor voices, weak and tremulous, ame in on the chorus,—

'Yes, we'll gather at the river,
The beautiful, the beautiful river,— Gather with the saints at the river
That flows by the throne of God.'

"When the song was ended, I looked into he face of the boy—for he was not over twenty—and said,

"'Shall you be there?'

"'Yes,' he answered, with his blue eyes hining, while the light that never was on land r sea irradiated his face, 'I'll gather with the aints at the river.'

"The tears gathered in my eyes, as I thought f the mother, in her far-off Scottish home, atching and waiting for tidings of her soldier oy, who was breathing away his life in an Egyptian hospital; and I sang—

'In the sweet by-and-by,
We shall meet on that beautiful shore'— hen stopped and kissed his high white forehead.

"'Come again, lady, come again,' I heard on ll sides as we left the barracks. I shall go, out I shall not find my Scottish laddie, for by o-morrow's reveille he will have crossed the iver."—Free Church Monthly.

LORD, IS IT I?

SIR,—While we are grieving deeply over the sins of Englishmen, what are we ladies doing to raise the tone of the people? What have I done? Am I to blame? Lord, is it I? We cannot be electric lights, but one rush-light may save life in a dark place, so let none say, "I am too insignificant to be of any use," the simple testimony of one rush-light may be of use now.

When I came to live in this village I found it to be the custom for the boys coming out of school to fight the little girls. The parents submitted to it as the usual thing (it is wonderful how people submit to any evil if it be the "usual thing"). Sometimes they would send first home from the school the timid deer, so that they might have a good start before they let loose the hounds, the timid girls ran home and the bold ones waited for a tussle with the boys, such girls being worse than the boys. What did these rough children want? I mean in a social point of view; for Gospel light can alone change the heart. But how were they to be attracted to the Gospel feast? Well, they wanted what I am sure will make my well-to-do sisters smile, they wanted ladies' society. All this rough horse-play has long since passed away. It would be too long a story to tell all that has been done for them from the first lad coming on a message to the house and telling his astonished companion. "Do you know what the new lady at the Grove says?" "What?" "Why, she told me that Jesus Christ was once a working boy like me, and exactly my age!" "No, did she? How does she know?" From this ignorance onwards to the present state was not a work requiring talent, means, or an influential position, it wanted only kindness and sympathy.

There is scarcely a lady in England, young or old, happy or sorrowful, with nothing or a great deal to do, but might help to raise the standard of one or more boys or girls by associating with them and getting them to regard her as their friend. One may say, I cannot teach; so much the better, they get lots of teaching. Ask one little dirty, neglected, or any kind of boy, to come some night to hear a story, and if he likes to bring a companion with him. Do not finish the story then, but say that they may bring others to hear the rest. Let them talk with you, but not with each other. You will soon have a new circle of friends, and you will be surprised how dear they will be to you, and no entertainment will ever give you such unalloyed satisfaction as you will find in a "treat" of tea and buns to them. Let it be boys or girls as you may prefer, or both, but never have the boys and girls on the same evening.* I am now only writing for those dear sisters who are longing to do something, but do not know how to begin; meantime precious souls are lost, and little lads and lasses that one could easily influence now will soon be grown up and would laugh at the little story or chat that would win their hearts now.

A few noble sisters are down in the furnace pulling some out of the fire, hating even the garments spotted by the flesh; but may not we ladies who cannot do this help to keep some precious young soul from going into the fire, since we believe that prevention is better than cure?

[* Would it not be possible to teach boys and girls to associate properly and to respect each other? It is certainly according to nature and to Divine order that they should meet together. —Ed.]

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

DUBLIN.—During the past six weeks Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding most successful meetings here. A large marquee has been filled nightly with all classes, including numbers of Roman Catholics, who have gathered to hear the story of redeeming love. The after meetings have proved times of great blessing to many who have remained. Not a few have professed conversion, while backsliders have been restored, and Christians greatly blessed through these services.

SOUTHPORT.—During the last two weeks G. S. Meek, of Liverpool, has been residing here for the purpose of recruiting strength for the Lord's work during the coming winter. During his visit he addressed several large meetings on the subject of entire sanctification, with apparent good results. Many volunteered to give their all to God. Mr. Meek desires the prayers of your readers that his labours may be blessed to the salvation of many souls.

J. Smith.

UFFCULME, DEVON.—A very successful mission has just terminated in this town by the Gospel Tent Mission. The tent is going on the 13th to Teignmouth, and will be pitched near the beach, reaching the fishermen and others who congregate there. Mr. C. Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society, will conduct the services, and the sympathy of Christians is desired in these efforts to reach the masses. Tracts, &c., may be addressed to Mr. Brown, Fern Villa, Culmstock, Cullompton, Devon.

PEVENSEY SLUICE. — A Mission Hall was opened here on Bank Holiday, by Mr. E. H. Hasselly, of Hastings. The weather was everything that could be desired for "a day in the country," and, being Bank Holiday, a large number of friends availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting this interesting little place on the south coast, and of participating in the opening of a house that will be for the spiritual good of the inhabitants of the surrounding neighbourhood, consisting, to a large extent, of coastguardsmen.

MR. AND MRS. C. KING have been conducting evangelistic services at Christ Church Hall, Enfield. This hall was opened last June, and is worked in connection with the Congregational Church under the care of Rev. H. S. Toms. Mr. and Mrs. King went to Enfield on Sunday, 2nd inst., preaching in the open air in the morning, addressing the Sunday-school in the afternoon, and in the evening preaching in the hall which holds 300 people, and which was nearly full. The services were continued every evening until August 11, with increasing interest. On Sunday, August 9, the hall was crowded as well as the large vestry behind it. Many found peace through believing. Christians were edified, and all were very sorry to bid farewell to Mr. and Mrs. King.

WITHERSLACK, WESTMORELAND.—Rev. Dr. Morris, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has just held a week of mission services here with very gratifying results. Coming full of blessings received at Keswick, his words were full of power, and it was most encouraging to see how the thirsty souls drank of the life-giving stream. The parish is an agricultural one, and this is one of the busy seasons, yet nothing kept the people from attending the services, the little church being crowded. Many toiled hard all day, and walked three or four miles into the bargain. During the week, there have been many who found Jesus, and can now testify to his saving power; the believers have also been much strengthened. We earnestly hope that country parishes will hold missions, and, if conducted by such men as Dr. Morris, a man whose whole desire is to win souls and glorify his Master, the Word of God must grow and prevail.

GLASGOW Y.M.C.A.—The annual report was submitted by Mr. Wm. M. Oatts, General Secretary, at the council meeting on Thursday, August 13. It showed that up to June 30 there were 225 fellowship meetings for the year connected with the Association. The total membership was 8642, being 1119 in advance of last year. Eight evangelistic meetings, with a staff of 253 voluntary workers, are maintained every Sabbath. Eleven missionaries have gone forth to the foreign field, and 484 young men are studying for the ministry or mission field. Over 60 educational classes were opened last winter, and 3592 enrolments made. Five thousand "white cross" cards were issued, and 54 social purity lectures delivered. In addition to the central premises in the Christian Institute, the Association have rooms in the East End, South Side, Partick, and Govan. The expenditure was £3189, and the books close with a debt of £254.

Notes on Daily Readings.

AUGUST 20.—PHILEMON.

v. 1.—"Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ."—"He who is about to plead for Onesimus feels that he should plead in such a form that he could not be refused."—Jerome.

v. 2.—"Philemon, . . Apphia, . . Archippus."—"It seems in the highest degree probable that Apphia was Philemon's wife; probable, but in a lower degree, that Archippus was their son." If so, we have the family who would naturally feel the loss of the runaway slave, unitedly appealed to to forgive him.

v. 6.—"That the communication of thy faith."—Better, as in R.V., "That the fellowship of thy faith." This fellowship becomes a practical thing—"effective" (Bp. Lightfoot) rather than "effectual," R.V.—in its leading them to recognise fully all the good in Paul and Timothy; not, of course, natural good, but that which grace had conferred, of which good "in us" (so margin R.V.) he reminds them to strengthen his appeal.

v. 9.—"Paul the aged."—Bishop Lightfoot defends and adopts the translation, "ambassador," which he shows the word will bear, but as he admits that Paul must have been sixty or upwards when he wrote this Epistle, there seems no necessity to alter "the aged," the character ot the appeal so made being much more in keeping with the rest of the Epistle than if it was a reference to his own authority.

v. 11.—"Which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me."—There is here a play upon the meaning of the name Onesimus, "profitable."

v. 12.—"Receive him, that is."—R.V. well supplies what follows by "that is my very heart," an expression both of endearment and of identification with himself: compare ver. 17, "receive him as myself."

AUGUST 21.—HEBREWS I.

"In the Epistle to the Hebrews," says Rev. R. W. Dale, "I see an ancient faith, out of which the life has gone, being carried to its sepulchre; and a Christian writer stops the funeral procession, touches the bier, and the lips of the dead religion open, and bear testimony to the greatness and glory of the Lord Jesus Christ."

v. 1.—"God, who at sundry times," &c.—The beautiful symmetry of the construction of this opening passage in the Epistle as given in the A.V., has been rudely broken by the R.V., with no advantage to compensate except the slight one of "at sundry times" being more literally rendered "by divers portions." The Jewish Dispensation, it is thus intimated, was one of those partial and fragmentary portions of a revelation which finds its full utterance in the Son of God.

v. 2.—"Whom He hath appointed," &c.—After the mention of God's Son, "in whom" God "has spoken to us," follow seven assertions concerning Him: (1) "Whom He appointed heir of all things" (R.V.); (2) "Through whom also He made the worlds" (R.V.); (3) Who being the effulgence of his glory, (4) and the very image of his substance; (5) and upholding all things by the word of his power, (6) when He had made purification of sins, (7) sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high" (R.V.).

v. 5.—"For unto which of the angels," &c.—Angels (here first brought upon the scene to be contrasted with the Son of God) are the first of seven such subjects of contrast. They are (1) angels, chh. i. ii; (2) Moses, ch. iii.; (3) Joshua, ch. iv.; (4) Aaron and the priesthood, ch. v.—vii.; (5) the covenant, ch. viii.; (6) the ritual, ch. ix.; (7) the offering and sacrifice, ch. x. The Lord Jesus is shown to be superior to all, as the master is superior to the servant, or the substance to the shadow.

AUGUST 22.—HEBREWS II.

v. 1.—"Lest at any time we should let them slip."—The R.V. gives what is now generally accepted as the true meaning of the verb in the Greek: "Lest haply we drift away from them." "Speaker's Commentary" says, "As a careless boatman might float past his destination, perhaps to fall into rapids."

v. 3.—"If we neglect so great salvation."—"Neglect" is the same word which occurs Matt. xxii. 5, "They made light of it."

v. 9.—The connection of these words is disputed, but the R.V. is now generally admitted to give it correctly: "But we behold Him who hath been made a little lower than the angels, even Jesus, because of the suffering of death crowned with glory and honour."

v. 11.—"All of one."—If any word be supplied it should be "Father."

v. 14.—"As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same."—The first verb is literally "have been sharers of," referring to what the race shared in common. His participation was of a different kind. He was not one of the race, but He voluntarily partook of that which the race in common shared.

"Likewise" is literally "coming alongside of" (see Liddell and Scott), and suggests the thought of a lifeboat "coming alongside of" a sinking ship to take off the crew.

"Destroy."—"Rather 'bring to nought,' frustrating his policy and utterly disabling him."—Sp. Com.

v. 16.—"For verily not of angels doth he take hold, but he taketh hold of the seed of Abraham" (R.V.).—This, which is the literal rendering of the Greek, evidently points to Isaiah xli. 8, 9, rendered in R.V. "the seed of Abraham my friend; thou whom I have taken hold of."

v. 1.—"Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling."—These words show plainly that this Epistle is addressed to members of the Church of God—Jews though they might be—but not to Jews as such.

v. 4.—"He that built all things is God."—A very clear identification of Christ with God, on which the whole argument of the passage rests.

v. 6.—"The confidence."—Rendered by R.V. "our boldness." The word means "freedom of speech," such as befits children in addressing a father.

v. 9.—"Forty years."—These words in the Hebrew belong to the next verse, and this is recognised in ver 17, "with whom was He grieved forty years?" Their being here joined with what goes before seems therefore to be intentional, and perhaps intended to connect God's anger with them during forty years with the cause of that anger, viz., their seeing his works forty years, and yet not being affected thereby. Sp. Com. calls attention to the fact that "a probationary period of forty years occurred between the crucifixion and the days foretold in Luke xix. 43."

v. 14.—"We are made partakers of Christ, if," &c.—The tense of the verb is "perfect," "We have been made." It does not imply that their being made partakers of Christ depended on their final perseverance, but that the truth of their having become (at their conversion) members of Christ, could alone be tested by their holding the beginning of their confidence steadfast to the end.

v. 19.—"So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief."—This the ordinary word for "unbelief" throws back light on the verb "believed not" in the last verse, which R.V. renders "were disobedient." The disobedience implied is that of "unpersuasibleness," or refusing to yield to persuasion or entreaty. Archbishop Trench suggests "contumacious," as expressing the character of the disobedience spoken of.

v. 1.—"Let us therefore fear," &c.—The chapter which opens with these words ends with, "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace," &c. The fear is connected with the examination of self; the boldness arises from contemplating Christ. "Seem to come short of it."—Better in R.V., "to have come short of it." To come short of a promise is to fail to grasp it, and "to seem to have come short" refers not to any future discovery at the great day, but to the discovery now made that faith has never really been exercised in the promise "of entering into his rest."

v. 2.—"Not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."—There is a different reading here which the R.V. follows, and renders it, "because they were not united by faith with them that heard." The evidence is about equally balanced, but the "Speaker's Commentary" is probably right when it says, "The usage of the verb and the whole tenor of the context conspire to show that the Received Text is correct." Also: "The message entered their ears, but there was no inward faith to appropriate and assimilate it. It was no better than food put into the mouth of a man whose vital powers were insufficient for turning it into life-blood."

v. 10.—"He that is entered into his rest, hath himself also rested from his works, as God did from his." Ebrard maintains that Christ is here referred to, and this view is probably correct. There is no analogy between a sinner ceasing from his sinful works to find rest in Christ, and God resting from his works with satisfaction in what He had done (Gen. ii. 2); but there is perfect analogy between the latter and Christ resting from his works, in full satisfaction therewith.

AUGUST 25.—HEBREWS V.

vv. 1—10.—This is another passage on which muc light is thrown by observing that it is a case c inverted parallelism. The first four verses stat three requirements for a high priest—(1) Power c offering for sin; (2) Sympathy with the erring (3) Not self-appointed, but God-appointed. Thes requirements are all found in the Lord Jesus; (3 in ver. 5, 6; (2) in ver. 7, 8; (1) in ver. 9, 10.

v. 7.—"Unto Him that was able to save Him fro death."—Some have supposed that resurrection, c saving out of death, is here meant; but our Lord' words in Gethsemane, "All things are possibl unto Thee," along with his prayer, "Let this cu pass from Me," point rather to his being saved fro dying. There is probably an emphasis intended o "Save Him," for had He dissociated Himself fro his people, He could Himself have been delivered.

"And was heard in that He feared."—"Rathe heard to the removing of his fear,' so that the fea departed, and He went forth 'knowing all thing that should come upon Him.' "—Sp. Com.

v. 9.—"And being made perfect," &c.—"Th context proves that this must be referred, not to ou Lord's filial, but to his mediatorial relation. Tha relation was, so long as the days of his flesh laste in a process of development. But after He ha shown Himself 'obedient unto death, even the deat of the cross,' that process of development attaine its end, the state of humiliation was exchanged fc one of glory, and Christ came forth from th school of obedience made perfectly that which H was intended to become, God so putting the seal c acceptance on the sacrifice that had been made And being thus made perfect, He who to his las breath on the cross had been obedient to the wi of God, became the originator of eternal salvatio for all who now, on their part, are obedient to Him that is, who submit themselves in faith to the mer of his obedience (Rom. v. 19)."—Delitzsch.

AUGUST 26.—HEBREWS VI.

v. 1.—R.V. reads, "Leaving the first principle . . . let us go on to the perfection," or full growt (R.V. in margin). It points to the full development of Christian doctrine as connected wit the High Priesthood of Christ, and as contraste with the elementary teaching which he woul have them leave.

"Let us go on unto perfection."—This do not mean experimental or inward perfection, bu assumes that these lapsed ones are real Christian and describes them as such to make the contra between their past hopeful state and their prese awful state the stronger. But all discussions abou "final perseverance" are out of place here, for th writer is not dealing with that subject. In a probability the strong language here used ma have brought back all who were really converted such, at least (verse 9), was his aim.

v. 2.—"Of the doctrine of baptisms."—This is nc the ordinary word for baptism, but one that mea "any ceremonial washing or lustration." "Befor this fact (says Archbishop Trench) break down a explanations of Heb. vi. 2 which rest on th assumption that Christian baptism is intende here."

"Of laying on of hands" refers most naturall to the laying on of hands on the head of the sacrifice: see Lev. i. 4, and xvi. 21. There are fou truths spoken of as foundation truths not again t be laid. These are, "repentance from dea works," "faith toward God," "resurrection c the dead," and "eternal judgment." After th mention of the first two comes in the parentheti remark. "The teaching of washings and of laying c of hands"—meaning that the washings of the la and imposition of hands on sacrifice taught respectively the doctrines of repentance and faith, so tha there was the less reason now for converts fro Judaism to dwell on them.

v. 4.—"For it is impossible," &c.—The order i R.V. makes this passage clearer: "For as touchin those who were once enlightened, &c. . . . it is impossible to renew them again to repentance, seein they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, &c. Or clearer still, "Seeing they are crucifying, &c. The present participle describes their prese action, and the impossibility is not the abstra impossibility of such characters being renewe again unto repentance, but of their being renewe so long as they continue in their present state. Th refers, strictly speaking, only to those who, havin left the lamp of Judaism for Christ, go back to again. Joining those who crucified the Son c God and openly insulted Him, is to consent to the act and deed, and virtually do it over again.

v. 18.—"Two immutable things."—The word an oath of God.

Letters to the Editor.

OLPORTAGE SOCIETIES AND DISCOUNT ON RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

DEAR SIR,—As a Society which has a large num- er of colporteurs in England, it might be supposed at the remarks of your correspondent, "A Lover f Christian Justice," in your last week's issue, might efer to us; will you, therefore, allow me to say at his statements do not apply to our agents?

We recognise, and act upon, the principle, that o Christian or philanthropic work should be con- ucted so as to injure any honest trade. With this view, we do not even give the discount allowed y almost every bookseller, thus placing the Society t an actual disadvantage, but thereby preventing ur agents from taking custom for Christian litera- ure away from the local booksellers, while we onsider that our customers are compensated by aving a choice selection of books brought to their oors for them to select from.

Of course we sometimes have excellent books ffered to us upon very advantageous terms, and e give our customers the benefit; but we in- ariably sell these at a price which gives what any ookseller would consider fairly remunerative rofit.

We do not use subscriptions to cheapen any ooks; but, owing to the distinctly missionary cha- acter of the work, and the sale being limited to urely evangelical publications, whilst we have to ght against a deluge of pernicious literature, it is npossible to make true Christian colportage self- upporting.

Allow me also to correct the misapprehension hat, in consequence of colportage, "booksellers re obliged to push questionable literature because hey are deprived of a fair profit on Christian vorks."

We have the testimony of Christian booksellers hemselves that they have derived benefit from our agency coming into their neighbourhood, first, ecause we introduce many excellent books for- nerly unknown to them; second, because we create nd foster a desire for Christian literature amongst nany, and as we cannot, nor do we, attempt to ompete with booksellers, they derive a certain enefit.

Some time ago a striking instance of this occurred n a large village, where the only bookseller—him- elf an atheist—sold no Christian literature, and per- ons wanting it had to get it from London. When our colporteur first arrived there, this man was itterly opposed to him, but he soon found it to be o his interest to keep a small supply of the very ooks our colporteur had introduced into the eighbourhood.

Booksellers sell questionable literature—ay, and nquestionably bad literature, too—simply because they find a great demand for it, while the demand or Christian publications is comparatively small. A highly respectable bookseller—a Christian man— ately informed me that from the commencement of his business, a good many years ago, he had set himself against the sale of pernicious literature, "And," he added, "you will be glad to know that I made it pay." I said I was glad to hear of it, but on further inquiry I found that it was only the cheap pernicious serials that he refused to sell, while he did not scruple to keep in stock and sell what you, in a recent article described as "adulterous novels," and those of a very bad character. He showed me his stock of Christian literature, carefully shut up in a glass case, and he sorrowfully said he could get very little sale for that.

Another bookseller, who had lately started business, told me that he had about £200 worth of pure literature—not all Christian, but simply pure—and he found it dead stock on his hands. He had lately started a circulating library, but he found it was of no use, for he would not keep the abominable class of novels that the visitors to this seaside place wanted, and yet even he "drew the line" very far down indeed.

Christian people have no idea of the tremendous pressure in this respect that is put upon booksellers, and this is the cause of their selling what they disapprove of, and not the existence of colporteurs. Another thing that is much to be regretted is that many excellent Christian publications are extremely high-priced compared with the "other sort," probably owing to the smallness of the issue, but this of course militates against their sale.

Some time ago a London publisher, referring to the books of a certain author—books which we know have been largely owned of God, and of which our Society alone has sold over 20,000—acknowledged to me that but for our Society these books "would have been nowhere;" he could not get them circulated to any appreciable extent through the ordinary channels.

I trust these facts are sufficient to prove that rightly conducted Christian colportage does not in the least degree interfere with the sale of Christian literature by booksellers, but rather tends to increase it.

I am yours truly, H. D. BROWN, Secretary Christian Colportage Association for England.

IRISH CHURCH MISSION SCHOOLS.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow us to lay before your readers the needs of our poor children. In consequence of the closing of the Munster Bank, we cannot, as we have hitherto been permitted to do, draw cheques for supply; while (owing to the absence of friends) little comes in. The need is very pressing, as the children must be fed. The schools are all suffering. We have 1500 children under our care. I could tell you cases of the deepest interest of boys and girls truly converted to God, and carrying the blessed message home to their poor parents. The poverty is beyond description. One of our teachers writes: "I am keeping the school doors open during the holidays; a goodly number come. One little one of six years comes bringing two younger ones; each has one ragged garment. I asked the elder one if she had any under-garment, she said, 'No; I once had one, but mother pawned it.'" Another writes: "I have had letters from some of the girls during holiday. One says, 'I am fully trusting in the Lord, and trying to serve Him.' Another writes, 'We have very happy holidays. Teacher gives us verses to find out about Christ and his kingdom, which we expect to inherit by-and-by.'"

We had a large meeting of poor women last evening. It was pouring rain, yet they came just soaked through. I begged of them to go home. Many of them had their bed-covering on their shoulders. It needs to see these things for ourselves in order to believe them.

We have laid the matter before our Father in heaven. We feel sure he will send help, and that speedily, by the hands of his servants.

I remain, yours faithfully,
35, Upper Fitzwilliam-st., Dublin. ELLEN SMYLY.

BRAZIL.—Rev. E. Vanorden writes from Rio Grande do Sul: "We recently celebrated the Lord's Supper, when three persons, one white and two negresses, made a public profession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, which are the first-fruits of the revival which we are enjoying. The emancipation movement is making rapid progress, and especially amongst the negroes the Gospel finds easier acceptance than amongst the whites; eleven of them have professed the Lord publicly here, and others are enquiring after the truth. We request your prayers and assistance to continue and extend this good work."

THE STERN MEMORIAL HOME.—In connection with modern missionary enterprise, few names are worthy of more honour than that of the late Rev. Henry Aaron Stern, D.D., whose missionary career of upwards of forty years has lately been brought to a close. Persia, Turkey, Arabia, Abyssinia, and England were successively the scene of his labours, often amid discomfort, privation and suffering of no ordinary kind. His work in Persia, and his marvellous journey into Arabia have not often been exceeded. His sufferings in Abyssinia are still fresh in the minds of thousands, and have made his name a household word. It has been truly said, that what Livingstone was for missionary endurance, Stern was for missionary courage and heroism. It is strongly felt that such a noble career of missionary labour deserves some lasting memorial; and the friends of Jewish missions are therefore anxious that some permanent and useful tribute to his memory should be raised, as an indication of the wide-spread appreciation which is felt for his devoted and self-denying life and labours. A Committee has been formed for the purpose, and it is proposed that the Wanderers' Home for Jewish Inquirers (of which Dr. Stern had charge during the last fifteen years of his life) be placed on a more permanent basis, endowed with subscriptions, which, it is hoped, may be raised to his memory, and called "The Stern Memorial Home."

HOP-PICKERS IN MID KENT.—Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me through your paper to remind friends that the work amongst the hop-pickers will commence in the course of a fortnight, when we hope to do as in former years, viz., visit from bin to bin, scattering seed, preach at meal times, hold meetings at night at their encampments, and on Sundays, give free teas, &c. Last year we were entrusted with several garments for the almost naked bodies that we so frequently meet with in the hop garden work. If the donors had seen the joy of the recipients they would have felt thankful for the privilege I am sure. Parcels of clothes, tracts, &c., may be sent by L. C. D. Railway to Wrotham.

Ivy Hatch, Sevenoaks. G. GILLINGHAM.

Mission and other Appeals.

Southsea.—I have great difficulty in obtaining a good supply of Bibles, Testaments, tracts, &c., for my Juvenile Mission. As the mission is amongst the very poor, it is impossible to make it self-supporting, and I should be very glad to receive the above, and any kind of Christian literature addressed Mrs. G. Castle, 4, Sydenham-terrace, Somers-road, Southsea.

Missions to Seamen.—Shut up in close forecastles, in foreign and colonial ports, without even a newspaper, the crews of British ships are often driven into drinking-shops out of sheer weariness. They specially value at such times a friendly visit from a clergyman or layman, and eagerly welcome books, magazines, and reading matter. We have recently had applications for large supplies of books for the use of British crews at New Zealand, Yokohama, Palermo, Malta, Lisbon, &c., and wish to send to each place about 2 cwt. of books. Prayer-books are specially asked for, and healthy literature, of which our stock is exhausted. May I ask for supplies of books and magazines to be sent, carriage paid, to the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.—Yours faithfully, W. Dawson, R.N., Secretary.

The Y.W.C.A. in Dublin feel deeply the necessity of a larger institute, as the present one is quite inadequate to the growing needs of the work. The rooms are too small for the Bible-classes and meetings, and young women are continually asking us for a home, but we have only five beds, which are always full. We therefore appeal for aid in this work of seeking to help our young sisters, and to shield them from the many temptations that assail them. We need £500 for a suitable house, with accommodation for forty or fifty young women. It will, we believe, be almost self-supporting when once started, as is the case in many similar homes. A friend promises to give £50 if the rest be raised before November 1. We earnestly hope that friends will contribute liberally, so that we will not lose this promised help. Contributions will be gladly received by Mrs. H. Noble, President, Ardmore, Bray; or Miss Marrable, Hon. Sec., 49, Waterloo-road, Dublin.

Our Girls.—We want to do something special for the young women in this parish during the coming winter. The former Vicar founded a Y.W.C.A., which now has a membership of nearly 200. We need good rooms for classes and lectures. The present room is in an unfavourable locality, and uninviting both inside and outside. The lady workers say that with suitable rooms we could double this number. Many of the girls work in mills and places of business, and it would be a great boon to them to have bright, clean rooms to come to during the dark evenings. We are offered two rooms in a central part of the parish, and the landlord offers to make them suitable if taken for two years. The rent is £24 a year, and it would take £60 or £70 to furnish, &c. May I appeal for help to enable us to take them, and have them ready by October. With so many claims in this large and poor parish we are compelled to seek outside help.—Rev. Thos. J. Madden, St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness.

Aldershot.—The provision for the spiritual needs of this town is most inadequate, whilst the drinking saloons are so numerous that the whole civilian population of 12,000 could be put into them. Our work commenced here in 1872 in a low public-house which had lost its licence. Here a blessed work of God has been carried on, many a civilian and soldier having found salvation. Few places are so important for such work as Aldershot. To it every regiment in the British Army is quartered in turn, and as our soldiers are continually migrating to different parts, we do our utmost to make them soldiers of the Cross. In 1876 we erected a church, school-room, and minister's residence in the centre of the town, at an outlay of £2,500. Again we are obliged to build. Thus in thirteen years the word preached in a house once noted for licentiousness and every kind of sin, has been effectual in building up two churches. We much regret to vacate the mission hall, but it is far too small for the hundred children, besides teachers, who assemble every Sabbath, and there is no other place of worship in this part of the town. We have secured a corner site at a low price, on which we purpose to erect a church and a school-room, and class-rooms for the young. Our outlay will be £1000, towards which aid will be gratefully acknowledged by Mr. G. Cox, Redan-hill, Secretary, and Corporal G. Musselwhite, South Camp, Treasurer.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

"Feed My Lambs!"

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes" are just now in very urgent and immediate need of help.

Almost every week defenceless Little Girls are being rescued from untold misery, and the prospect of shameful lives. No case is turned away.

The 1400 children in the "Homes" have also to be supported during the holiday season, when almost all the friends of Missions are away from home. Every Autumn this gives rise to much anxiety, and greatly increases the burdens of those "who abide by the stuff."

Any gifts, however small, will be gratefully accepted and acknowledged if addressed to WM. FOWLER, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, or to

Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North ea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all he year round in providing our tables with fish. These nen, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety torm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, undreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets t home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some mall share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so ighly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

arrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy nd pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to hile away the weary hours, affording relief in case of ckness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull nd monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a rand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime ation like England; and I believe that the results of eir effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only pported liberally by the public, be of untold value in e future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may ll. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the ery youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to teresting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meet- gs. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to hrist, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal ldresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most fective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. he book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted nder his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

Anecdotes and Appeals: with very numerous Instances of the Early Regeneration of the Young. Sixth Thousand.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"This work consists of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, which are for the most part original. . . . This is really a new Hymn and Tune Book, and one which is sure to become very popular. It is a Gem. The Hymns are suitable for Special Meetings, Family Worship, and Children's Services."—Oldham Chronicle.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath-schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of OLD STANDING CHRONIC BRONCHITIS.

Mr. F. W. MOODY, of 30, Paragon-buildings, Rodney-road, NEW KENT ROAD, S.E. (no relation to the Mr. J. MOODY, of ANLABY, HULL, whose case appeared last week, I believe) applied to me at the beginning of the year in consequence of notices he had read in the Christian Globe and other papers. At this time he writes:—"I was more than ever convinced of the value of your remedies after meeting with a Miss N., who told me how she had been brought low by that fell disease—consumption, and you had been the means of her restoration to health and strength."

The patient's father, mother, and a sister, had all died either of bronchitis or inflammation of the lungs, and he had suffered himself for eight years. Cough was extremely violent (causing constant fear of rupture), with pains in the chest, back, and right side, occasional night sweats, shortness of breath, with inability to digest his food.

In three weeks he wrote:—"I have already derived much benefit. Cough is not nearly so bad. The liniment you prescribed has relieved the pains." After a less than three months' course of medicine, he writes joyfully:—"I feel like a new man; the symptoms have all forsaken me. I have not enjoyed such health for years. Your medicine is priceless. Make any use of this you please."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to GOD, their own FATHER and MOTHER, and true BIBL Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and te For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children th great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminste Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enable PARENTS to teach one child or a family of twelve children, TEACHERS to teach a class of twenty or a school of fiv hundred, EDUCATED LADIES to teach all ages, or MINISTERS without study to conduct a quarterly examination that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here i the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and lea about the system at the

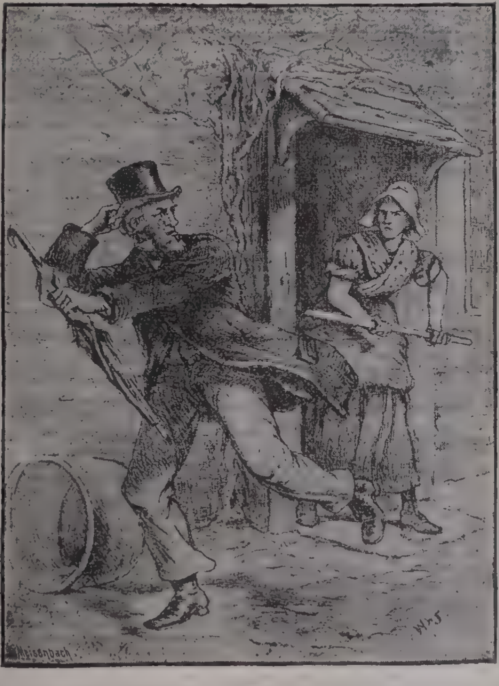
THE DEACON'S WEEK.

By ROSE TERRY COOKE.



This racy and telling narrative has been reprinted from The Christian for the purpose of Distribution in a neat form, suitable for enclosing in the modern square envelope.

"'Good mornin, ma'am,' and then I stopped. Words seemed to hang, somehow. I didn't want to pop right out that I'd come over to try'n convert her folks. I hemmed and swallered a little, and fin'lly I said, says I, 'We don't see you to meetin' very frequent, Mis' Vedder.'

"'No, you don't!' ses she, as quick as a wink. 'I stay to home, and mind my business.'

"'Well, we should like to hev you come along with us, and do ye good,' says I, sort of conciliatin'.

"'Look a here, Deacon!' she snapped, 'I've lived alongside of you fifteen year, and you knowed I never went to meetin'; we a'n't a pious lot, and you knowed it; we're poorer'n death and uglier'n sin. Jim, he drinks and swears, and Malvinny dono her letters. She knows a heap she hadn't ought to, besides. Now what are you a-coming here to-day for, I'd like to know, and talkin' so glib about meetin'? Go to meetin'! I'll go or come jest as I please, for all you. Now get out o' this!'

"Why, she come at me with a broomstick! There wasn't no need on't; what she said was enough. I hadn't never asked her nor her'n to so much as think of goodness before."

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. THE SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

"WHO WILL HELP US?"

Owing to the dilapidated state of our premises, we have been compelled to go to a considerable expense for repairing. One evening during the meeting the rain poured in in such torrents we had to stop, and seek shelter in different parts of the Hall. We earnestly ask the readers of The Christian to assist us in this unlooked-for expense. Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, "The Christian" Office, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

LARGE AMOUNT OF VALUABLE BIBLICAL INFORMATION.

"It is amazing to find so much information within so small a compass. The book is indeed—in every sense—a comprehensive Pocket Companion to the Bible. By means of the ANALYSIS the chapter and verse of any event in Holy Writ may be found without the least trouble. An invaluable help to every Bible student."

Christian Treasury, August, 1885.

"A very handy pocket volume, with a large amount of tabulated Biblical information. We do not remember having seen so portable and cheap a book of reference."

Christian Chronicle, June 19, 1885.

"Remarkable alike for its comprehensive scope, and for the completeness with which it packs into small compass the salient information on a multiplicity of points. . . . We ought to add that, as a time-saver to the Bible Student, it will be simply invaluable."

Christian Leader, June 18, 1885.

"We do not know a more useful Handbook for Bible Readers and Bible Students. It seems to embody nearly everything that is necessary in such a book; and is withal so conveniently arranged, and compressed into such small compass, that little more could be expected of such a work. We heartily commend it."

Christian Commonwealth, June 25, 1885.

"An exceedingly useful and handy little volume, containing a large amount of valuable Biblical information. There are twelve beautifully coloured maps and frontispiece. There are also compilations of 'Memorable Events,' 'Table of the Patriarchs,' 'Origin of Nations,' 'Ancient Capitals and Renowned Cities,' 'Rivers and Lakes of the Bible,' 'Sieges of Jerusalem,' 'Divine Judgments,' 'Prayers of Scripture,' &c., &c. A more helpful Book for Sabbath-school Teachers and others we can scarcely think of."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

ON GAMBLING.

MR. BARON HUDDLESTON has spoken out on the subject of gambling, in conection with a recent Stock Exchange case that was before him for trial. One of the London laily papers has commented at some length on the enormous and rapid growth of the pirit of gambling, and has raised a note of warning that should not be unheeded. The present age is one of self-indulgence and luxury. Rather than earn money legitimately by fair oil, men prefer to win it by gambling, if possible, and so acquire wealth without effort. The fascination for such ill-gotten gains is remendous. From the "pitch and toss" in he secluded courts or at the quiet street corners, to the enormous stakes on a horse-race, he ramifications of the system of gambling are such as would startle us were they made known. There is an old saying, "They who want to be rich in six months are generally beggars in twelve," which agrees with the words of the Apostle Paul in 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10: 'They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some have coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." What can be plainer than these words?—"temptation," "a snare," "foolish and hurtful lusts," landing men in "destruction" of all earthly hopes and blessings, and in "perdition" for eternity. "Piercing themselves through," has its illustrations in the Monte Carlo suicides, the "Derby" suicides, and the countless cases of imprisonment for embezzlement, forgery, and the like. The annual tale of bankruptcies would be found to arise in the vast majority of cases from "hasting to be rich," and what a list of self-inflicted sorrows they would contain!

Balaam's coveted rewards and honours, Achan's wedge of gold, Judas Iscariot's thirty pieces of silver, are the Scriptural illustrations of the ruin wrought by the love of money, and by the obtaining of money through other than lawful means.

The love of leaving things to "chance" or "luck" has touched a far deeper subject than money-getting. The salvation of the soul, and the possession of eternal life is in the minds of the vast majority a matter of uncertainty, to be settled by some "hazard." "I must take my chance with all the rest" is a frequent expression. Eternal life is gambled for, and gambled away. A chance prayer at the death-bed, a chance good feeling, a "lucky turn" towards spiritual things are what most men depend on, and if their hearts are hardened in sin, and they find out they are perishing, "pierced through with many sorrows," they usually say, "worst luck!" Friends say, "He made a bad hit."

Too much of the preaching in our pulpits savours of the uncertainty of gambling—the truth of God respecting the need of atonement, the punishment of sin, the reaping of our own sowing, is spoken of as if it were problematical, unreliable, and the "chances" of the love of God covering, in some unknown way a multitude of "peccadilloes" by and by, are proclaimed instead. On these false hopes and lying phrases men stake their eternal happiness, and lose all.

Here are some of the verities of God: "Be sure your sin will find you out"—"Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil"—"My mercy will I keep with him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him," together with the twenty-five times repeated "Verily, verily," from the lips of the Son of God as recorded in John's Gospel.

THE OVERCOMERS.—2.

THE following are a few of the ordinary evils that we have to overcome:—

EVIL SPIRITS.

The invisible wicked spirits that surround us and war against us are evil: the Lord, the Good Spirit, can alone overcome them for us.

Our part is to confess the name of Christ, trust in his blood and word of power, and be willing to die rather than yield to do any known sin that the evil spirits may tempt us to yield to. It is written: "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them" (Rev. xii. 10—12). "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you" (James iv. 7, 8). When we draw nigh to God, put our trust in Him to overcome for us, the devil must flee. Our great enemy defies all other strength, except the Almighty power of God. We must, therefore, only rely on his strength.

THE WORLD.

This is another great enemy. Its many allurements, attractions, false promises and vain pleasures, must all be overcome. Christ overcame the world for us. We have, therefore, to keep the eye of faith on Him. Also we should have our affections set on things above, the true and lasting treasures and pleasures that will satisfy.

The best of this world is but a vanity, a shadow. If we could have all that this world could give, we might be called on to leave all the very same hour that we might think we had attained all.

THE CARNAL NATURE.

This is a very dangerous evil. Our bad passions, our pride of reason, our corrupt will and way, must all be overcome. There is no good in our Adam-nature. Good is to be found in Christ alone, and He only is our Lord; we must be brought into subjection to Him in all things. When He reigns within no evil can overcome; His arm subdues the strongest lusts; but if we seek to overcome the weakest without Him we fail.

Pride, revenge, and restlessness are overcome as we meekly sit at his feet and learn of Him. At the very first appearance of restlessness or pride we should seek his grace to overcome it, before it gain any strength.

Perfect and satisfying rest and quiet of spirit we cannot have here, during our conflict in this present body of infirmity. It is our wisdom to rest by faith in Christ, and patiently wait the coming rest that is glorious (Isa. xi. 10).

DELIGHT IN MAN.

We must never allow learned, and interesting, and pleasant, and kind friends to take the Lord's place in our affection. We may overcome this evil by getting alone with Christ, and asking to have Him more fully revealed to us; for He is "the chiefest among ten thousand, yea, He is altogether lovely," and He is the truly kind and loving One; oh, He is the wonderful One! Let him fill our wondering eyes, till we can sincerely say, with one of old: "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee" (Ps. lxxiii. 28). Also, we should watch and be ready, for at any moment He may appear; then, we who are ready will be caught up to meet Him in the air, and so be for ever with our beloved Lord and Redeemer!

THE FEAR OF MAN.

As undue delight in man is an evil, so also is the fear of man, which bringeth a snare; and this evil must be overcome. We may be helped to overcome this by remembering that the greatest of men are but dust and vanity.

FALSE TRUST.

Another evil is to trust in men, or health, or property, or good deeds, or pleasant feelings, or favourable circumstances; all this false trust must be overcome. We should remember that much that affects our senses is like the uncertain and changing sea; and that the Lord Himself is the Rock, and the only true object of our trust. As disciples of Christ "we live by faith," and not by sight. Also, it is written, "We walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Cor. v. 7).

ERROR.

We should not yield to unscriptural theories and false teaching, nor allow our mind to be perplexed thereby. The remedy for the evil is entire subjection to the Word of God. Grace and truth are by Jesus Christ. The Bible is our only guide to rest on. We have to search the Scripture, and know what that says to us, and hold fast the truth in simplicity, and not allow any human construction or interpretation to move us (Psalm cxix. 99). God has made clear all He would have us know now. At best we can only "know in part" while in this body.

FRETFULNESS.

This is a sore evil, and should be overcome at the very first temptation to complain. Even though we should be falsely accused, and called to suffer shame, reproach, and persecution, we should calmly commit ourselves and our cause to the Lord, and in His strength be quiet, and show forth good behaviour to our enemies, and so prove ourselves to be disciples of Him, "Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again," but did good to His enemies (1 Peter ii. 23, 24, and Luke xxiii. 34). "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rom. xii. 21). To yield to fretfulness would grieve the Spirit, and do ourselves an injury. Resist the very first temptation to murmur, lest it produce a fretful spirit in us. Whatever the trial may be, sickness, or loss of friends or property, or any other painful circumstance, patiently endure. The trial or conflict may sometimes seem long, but deliverance is sure, as in Job's case, and others mentioned in the Bible.

We should praise the Lord in our trials, for He is ordering all for our good. It is written: "There shall no evil befall thee" (Ps. xci. 10). "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. viii. 28). "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. iv. 17, 18).

All is evil outside Christ; we must therefore "abide in Him," where we are preserved from evil, till He remove us to his throne, where He will show us to the overcomers.

The life of faith is the overcoming life. Living by faith in Christ we cannot be overcome.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD AND OVER-PRESSURE.

THE Special Committee on over-pressure in the London Board Schools has at length presented its report to the Board. The witnesses examined were three Government Inspectors, one Board Inspector, the Kindergarten Superintendent, one School Manager, eight head teachers, and three attendance officers. Answers to printed questions issued by the Committee were received from about one-fourth of the Board's head teachers.

It will be remembered that the Committee was appointed on November 27 last, to inquire into the allegations of over-pressure contained in Dr. Crichton-Browne's report, which had been repeatedly pooh-poohed by members of the Board. Subsequently the Committee reported to the Board "that some medical assistance is absolutely necessary for the successful prosecution of the inquiry," and was authorised by the Board to employ three medical men for this purpose. It is, therefore, simply astounding that the Committee stultified itself by abandoning the medical part of the inquiry altogether.

Further: only one head teacher out of the thirteen schools visited by Dr. Crichton-Browne was summoned to give evidence before the Committee. So far, then, as an investigation into Dr. Browne's charges is concerned, the Committee's report is absolutely worthless. The course adopted by the Committee in this respect must consequently be taken as a tacit admission of the substantial accuracy of Dr. Browne's allegations. We see nothing in the report which might not have been quite as truthfully written long since when the cry of overpressure was first raised; the Board had the same evidence at its disposal then as it has availed itself of now; we must, therefore, hold the Board greatly to blame for not taking earlier steps to remedy an evil which has been shown to exist to a grave extent.

After pointing to the fact that a notable proportion of the scholars are the children of well-to-do parents, and referring to the homes of the intemperate and vicious, the report goes on to remark that—> "There are many other poor homes, also, where there is such a struggle with poverty, and where the earnings are so small as hardly to cover the bare necessities of life, that lodging, food, and clothing are only provided for the children on the most meagre scale. The father or mother has too much time and strength occupied in earning a livelihood, to have energy to spare in looking after their wants. In both these cases the air of the dwellings and the neighbourhood in which they are is generally close and unwholesome, and the children are emphatically, by the evidence of teachers, unhealthy. They are stated to suffer from constant epidemics of measles, small-pox, scarlet fever, and whooping-cough; and ophthalmic and skin diseases, such as ring-worm and sore heads, are prevalent, and most difficult to eradicate. After their attacks the children are described as being, to some extent, incapacitated for school work, after the fear of infection has vanished. The noise and disorder of the homes often make it impossible for the children to sleep at nights.

> "These children come from a class which has not in the past been given to intellectual work or study. They are, therefore, as a rule, hereditarily unequal to the sustained learning and mental exertion attainable by others."

Exactly so; all this is perfectly true; but it must have been all along known to the Board as it has been long known to those who have nobly made it the business of their lives to go among the poor, endeavouring to ameliorate their condition. And herein lies the condemnation of the Board, that these poor, miserable, ill-clad, half-starved children have been overpressed in order that they should pass their examinations as creditably as the children of "clerks, small shopkeepers, or mechanics in receipt of some thirty to sixty shillings a week or upwards."

It is all very well for the Committee to urge that the Board was obliged to adopt such a course with regard to the instruction in their schools as would be calculated to earn a large share of the Government grant. We fail to see the cogency of the plea. Had a less pretentious and costly system of education been pursued, there would have been less overpressure. And is it possible that a powerful body like the London School Board should content itself with slavishly following in the lines laid down by Education Department officialism, instead of pointing out, which this report at last does, more intelligent ways. The Board obtained radical concessions in favour of their overworked pupil teachers; could it not have obtained some concessions for the overworked children of the poor? Time after time the Board had warning that overpressure was going on, that children of tender age were being worked beyond school hours in cruel sort. Was the screw taken off? Were not the teachers driven, by harsh assessments of their reports whereby they lost their annual increase of salary, to still further put the screw on their scholars? We are glad that at least the error has been admitted, and, however much we may have criticised the past policy of the Board in this respect, the Board has our heartfelt thanks for its present earnest, though tardy desire to do justice to the children of the poor.

As a whole the report is weak; some portions read as though they were contradictory of others, and, between the evident unwillingness to admit the existence o general over-pressure and the recommendations of the committee, there is considerabl divergence. To show the radical characte of these recommendations we give them in full:—

(1) That the Board grant facilities to loca managers and to other responsible persons for th provision on the school premises of penny dinners o self-supporting principles for elementary schoo children, where it can be done without interferenc with school work or injury to the school buildings.

(2) That a short statement of the admonitory symptoms of diseases likely to affect children whether arising from over-work or otherwise, b drawn up by medical authority for the use of th teachers and local managers.

(3) That further encouragement be given t physical exercises and games both in and out o school hours.

(4) That home lessons should not be given t children unless the circumstances of their home are entirely favourable, and the parents give encouragement to them, and that they should neve be set in infants' schools.

(5) That drawing should be made an optiona subject in girls' schools.

(6) That needlework in girls' schools should, a a rule, be taken for examination as a class subject and not for the shilling grant.

(7) That the School Management Committee b instructed, in assessing the work of the schools, t take into consideration all the circumstances of th schools and of the children; and be also instructe not to vary the assessment of H.M. Inspector a expressed in the merit grant on account of fact mentioned in his report, except under specia circumstances.

(8) That a review of the children who have bee instructed in the first standard in an infants' schoo shall be made after the school examination, with view of keeping in the first standard in the uppe schools those children who are unable to do th work of the second standard without over-pressure.

(9) That a memorial be presented to the Education Department, respectfully drawing their attention to the facts stated in this report, and in th evidence appended thereto, and asking them specially to consider the following suggestions:—

(a) That greater uniformity of method and o standard of work is desirable on the part of H. M Inspectors.

(b) That, with a view of discouraging irregularity of attendance and consequent pressure of work children who have not made a certain number o necessary attendances during the twenty-two week may be refused examination.

(c) That in estimating the merit of a schoo greater attention be paid to the due promotion o children who are able to progress more quickly than the average of scholars.

(d) That a loss of grant shall not occur i infants' schools, in the case of boys not takin needlework, where a special time-table for them i approved by H. M. Inspector.

(e) That authority be given to teachers, unde supervision, to classify their children in differen subjects according to their abilities.

We need hardly remark that we entirel concur in these recommendations, which, with one exception, have been adopted by th Board; but we say emphatically that, i they are the deliberate result of the Committee's inquiries, then it would be impossibl to exaggerate the magnitude of the evil the are intended to remedy.

We feel the greatest satisfaction at findin that there is at last a chance of teacher being allowed complete liberty of classification. We have no doubt that if this be con ceded by the Education Department, it wil be the death-blow to all over-pressure whether on teachers or scholars, and wil enable teachers to make the schools, in th highest sense of the term, educational institutions, instead of remaining what they a present to a great extent are, mere grant earning establishments.

THE HYDE PARK DEMONSTRATION.

A MISSIONARY, just returned from China, told us the other day that he never was proud of his country until now, when he felt how far higher was the moral tone of England than that of the country where he had spent his recent years. We felt very much like that on Saturday, as we journeyed from Mile End to Hyde Park. England has been humiliated to the dust by the confession, of desperately vicious crime, which has been forced from her. But, while there is not a nation in Europe which has not drunk to the dregs this same cup of filthiness, there is no other country where such a demonstration would have been possible. We doubt whether a thousand people would have been found in any country on the Continent, or in any country in the world, except an English-speaking one, to gather from all quarters of a great city and pass such resolutions as were adopted, unanimously, simultaneously, and with acclamation, at half-past six on Saturday evening, by the enormous multitude assembled in Hyde Park.

For a full account of the ten processions which had all united into one by the time when Hyde Park Corner was reached, and for he speeches delivered at the various platforms, we must refer our readers to the special Monday morning edition of The Pall Mall Gazette. We can only say that the demontration gave a conclusive answer to those who, like the Bishop of St. David's and The Spectator, "did not think such a public demonstration either desirable in connection with such a subject, or a promising mode of bringing about the end which the promoters had in view, and which they agreed in desiring with all their heart."

No one who saw that long succession of men and women (and the vast majority were men) passing through the great thoroughares of London, so calm, and yet so determined, and we might almost say so reverent, ould help but feel that it was an era in English history, and a protest against vice and crime which could not be misunderstood and which dare not be disregarded.

The procession from the East End was headed by a brake, containing a band of boys rom Rev. T. Bowman Stephenson's "Childen's Home," and the tune they played most requently, and with significant effect, was "Home, Sweet Home." Another brake was illed with children in white, carrying white banners, bearing the words, "Shall the innoents be slain?" and "Englishmen, protect your daughters." Amongst many touching ncidents, we may mention that passing up Cheapside we were greeted by a poor blind woman standing in a doorway and waving a handkerchief. One could not help wonderng what tale of sorrow that poor sister of urs could tell, of wrong suffered by herself r others dear to her; or whether her symathy was elicited by thinking that they were ome mother's children if not her own.

In St. Paul's Churchyard a little pony-cart was driven into the line; it contained a father nd a boy and a little girl, with a tiny banner inscribed with "Save the Child!"

At Charing-cross the sight was magnificent. The procession from the East End, which exended as far as the eye could reach, and which had already been joined at Ludgate-ircus by one contingent from the North, and nother from the South-east, was brought to a stand, while the huge Southern contingent treamed up Parliament-street and took the ead. Two banners were borne by this detachment: "We want Justice for the Innocents," "Woe to the Murderers of the Innocents."

By the time the Eastern portion entered the Park, it seemed already full. The ascent to the Achilles statue, covered with men, presented a striking appearance. But the Park itself, black with people from Hyde Park Corner nearly to the Marble Arch, was one of the grandest spectacles our eyes ever rested on.

All the religious bodies were represented, but none more prominently than the great Wesleyan denomination. All the Temperance organisations, the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and indeed nearly every religious and social element in the metropolis was present.

We must note the excellent arrangements, carried out to a large extent by men of "the people," while a higher than human influence seemed to have superintended the wonderful order and punctuality with which the various contingents were united into one great procession, and then located in their appointed sites, without an accident or even a single untoward event.

The Times of Monday has a leader on the 400th anniversary of the battle of Bosworth Field, but none on the great moral demonstration of Saturday. It gives, however, like The Daily Telegraph, The Daily News, and The Daily Chronicle, a fair, though unsympathetic report, but which sufficiently contradicts the scandalous misrepresentation of The Standard, which describes the vast assemblage as consisting of a few thousands of "loiterers," "fools, and fanatics." If this vituperative old woman had never before established her claim to the nom de plume which a neighbouring print once conferred upon her, she has abundantly earned it now. For no nurse of the old school ever twaddled more mendaciously over her gin and tea than does the vulgar and anonymous slanderer who has the folly and impudence to describe as "amateurs in debauchery" such persons as Viscount Lymington, Sir William McArthur, M.P., Mr. Quintin Hogg, Rev. Bowman Stephenson, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., Rev. J. W. Horsley, Mrs. Fenwick Miller, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Mrs. Reaney, and a multitude of other noble men and women, and to liken them to "animalculæ darting about in a drop of dirty water." Amongst other drastic changes likely to result from the present much maligned movement may be one affecting the attitude of the People to the Press.

PREVENTION AND PROTECTION.

IT is almost impossible at a time when the public conscience is aroused, and such men as the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and S. Morley, Esq., testify to the need of immediate action, to give too great a prominence to all effort for the protection of girls. We trust you will allow us to bring before the public through your columns a few of the objects of the Young Women's Christian Association for Prevention and Protection.

The benefits it offers are these:—A Central Employment Agency, Boarding-houses, Women's Restaurants, Institutes and Evening-rooms, Benefit Society, a Free Library, and, by a net-work of branches all over the land, and affiliation with the International Union for young girls, it secures to its members kind and helpful friends as they go about from place to place.

We are now making special efforts to advertise the association at our railway stations. Courteous replies and kind permission have been received from several of the companies, and we hope by this means that girls starting for, or arriving in, London and other large towns, may at once take advantage of the benefits of the Y.W.C.A. The need for such protective measures has again and again come under our notice, and only within the last few weeks many have been sheltered and saved. We would, in consequence of this, urge on all parents, guardians, and teachers:

(1) Not to send any girl to London without communicating with our Travellers' Secretary, 17, Old Cavendish-street, who will engage to have her met at the station if due notice is given.

(2) We would advise no girl to answer any advertisement or accept any situation without consulting some competent person.

(3) We cordially invite any girl coming to our large towns to join the Y.W.C.A., by sending her name, address, and a subscription of 1s. to me, or to one of the Local Secretaries.

We feel sure that these and other advantages only need to be known to be appreciated, and yet, strange to say, it has taken thirty years of patient work in any way to rouse the men of our country, to take an interest in, and substantially to help forward work amongst young women. Thousands of pounds are lavished on Young Men's Institutes, Gymnasiums, and Homes, and the importance of such efforts are generally appreciated. But the fact that the very same donors who will give £1,000 to Young Men's Work will give £5 for Young Women's, or none at all, makes us appeal to the fathers and mothers of England—which need protection most? Who are most helpless in the hour of temptation?

Why should we be hampered so often and so long by the want of means in carrying out the plans and extending the usefulness of this association?

We shall be thankful to hear (1) From any ladies in sympathy with the aims and objects of the Y.W.C.A. who would join our band of workers in or out of London. (2) From any who have girls they would like to commit to our care. (3) From some who can, and will help us to start Station Lodging-houses, "Station Visitors" or Institutes in needy and dangerous localities.

M. Weitbrecht, Sec.,
On behalf of the Committee.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF LONDON METHODIST MINISTERS.

ON Saturday morning a very remarkable meeting was held in the Committee Room of the Mission House. Two days before, the ministers of every section of the one Methodist family in and around London, received from Dr. Stephenson an invitation to meet the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette and Mr. Percy W. Bunting. The notice was short, yet the large room was full. Certain well-known faces, always seen when earnest work is afoot, were absent, but that, under the circumstances, was inevitable, and enough were present to warrant us in describing the gathering as truly representing the ministry of united London Methodism. The President and Dr. Osborn were compelled to sympathise at a distance, and Dr. Rigg could only send a message regretting his inability to attend. A loud burst of cheering greeted a form once familiar, but, alas, now rarely seen and never heard. Though voiceless, it was something to see "William Arthur" hushed, yet outspoken; and to know that on the counters of the Book-room his rousing pamphlet lay in piles, waiting to go forth throughout Methodism—a new "Tongue of Fire."

Dr. Stephenson, who was voted in the chair, had just explained the circumstances under which he had ventured to call the meeting, when the now world-famous editor, following the better-known figure of Dr. Bunting's grandson, appeared in the doorway. It goes without saying that in a moment he was made to feel the warmth of a right hearty Methodist welcome. Those who can never hope to see him for themselves may be interested to know that there is nothing terrible or distinguished, or out of the common way, in any sense, in the editor's physique. A man of less than forty, spare, pale, hollow-cheeked, there is absolutely nothing to mark him off from the ordinary run of quiet, thoughtful, English gentlemen—until he speaks, and then in one moment all the mystery of his heroic deed, of the hatred with which he has inspired some, and of the enthusiasm he has kindled in others, is explained. In low, quiet tones, now quivering with emotion, and occasionally breaking into passion, but for the most part maintaining the level of a gently pleading earnestness, this Boanergic man poured out that which everyone felt was his soul. He, at least, does not speak out of feigned lips. Mistaken in his modes and words or not, he is simply incapable of hypocrisy, and could not, if he would, play with the moralities and eternities, either to win a fleeting name, or to fill an empty treasury. It was strange to hear facts and theories handled in a perfectly free and unconventional manner—there in that room where so many of the masters of theology, and morality, and philanthropy have met in days gone by. Irresistibly he forced us to think of the greatest Master of all, until his very voice we seemed to hear, sobbing in love and sorrow over the great sinful city. And did not our hearts burn within us while He spake to us through his servant, and opened to us the Scriptures? No one who heard this unique editor can ever forget his burning, pitiful words. I cannot profess to report them, still less can I hope to convey any adequate idea of the impression they produced. But here, hastily jotted down, are a few broken reminiscences which at least may help those who were present to recall that which they will desire to cherish as a life-long memory.

ADDRESS BY MR. STEAD.

"I wish," said he, "that I could persuade everyone of you to put The Pall Mall Gazette out of your head. If it be possible, forget the source from which these shameful facts have come to your knowledge, and deal only with the facts themselves as facts. If you cannot do this, if you must disapprove what has been done, or the way in which it has been done, or the phraseology in which the revelations have been presented; if you think decency has been outraged, and needless risk of corrupting public morals has been run, I am willing that you should at once pass a resolution condemning me and the Gazette in the strongest possible terms, provided that you immediately proceed to pass a second resolution to do that which the awful urgency of revealed and incontrovertible facts demands. Let me be the vilest rascal that ever walked God's earth, only do something. That which I have done cannot now be undone. Words spoken or written cannot now be unsaid. Omnipotence itself cannot make that which is, as though it had never been. Disown me as completely as you will, but, in God's name, deal with the thing itself. Leave me to the judgment of God. To Him alone I am answerable."

Then, with a touching pathos, which no words can describe, he asked, "What are you, the Christian ministers of the Methodist churches, going to do? Nothing? Surely you cannot, you dare not, be silent! A certain moral issue, never mind how, is definitely before you. In that moral issue I see the veiled presence of Christ. If we reject it we reject Him, and are none of his. Is it not a question agitating men and women, and even boys and girls, everywhere? Can you as Christian ministers refuse to lead the way and guide the movement? Am I not the son of a Dissenting minister? Was I not reared in a pure Christian home? Do I not know all the difficulty you feel in touching a question so abhorrent to all your most cherished tastes and traditions? Why have I dealt with it? Because I had unbounded confidence in the Christian Churches of our country. If the 'Maiden Tribute' had been published in France it could have done nothing but harm. Only in England could it have been published with safety. It was the deep consciousness of the hidden power of our English Christianity which inspired me to do this thing. You made it possible for me to break the silence. This revolt against impurity and crime is yours. And now I ask, are you going to lead us? I look back with reverence to the heroic age of our national history—not to the Crusaders, but to the days of the Puritans. Let us follow in the footsteps of our Puritan forefathers." Then, paying a beautiful tribute to the noble unconsciously Christian character of a great free-thinking chief under whom he once served, he added, "But how many of his set have come, or are likely to come to the front in this great movement? It is not to Freethinkers that we have to look for help in work like this, but to Christian men and women. If you want men who will be willing to go down into the streets and be kicked in the service of purity and sympathy with the fallen, you must not go to Freethinkers to find them. Roman Catholics will do it."

And at this point in this strange address, if Cardinal Manning had been present, he would probably have been astounded to hear the sound of a ringing cheer in the Methodist Mission House, as the speaker described his Eminence's enthusiastic sympathy with a movement which is wider than any sect or creed. "He believes more than we believe. But his feet are firmly planted on the fundamental truth which we all—Catholics and Protestants—hold that God made us and that we all have to answer to Him. As for this Hyde Park Demonstration, it is not got up by The Pall Mall Gazette, though we are glad to help it by all means in our power. It is to be the voice of no party, sect, or sex. It is the first attempt ever made on a large scale to infuse into the great amorphous mass of London life a living soul—a deep and bitter hatred of all impurity and crime, and a burning Christlike determination to uplift our social life from the shame into which it has fallen. I could wish that London might see the spectacle of every minister marching at the head of his congregation to testify once for all that these things must not and shall not be."

I have left no room to describe the singularly thoughtful and earnest address with which Mr. Bunting followed. Nor can I attempt to reproduce the conversation and free questioning which the Chairman invited, nor the many practical suggestions which were elicited. The results of the meeting were—(1) a resolution prepared by Rev. William Arthur. And (2) an agreement to ask, that as soon as possible after the settlement of the ministers who are appointed to new circuits, a united meeting may be held in City-road Chapel to consider what steps shall be taken by the different Methodist Churches to assist this great moral revolution.

As I write these last words, my pen lingers on the paper, and I long for the power to set down, in all its terrific force and yet heart-breaking tenderness, the editor's last word to the Methodist ministers. I can only say to those who desire to know what he said: ask any minister who was present to tell you the two stories, one of the girl whose mother knelt at his feet, only last night, imploring him to help her daughter "grievously afflicted" by a wealthy human devil; and the other of the woman who was a sinner, but is now waiting for the mist-cloud to pass away from the face of Him whom, long ago, she saw as in a dream. And when you have heard the stories, say whether any human being with a soul can wonder that a fire is burning on his heart.—Methodist Times.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE METHODISTS.

"HUSH or Speak Out?" Such is the striking and appropriate title of the pamphlet, published at 1d. by Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, which the Rev. William Arthur has just made his important contribution to the momentous question of the hour. An inscrutable decree of God has long silenced the voice of the most influential and beloved Methodist preacher of our time, but his prolific and cultured pen still speaks to attentive multitudes on both sides of the Atlantic. We are devoutly thankful that the most venerated name in modern Methodism will henceforth be associated with the greatest movement of our time. We are also very glad to observe that the names of the President and the ex-President of the Conference are in the first list of the honorary council of the Hyde-park demonstration.

If there ever was a moral crisis at which we have a right to expect our religious leaders to lead us, it is now. We hope that all who enjoy the honour and influence of high official position among us will take the earliest opportunity of publicly and emphatically declaring themselves on the side of morality and of God. We trust that the President of the Conference will do more than that. General Booth, Cardinal Manning, and even the timid and hesitating Archbishop of Canterbury, have issued solemn manifestoes to their several committees. A letter from the President to the "people called Methodists" would be as timely as its absence would be calamitous.

Dr. Bowman Stephenson's brave and admirable movement might be commended to universal sympathy, and our people might be urged to use their tremendous social and political influence on the side of Gospel morality. As Dr. Osborn powerfully stated in the debate in the Representative Session, this is a question on which there can be no difference of opinion among Christian men. By absolutely unanimous votes, both sessions of the Conference have pronounced in favour of the movement. And this unanimous declaration is the necessary corollary of the emphatic vote by which the Conference has condemned the Contagious Diseases Acts every year since they were enacted.

We publish elsewhere a brief report of the remarkable gathering of all the ministers of all the Methodist churches in London held in the Wesleyan Mission House last Saturday, to hear addresses from the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette and Mr. Percy Bunting. Some action will certainly follow that memorable meeting. But whatever else may be done or left undone, we have the supreme consolation of knowing that the most famous and successful Methodist preacher of our time has come out of his enforced retirement once more to use his "tongue of fire" on behalf of the kingdom of God. Of course Mr. Arthur displays none of the disgraceful half-heartedness which has spoiled so many of the utterances of prominent ministers of religion.

We are not surprised that the newspapers, when their puerile conspiracy of silence ignominiously failed, turned with savage rage upon The Pall Mall Gazette. It is, however, rather too outrageous for them to pretend that their rage is dictated by a love of chastity. They wantonly publish the details of the Divorce Court; they ardently defend the indelicate nudities of Royal Academicians; they write admiring reviews of novels which debauch the minds of boys and girls; they advertise and applaud the painted harlots that disgrace the theatres of London. And then they want us to believe that they are the apostles of purity! We greatly regret that The Spectator has joined their ranks. The Spectator is on many questions incalculably superior to the ordinary low-toned newspaper; but, unfortunately, on the subject of chastity The Spectator has always been hopelessly anti-Christian. When Florence Nightingale, Mrs. Josephine Butler, and other illustrious ladies raised a Christ-like protest against the Contagious Diseases Act, The Spectator published a long article in defence of these most filthy and blasphemous laws. A paper that is capable of doing that can no more understand Christian morality than a deaf man can understand music. As Mr. Arthur states in the pamphlet before us, those Acts "enrolled harlotry among the institutions of the State," and all who advocate them have upon the subject of chastity entirely abandoned and repudiated the teaching and example of our Lord. After that, we are not surprised that The Spectator should have upon this question so far lost all sense of decency and propriety as actually to scold the pure and illustrious ladies of England who, to their great credit, sent Mr. Stead an address of gratitude for his great services to the cause of spotless womanhood. We are not surprised to learn that The Spectator, after scolding the ladies of England, refused to allow one of the most distinguished of them, Mrs. Fawcett, to defend herself and her co-signatories in its columns. Once a journalist turns his back upon the teaching of Jesus Christ there is no depth of meanness and injustice to which he is not capable of descending. We have so great an admiration for the high Christian tone of The Spectator on other questions that its fatal treatment of this great movement fills us with deep pain. However, there is no subject that more severely tries the genuineness and healthiness of our Christianity, and we must be prepared for many failures under this searching and revolutionary test.

The discreditable letter which the Archbishop of Canterbury has just published indicates the violent pressure which is now being secretly exerted on behalf of conventional and heathen society. We deeply regret that the Archbishop has hastened to deprive himself of the honour which was within his grasp. All the world knows now that if Dr. Benson had been permitted to have his way the exposure would never have taken place, and Mr. Cavendish Bentinck would have been rejoicing that he had once more talked out the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. But the influences which surround archbishops do not touch the masses of the people. No one can stop the movement now, for God is in it. If the wicked suggestion of The Times that it should be stopped by force were adopted there would be a revolution. Mr. Arthur is profoundly right in his observation that the "governing classes do not at all see how deep the present feeling has struck;" and he adds a most wise and timely warning when he says, "Let them take heed to that feeling! it is strong enough to shake things we all wish to see erect." It is of the most urgent public importance that this momentous fact should be made manifest. Therefore, let every God-fearing Londoner make his way to Hyde Park next Saturday. There is already the prospect of the largest gathering that ever assembled there; it will also be the most Christian, and the most resolute.—Methodist Times.

MR. MOODY'S CONFERENCE AT NORTHFIELD.

[From our own Reporter.]

After a delightful railroad journey from New York, along the western shore of Long Island Sound, and up the Connecticut Valley, I eached the South Vernon depôt, late in the afternoon of Tuesday, August 4. Being my irst experience of the "steam cars," the journey of five and a half hours was well beguiled by the novelty of the surroundings. After changing cars at Springfield our route, for fifty miles, lay close by the beautiful river Connecticut, which eminded me very much of the Thames at Hampton Court.

At the South Vernon depôt, distant several miles from Northfield, I had the good fortune to be greeted by Mrs. Moody, who kindly drove across from her house in one of the airy vehicles designated buggies, which seem to be the fashionable mediums of locomotion in these parts. Mr. and Mrs. Sankey were also there to meet some Conference attenders, so that I speedily felt at home. This feeling was not diminished when, as we struck the central part of the long and straggling little town, we espied Dr. Pentecost standing in the porch of his house, robed in summer and very unclerical attire. I had some little difficulty in recognising him, but his hearty words of welcome soon certified to his identity. An hour or so later, Mr. Moody himself, who had been showing some friends over the grounds and premises of the Boys' Schools at Mount Hermon, on the opposite side of the valley, appeared on the scene, and my satisfaction was complete. Mrs. Moody had informed me by the way of the good health of her family, especially that of her son Willie, whose delicate condition last year, as your readers will remember, was a source of no small anxiety to his parents. I found him looking quite strong and robust; so much for the virtues of the rare Northfield air. Little Paul has grown somewhat, but has lost none of his quaint and quiet manners and ways of speech.

I must furnish some notes of Mr. Moody's third Conference, which was begun on Wednesday, August 5. The three large and handsome buildings which form the Young Ladies' Seminary, East Hall, Stone Hall, and Marquand Hall, are situated at the extreme north end of the town, and are the most prominent features in the landscape, seen as the traveller approaches by rail from the south. In the central building, Stone or Recitation Hall, the chief Conference gatherings are held, the others being devoted to the accommodation and entertainment of visitors. Of these there is a goodly show, coming from all points of the compass, and from Maine in the north to Georgia in the south. The English contingent, I am sorry to say, is deplorably small. As yet there are only two Londoners present besides myself, but several others are expected. The long distance and the treacherous "silver streak" no doubt seem formidable obstacles to some, but, like other difficulties, they would vanish on a nearer approach. Failing the presence of any member of the London Committee, the following letter of greeting was conveyed to Messrs Moody and Sankey; I am sure it expresses the sincere and heartfelt wish of thousands in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland:—

"Dear Friends,—It affords us very great pleasure to send to you on behalf of the London Evangelistic Committee our affectionate greetings on the occasion of the Conference at Northfield. We rejoice to know that you and many Christian friends are, if the Lord will, to hold a Conference in the early days of August at your beautiful home. We wish to assure you of the loving sympathy of many friends on this side of the sea who will be praying that a rich blessing may rest upon your meetings, and that you may have much spiritual refreshment and stimulus in the intercourse of Christian friendship.

"We trust that the Divine Spirit may graciously endue those who shall take part, so that every word spoken may be in full accordance with the Word of God, and may be not only helpful to believers for the life of faith, but be specially valuable to the many Christian workers who shall assemble with you eagerly looking for help in their service for the Master.

"With every loving wish for yourselves and your dear families and the brethren at the Conference, we are yours affectionately and faithfully, Hugh M. Matheson, Chairman.

Robert Paton, Hon. Secretary."

Mr. Moody has summoned some very choice spirits to his aid, in furnishing a spiritual feast for his guests. Among the ablest of his speaking lieutenants now at Northfield are Revs. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia; Dr. Pentecost, of Brooklyn; Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston; Mr. G. C. Needham, and others, whose names are less known in England. Of course, Mr. Sankey fills his familiar place at the organ, and the department of song is strengthened by the services of Professor Towner and his wife. Neither Mr. McGranahan nor Mr. Stebbins have made their appearance as yet, much to my disappointment. The many English, Scotch, and Irish friends of the former will hear with regret that he has been suffering somewhat severely from an attack of erysipelas. Major Whittle, who, I understand, is detained by mission work in Chicago, is also much missed by his many friends.

THE OPENING DAY.

Mr. Moody himself struck the right key-note to the ten days' proceedings, in a short but pregnant opening address on Wednesday morning. He cited portions from Ps. lxii. and cxxx. which exhort to waiting upon God, and express a confident expectancy of blessing, referring next to the complementary truth conveyed by Isa. xxx. 18. "Therefore will the Lord wait, that He may be gracious unto you . . . blessed are all they that wait for Him." Very earnest was the exhortation of the speaker, that nothing should be allowed to hinder the outflow of this desired and needed blessing. Among the probable hindrances that must be swept out of the way, he mentioned unbelief, prejudice, pride, conceit, indifference, and an unforgiving spirit. If we are to have power with God and with man as Christian workers, all these things must be far removed from us. A few touching words of request that prayer might be made on his own behalf, that while seeking to bless others he might be saved from neglecting his own vineyard, at once brought these introductory remarks to a close, and set a-flowing the fountains of spiritual refreshment that have not ceased since to pour out their reviving streams.

Dr. Pierson followed with a powerful address on being "Filled with the Spirit." In an outline report such as is here given, I can convey no idea of the nervous force and incisive power of the utterances of this well-instructed and experienced Christian teacher. I cannot call to mind any British prototype of this Philadelphian Doctor of Divinity, but he strongly resembles some of our best and most fervid Methodist preachers, though he is, I believe, a staunch Presbyterian.

The leading address of the afternoon meeting was one by Dr. Pentecost on "Strange Fire," suggested by Dr. Pierson's address, and founded on the fatal sin of Nadab and Abihu, recorded in Leviticus x. Fire, he said, as mentioned in the sacred record, is symbolic of the presence of God in his divine energy. In the New Testament it stands for the power of God the Holy Ghost, and the point strongly emphasised by Dr. Pentecost was the sin and danger of attempting Christian service in the mere energy of the flesh. The first disciples were commanded to wait for the enduement of power from on high, before they entered on the fulfilment of the Saviour's great commission. The command is just as binding now, and, if it is neglected, the result can be but disastrous failure, if not condign punishment, like that which fell on the sons of Aaron. Their offence at the opening of the legal dispensation was matched, at the commencement of the Gospel era, by the equally fatal sin of Ananias and Sapphira. God may not strike us dead for offending against his ordinance in this matter, but He will leave us dead, which is an almost worse fate. For a spiritually dead man or woman to be attempting active outward service for God, whether in the pulpit, the Sabbath-school, or elsewhere, is to be offering strange fire on his altar, and it is a sin from which the professing Church of our day sorely needs to be delivered.

With two such chief musicians as Mr. Sankey and Mr. Towner in our midst, it will be readily understood that we live and move in a very atmosphere of sweet and sacred song. For myself, I am free to confess that it is far more than worth the long journey from England to hear once again, and to feel the potent spell of, Mr. Sankey's matchless voice. Not a whit of his power to move the sensibilities, and touch the heart, and thrill the soul in heavenward aspiration has departed from him. On the first day of the Conference he sung, as solos, "Hide Thou Me," "While Days are going by," and, on the second day, "When the Mists have Rolled Away," and "My ain Countree," as only he can sing them. I am very thankful to be able to report a great improvement in his physical health from the comparative rest of the past winter and spring.

Professor Towner is the latest musical recruit that Mr. Moody has enlisted. He is a man of commanding presence, with the fine address and bonhomie of the true American, and with a voice of large compass and volume. I am informed that he excels as a teacher, in which capacity he is now successfully engaged at the Mount Hermon Boys' Seminary. His wife, who generally accompanies him in his public song, has a full rich contralto voice, so that they make a very valued addition to the evangelistic forces in this highly favoured spot. Mr. E. Parker has also been exercising his gifts in this direction when opportunity calls at the services in the evening, which are divided up into small sections at the various halls, and take the form for the most part of praise and prayer meetings.

THE SECOND DAY.

The second day of the Conference will certainly stand out in the memories of many as one of rich spiritual refreshment. Mr. Moody dug, as it were, an artesian well into the cool depths of the Bible by his opening address, and the stream of blessing bubbled up all day long. As, however, this address is already accessible ("How to Study the Bible," 1d. Morgan & Scott) in a much more extended form than we could possibly reproduce it here, we must content ourselves with its closing thoughts.

Besides the need of individual study there is a crying need in these days for more public exposition of the Word. On this point Mr. Moody remarked on the absence of Bibles from the pews in American churches, as compared with church attenders in Scotland. It was to him one of the most interesting sights possible to see the members of a congregation, such as that of Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow, down to the very children, with open Bibles, following the pastor's exegesis of the Word. As an illustration of the kind of preaching that is sure to interest and stimulate people, Mr. Moody repeated in his own peculiarly graphic way the description given him by a friend of a sermon by Dr. Bonar, on the fifteen days' visit of Paul to Jerusalem, when he stayed with Peter. In this sermon Dr. Bonar, giving reins to his imagination, pictured the friendly excursions which these two Apostles would make to the spots memorable in the life of our Lord, and the conversations that would ensue about the things that happened in the places when the risen and ascended Saviour was sojourning on earth. Mr. Moody was of opinion that many of our present day congregations are being exhorted into a state of hardened indifference. At least once every Sunday the preacher ought to give a solid and fresh exposition or opening-up of the Scriptures, that the people may be fed. A final word as to the importance of taking note of every good thing one hears, of passing them on to others, and of Bible marking, rounded off one of the most instructive and inspiring addresses I ever heard from Mr. Moody's lips.

Before leading in the singing of the appropriate hymn, "Wonderful Words of Life," Mr. Sankey read a letter by General Grant which seemed to come with extra timeliness and force at the time when the dead body of that distinguished man was lying in the nation's chief city awaiting his burial. It was written by the General as President of the Republic to a Sunday-school paper in 1876, the Centennial year of Sunday-schools. He said:—

"My advice to Sunday-schools, no matter what their denomination, is: Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of your liberties; write its precepts in your hearts, and practise them in your lives. To the influence of this Book are we indebted for all the progress made in true civilisation, and to this we must look as our guide in the future. 'Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.'—Yours respectfully,

"U. S. GRANT."

Dr. PIERSON supplemented the address of Mr. Moody, by an interesting statement as to the Book of Isaiah. The twenty-seven chapters, from xl. to lxvi., inclusive, he compared to three groups of nine precious gems, setting forth the glories of the coming Messiah. The central gem of the central group is in chapter liii., setting forth the vicarious sacrifice of Him who was to bear the sin of many, and make intercession for the transgressors. It is a singular thing, said Dr. Pierson, that the Christian religion has been attacked from many points, but never from the point of prophecy. The humblest believer could meet Ingersoll, or any other sceptic, however colossal in point of intellect, and however glib of speech, and repel his assaults by this one argument of the fulfilment of prophecy.

The same subject was continued in the afternoon. Mr. Wishart, Secretary to the College Students' Branch of the Y.M.C.A., made some very vigorous points with respect to the constant use of the Sword of the Spirit, as the most effective method of proving its efficacy. Rev. W. W. Clark, of Staten Island, followed with a most exhaustive and compendious address on the unity of the Bible in scope and purpose, and on the progressive revelation of God's will which it contains. Christ is the central thought around which the entire canon of Scripture revolves. He contended strenuously for the full and equal inspiration of all parts of the Book, and urged that greater attention should be shown to dispensational distinctions. Excellent contributions were given by Revs. S. W. Pratt, of Pittsfield; C. M. Southgate, of Worcester; and Dr. Pierson, who commended Bernard's "History of the Development of Doctrine in the New Testament" as the greatest book on the Bible, in his opinion, that has ever been written.

In the early evening a considerable party drove across to the opposite heights to see Mount Hermon Seminary. Mr. Moody accompanied the party, which, after an interesting inspection of the main buildings, gathered in the chapel where earnest prayer was offered that God's richest blessing might descend on the educational work carried on, which is soon to experience a large and important development. Of this I shall have more to say anon.

SINGAPORE. — Miss Sophia Cooke, of the Chinese Girls' School, Singapore, says:—"Our school is full; indeed we have more now than there is room for, but it is hard to turn any away. Our Christian young women have recommenced their Bible readings amongst their country-people, two days in the week are given up for them to visit in either town or country, wherever they can gain admission, and in most places they are kindly received. I am very thankful for copies of THE CHRISTIAN which I distribute amongst the Christian Chinese who understand English; also amongst our British soldiers and sailors, who are always glad to welcome them."

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

ENGLAND is deeply humbled; the wail of Christian people in her is so loud that the echo of it is heard the world over. The nation's indignation is roused, and all right-minded persons are resolved that the shame of leaving the young and innocent to be the lawful prey of scoundrels must and shall disappear.

Can I at such a time ask English Christians to think of another woe, happily not in their own land, and to pray for Spain? I think so; for praying is like giving. People who have learned to give are always the most ready to give, so those who pray about many things are best able to pray about many more. Let me then ask prayer.

First, that a gracious work of the Holy Ghost may begin now, and follow the tremendous scourge of cholera in this country; secondly, that it may please God, speedily, to remove the plague.

Though much is known in England respecting our distress, I would yet refer to a few facts: (1) The ravages of cholera in France and Italy last year cannot be compared to its desolating effects this year in Spain. For a long time the deaths reported have been between 1700 and 1800 daily. There are many towns in this country that do not count more inhabitants. It is as if every day one such town were wiped out of existence. Every week more than 30,000 are attacked, and above 12,000 die. The returns on July 31 showed that from May, 115,000 had been seized, and 34,000 died. As the mortality seems to range from 40 to 60 per cent. this number appears disproportionately small. During these eighteen days of August, there is reason to believe that 80,000 more have been seized and 30,000 killed; this brings the awful total to 200,000 cases and 64,000 deaths. Many believe that the numbers are greater. I will not detain the reader with harrowing details of villages and towns without doctors, drugs, nurses, or anyone to care for the sick, or the dying, abandoned by all, calling out for water, of the dead unburied, of scenes of ferocious cruelty. The blackest misery follows the plague. How many "cholera patients" would have been saved by a little food; as happened in Madrid, the doctor generously paid for some food to be brought, for the caso sospechoso was a case of starvation. Only God knows the extent of all this woe.

(2) There is as yet no turning to God. All the last fortnight the people who have any religion at all have been praying to the Saint whose special business it is to look after plagues and pestilences, "San Roque." His picture is advertised and sold as a preventive; others trust to his medals for preservation. In Murcia they hung out from the tower of the cathedral the old cloak of some virgin, and our chief paper spoke of it as the "flag of faith and hope." In Valencia there were extraordinary doings in connection with another Virgin, who "rarely goes out." She was carried through the streets with great pomp, all the people, like the Ephesians of old, praising their great Diana! The cunning of Rome is seen in that they hang out their holy rags, and carry about their miraculous image, like the heathens do, when the disease is abating. We know beforehand that all the glory will be given at best to God's creatures, not to Himself, but the multitudes will praise their graven images. Yet God, whose sun shines on the evil as well as on the good, and whose rain from heaven waters the just and the unjust, can, for his own sake and for Christ's sake, save us.

(3) Madrid escapes as by a miracle; a city packed almost up to the skies with people, blocks of buildings called houses, as full of human beings as anthills are full of ants; some houses with 300, 500, 700, or more people, all young, in and out by one street door! And the [in-]sanitary conditions such, that the wonder is that Madrid people are not dying by thousands, instead of by thirties and forties, or as accounts say, often only ten or fifteen a day. The peril is tremendously increased by the influx and passing of thousands of people from all the infested places. "Ah, wait until October," say some, "then Madrid will be as Zaragosa, or as Grenada!" Will it? But prayer to God is going up constantly in the name of Jesus. There are Christians in many of the places attacked since July 1, but I have not heard of anyone falling victim to the plague.

Yes, brethren and sisters, pray on every remembrance of Spain, for a visit of the Spirit of God resulting in the salvation of thousands, and for the removal of the disease speedily.

Yours, in the bonds of Christ,

ALBERT R. FENN.

Madrid, Cardenal Cesneros 55, Aug. 18.

Madrid, Aug. 21.—When I wrote the above, I had not heard of the death of any member of the various evangelical churches; but last night received a request for prayer from Sr. Sabio, the respected pastor of one of the churches of Saragosa, telling of the removal of his beloved wife, and also several of the members of the Church by the plague.

THE JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

DAVID SCHLOSS, M.A., presents, in pamphlet form a detailed account of the persecution of the Jews in Roumania, compiled from official and other authentic information, which is at once interesting and instructive. He shows that the present cruelties to which Israel's descendants are subjected are practised in flagrant disregard of the treaty of Berlin, which provides for the civil rights and religious freedom of aliens.

The following case of barbarity is vouched for by the writer, or it would certainly be doubted by many: "Very recently, a young Jewish cabman was pounced upon by some workmen, pulled from his box, dragged into an apartment, and flogged. His face was then daubed with various colours, and burnt in several places by vitriol, leaving marks that will probably never be erased. He was then released and kicked out of the place."

It may be that God will graciously overrule these sufferings of his ancient people, thus scattered and peeled, to drive them back to the land of their fathers, and thus fulfil his own promise. But that is no justification for the cruel treatment they are now receiving at the hands of their enemies, whom God the Avenger will surely judge. The pamphlet is published by D. Nutt, 270, Strand, W.C. 1d.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—Mrs. Birt has been very successful with her rescued children this summer, in Canada, having had the satisfaction of seeing them go off into comfortable and happy homes. The bare facts that many of these boys have come to the front in honourable positions, as ministers, lawyers, and tradesmen, and that the girls, who proved well conducted, have settled with good homes of their own, as they attained suitable ages, speak for themselves. Mrs. Birt also placed several young sons of gentlemen who wished to learn farming with specially clever farmers, and is willing to undertake two more. England is overcrowded, but in Canada work is soon found, and the young people are healthier and happier in providing for themselves instead of being dependent on their relatives here.

THE GOSPEL SHIP "ANNIE" is now on a mission tour round the north coast of France. A six-weeks' mission has been held off Brest by M. Vignal, of Paris, assisted by other gentlemen, which was marked with very gratifying results in the conversion of souls. One aged couple of eighty-three years of age were brought into the light. The Annie then proceeded to St. Malo. Here was encountered indifference from the people and opposition from the priests, but the latter are losing their influence, so that soon the meetings began to be well attended. The people are beginning to condemn all religious societies, and to say that they can live and die without religion or Christ. We find amongst those who do come to the meetings many who are seeking after this "new religion," and many who are afraid to leave the Catholic Church because of the priests, lest their children should be deprived of their education. The work goes on steadily, however, and we are greatly encouraged. Mr. Picot is carrying on the work among the French. The English meetings are also well attended; the sailors being pleased to hear the Gospel preached, and we have had the joy of seeing several conversions among them. This ship belongs to the Gosport and Portsmouth Seamen's Mission, and any help towards the carrying on of the work such as books, tracts, bags, &c., would be thankfully received by Mr. Henry Cooke, Belle-Vue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport.

READING THE APPOINTMENTS.*

By Rev. ALFRED J. HOUGH.

I WAS sitting in a wing-slip, close beside the altar-rail,
When the Bishop came in softly, with a face serene, but pale,
And a silence indescribably pathetic in its power,
Such as might have reigned in heaven through that "space of half an hour," Rested on the whole assembly as the Bishop rose and said:
"All the business being finished, the appointments will be read."

Not as one who handles lightly merchandise of little worth,
But as dealing with the richest, most important things on earth,
In the fellowship of Jesus, with the failings of a man,
The good Bishop asked forbearance—he had done his best to plan
For the glory of his Master, trusting Him to guide his pen, Without prejudice or favour. All the preachers cried, "Amen."

"Beulah Mountains—Henry Singer." Happy people, happy priest,
On the dainties of the Gospel through the changing year to feast,
Not a church trial ever vexed them, all their preachers stay three years,
And depart amid a tempest of the purest kind of tears.

"Troubled Waters—Nathan Peaceful." How that saintly face grew red,
How the tears streamed through his fingers as he held his swimming head,
But his wife stooped down and whispered—what sweet message did she bear?
For he turned with face transfigured as upon some mount of prayer.
Swift as thought in highest action, sorrow passed and gladness came,
At some wondrous strain of music breaking forth from Jesus' name.

"Holy Rapture," said the Bishop, "I have left to be supplied,"
And I thought—You couldn't fill it, Mr. Bishop, if you tried,
For an Angel duly transferred to this Conference below
Wouldn't know one-half the wonders that those blessed people know.
They would note some strain of discord though he sang as heaven sings,
And discover some shortcomings in the feathers of his wings.

"Grand Endeavour—Jonas Laggard." Blessed be the Lord, thought I,
They have put that Brother Laggard where he has to work or die,
For the church at Grand Endeavour, with its energy and prayer,
Will transform him to a hero or just drive him to despair.
If his trumpet lacks the vigour of the Gospel's charming sound,
They will start a big revival and forget that he is round.

"Union Furnace—Solon Trimmer." What a Bishop that must be!
They have got the kind of preacher who will suit them to a T,
Metho-Congo-Baptist-Uni—in one nature blithe and bland,
Fire or water, hell or heaven, always ready on demand.

"Consecration—Jacob Faithful." Hand in hand the two will go Through the years before them, bringing heavenly life to earth below.

"Greenland Corners—Peter Wholesoul"—but he lost his self-control, Buttoned up his coat as if he felt a cold wind strike his soul,
Saw the dreary path before him, drew a deep breath, knit his brows,
Then concluded to be faithful to his Ordination vows.

In the front pews sat the fathers, hair as white as driven snow:
As the Bishop read appointments they had filled long years ago,
Tender memories rushed upon them, life revived in heart and brain
Till it seemed that they could travel their old circuits o'er again.

"Happy Haven—Joseph Restful." How the joy shone in his face
At the thought of being pastor for three years in such a place!

"Hard-as-Granite—Ephraim Smasher." There the stewards sat in row,
And they didn't want that Smasher, and he didn't want to go.

"Drowsy Hollow—Israel Wakim." He is sent to sow and reap
Where the congregations gather in the interests of sleep.
As they sit on Sabbath mornings in their softly-cushioned pews
They begin to make arrangements for their regular weekly snooze.
Through the prayer a dimness gathers over every mortal eye;
Through the reading of the Scriptures they begin to droop and sigh;
In the hymn before the sermon, with its music grand and sweet,
They put forth one mighty effort to be seen upon their feet;
Then amidst the sermon, throbbing with the Gospel's sweetest sound,
They sink down in deepest slumber and are nodding all around.
But I guess that Brother Wakim, on the first bright Sabbath day,
When he preaches to that people, and is heard a mile away,
Will defy both saint and sinner on a breast to lay a chin
Till he strikes the strain of "Lastly;" and I'll warrant him to win;
For by all who ever heard him it is confidently said,
If 'twere possible to mortal he would wake the very dead.

* * * * * * * * *

Then a mist came o'er my vision as the Bishop still read on,
And the veil that hides the future for a moment was withdrawn,
For I saw the world's Redeemer far above the Bishop stand,
On his head a crown of glory and a long roll in his hand.
Round His throne a countless number of the ransomed, listening, pressed—
He was stationing His preachers in the City of the Blest.

Some whose names were most familiar, known and reverenced by all,
Went down to the smaller mansions back against the City wall.
One who took the poorest churches miles away from crowds and cars, Went up to a throne of splendour with a crown ablaze with stars.
How the angels sang to greet him—how the Master cried, "Well done!"
While the preacher blushed and wondered where he had such glory won.
Some whose speech on earth was simple, with no arguments but tears,
Nothing novel in their sermons for fastidious itching ears,
Coldly welcomed by the churches, counted burdensome by all,
Went up to the royal mansions and were neighbours to Saint Paul.

Soon the Master called a woman, only known here in the strife
By her quiet, gentle nature, though a famous preacher's wife,
Praised and blessed her for the harvests she had garnered in the sky,
But she meekly turned and answered—"'Twas my husband, Lord, not I."
"Yes," the Master said, "his talents were as stars that glow and shine,
But thy faith gave them their virtue, and the glory, child, is thine!"

Then a lame girl—I had known her—heard her name called with surprise,
There was trembling in her bosom, there was wonder in her eyes.
"I was nothing but a cripple, gleaned in no wide fields, my King, Only sat a silent sufferer, 'neath the shadow of thy wing!"
"Thou hast been a mighty preacher, and the hearts of many stirred To devotion by thy patience without uttering a word,"
Said the Master, and the maiden to his side with wonder pressed.
Christ was stationing His preachers in the City of the Blest,
And the harp-strings of the angels linked their names to sweetest praise
Whom the world had passed unnoticed in the blindness of its ways.

MRS. FISHER'S WORK AMONG GIRLS.

I OFTEN meet with respectable girls, who from various unfortunate circumstances are almost alone in this city, and who, from want of training, go into small situations and are turned away at a few hours' notice. In a city churchyard now converted into a pleasant garden with seats, I found a poor, heart-broken mother with her daughter, as she said, "homeless," as her step-father would not take her in again after leaving her situation, she had brought her some food there, and she had nowhere to go at night and no money to help her with. I took her at once to our "Welcome," and subsequently sent her to a "Servants' Home," in Blackfriars-road, where she was received till a home could be found for her, where she would be trained and fitted for service. We have recently taken 650 city business women to Epping Forest for some hours' fresh air, affording an opportunity for benefiting soul and body.

We have been greatly encouraged by the kindness of some Christian friends at Blackheath, who on various occasions have had over 200 to tea in lovely grounds with good drawing-room meetings, afterwards, resulting in many conversions to God, also in leading several who were brought to Christ last year to a fuller surrender to God. These blessed results have cheered our hearts in the midst of much discouragement. I am sure many need only to be reminded of the need, and the Lord will incline those who are interested in the spiritual and temporal welfare of our young women to come and see what there is to do, and also to help us by reading in the work-rooms or in any other way. Even the children could help us by sending us dried ferns, leaves, daisies, or other small flowers to mount on cards, on which we write Gospel texts. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Fisher, The Welcome, Crosskey-square, Little Britain, E.C.

CHURCH ARMY. — The Bishop of Ripon recently took part in the Church Army Meeting in Leeds, St. Alban's parish, and the Bishop of Manchester has just declared open the new circus at Preston for St. Thomas's corps. Captain Lowe of St. Stephen's, Nottingham, conducted a meeting outside Nottingham prison, while Joseph Tucker was being hung. About 10,000 persons were on the ground.

THE MASTER'S SICK CHILDREN.—Sir,—Will you allow me, on behalf of the children in the hospitals, to ask any readers of The Christian who may be able and willing to do so, to forward to me any old text, birthday, or Christmas cards, or scraps (plain or coloured, large or small), that they can spare, to assist in the filling of scrap-books, to be sent for the benefit of child patients to different hospitals. Any packet of scraps, however small, will be gratefully received by Geo. M. Basèbe, 9, Cross-court, Bow-street, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

THE season for the "Day in the Country" outings is now drawing to a close. As we have not been able to respond to quite all the applications that have reached us, we should be glad if our friends who purpose sending donations would kindly do so without delay.

We are, indeed, distressed by the painful intelligence contained in the following note :—

> "You will be grieved to hear of the death of Dr. Mackay, of Hull. With his wife and family he was staying at Oban, and has been preaching in the Free Church. I heard him twice last Sunday, on both occasions to crowded congregations. He has been in Skye during the week, and was to have returned yesterday, but when the steamer arrived by which he was expected, the sad intelligence was brought that, in attempting to step on to the boat at Portree, he fell between the boat and landing-stage. The skull was fractured, and death ensued. The body has not yet been brought here, and this is all the information we have at present. He was to have preached here to-morrow.
>
> "Yours sincerely,
> "Oban, N.B., Aug. 22." "S. M. Reanell.

Another friend writes that he lingered until Saturday, when he died from congestion of the lungs, through being in the water.

The following is from The North Middlesex Chronicle :—

> "Many of our readers will be startled when they learn that Mr. G. O. Barnes, the Mountain Evangelist of Kentucky, has joined the Church of England. He has no intention, however, of seeking holy orders, and proposes to evangelise exactly as he has hitherto done. Mr. Barnes's extremely novel reasons for this step are clearly set forth in a sixpenny pamphlet, 'Eureka, the Church of my Fathers." (Standring, 8 and 9, Finsbury-street, E.C.)

From a quantity of letters of the kind we extract the following touching sentences from one signed "Lucie." It is evidently written with difficulty, but seems to be, in any way, the cry of a broken heart :—

> "To Mrs. Booth.—Dear Madam, I now take the liberty of writing a few lines to you. . . . I cannot give my reasons, but after I read your letter I had such a longing to see you, that I might talk to you as a mother, only to lay my weary head upon your breast, and to go to sleep. . ."

E. D. M., writing from Clifton respecting "The Chained Nun" (No. 809), says :—

> "If the Bill for Conventual Inspection, brought so persistently and unsuccessfully by Mr. Newdigate before the House of Commons, had been passed, probably a state of things in nunneries would have been discovered as sad and shocking as that brought to light by the Commission of Inquiry of The Pall Mall Gazette.
> "The priests of Rome are as subject to passions and weaknesses as other men, and exposed to far greater temptations than most, being, by their Church, forbidden to marry, and every facility for an immoral life being afforded them by the existence of nunneries into which they alone have the right or power to enter, and the inmates of which are completely in their power. In this noble and determined effort for the better protection of women, shall we forget our poor forsaken sisters in convents? Will no one rouse the country on their behalf? Is there no help for such prisoners in England? Can none inquire into their case?"

We think the forward movement taken by the great Methodist Denomination so important, that as comparatively few of our readers will probably see The Methodist Times, we have reprinted at length two articles therefrom. This has necessitated the postponement of other valuable matter.

It would be most interesting to know what the Bishop of Cork thinks of the two sermons preached in the Cathedral by the Chancellor, and recently published for the edification of the general public.

The title selected by Dr. Webster for his remarkable pamphlet, "A Warning against Revival Meetings" carries one back to the beginning of the eighteenth century, and to the Bishop of London's "Observations upon the conduct and behaviour of a certain sect usually distinguished by the name of Methodists;" but, heavy and lumbering as was Gibson's style, the Bishop never forgot to be reverent, and one would vainly wade through his numberless and powerless compilations in the endeavour to find anything as surprising as some of the sentences of his would-be prototype.

Speaking of the struggle of "what St. Paul would call the natural man, to devise a Christianity which shall be independent of the historic forms of Christianity," Dr. Webster says that he finds it difficult to classify the efforts, but he afterwards reduces them to two classes, Doctrinal and Emotional. In the subdivisions of the Doctrinal he includes "Scripture words and the words of hymns, or some striking expressions of uninspired teachers," and the Emotional he separates into "five distinct species of shocks." In one of his two sermons the Chancellor has said that, perhaps, for aught he can tell, "God only can tell us all that we mean by 'recognition,' and that we shall never know the meaning of this word and of many other words until we see Him 'face to face,'" and it is fortunate that we are not left in doubt as to what the Doctor means by shocks, a reference to Newman's simple account of his conversion making it clear, and, if this were not sufficient, after an assertion that although Wesley insisted upon the absolute necessity of "this shock" he was shy in alluding to his personal experience of it, the Chancellor says that "in his journal, May 24, 1738, something like saying that he received the shock may be found."

And what was it in Wesley's case to which this irreverent reference is made? Here is the passage from Wesley's Journals :—"In the evening I went, very unwillingly, to a Society in Aldersgate-street, where one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change which God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation, and an assurance was given me that He had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death."

After this one almost fears to follow Dr. Webster any further. He goes on to say, however, "I believe it is the craving to receive these shocks, and to communicate them to others, that is the true secret of the popularity of what are called Revival Meetings," and one is not inclined to dissent from his view, but with our experience of the results, not only of the Moody and Sankey and other Revivals, but also of missions in the Church of which Dr. Webster is a dignitary, one cannot approve of the advice to "avoid these meetings as you would avoid poison."

Coming into Cork recently through the exquisite country which surrounds it on every side, passing through some of the narrow, reeking courts and alleys with which the city abounds, and making our way through some filthy streets of dilapidated houses quite unfit for human habitation, we reached the noble cathedral, passing on our way lines of whisky-shops, and an idler who was leaning against the wall of the close told us that the two recently-erected towers were called by the people "one Whisky and the other Porter." Great preachers such as Bishop John Gregg and Achilles Daunt, however, endeared Cork Cathedral to the hearts of many who in listening found life, and it is to be regretted that their mantle does not seem to have fallen upon the preacher we have quoted from.

Censorship is an exceedingly delicate and difficult function to exercise, when latter-day novels are its subjects. Mr. George Moore (himself the author of a volume of poems which The World tells us it characterised as "bestial") has written a pamphlet in which he asks, why should Mr. Mudie have excluded "A Mummer's Wife," and have given all the assistance which his organisation enables him to supply to the "scandalously licentious" "Nineteenth Century Romance" of Mr. Mallock, and the "indescribably repulsive" "Foxglove Manor" of Mr. Buchanan, which, as well as Mrs. Campbell Praed's "Nadine," he would have been a fortiori under a solemn obligation to taboo. It is evident that those who wish to preserve the purity of their households must themselves establish a very careful censorship of the books which come into their homes. To exorcise the terrible but true story of Modern Babylon, and to allow such novels as the above, is a very flagrant illustration of straining out a gnat and swallowing camels.

Rev. J. D. Pearse, a Congregational minister of Sheffield, has, in a paper that appears in The Nonconformist, struck a right note. He asks an explanation of the confessed spiritual feebleness of the churches. He boldly admits the faint relish of church members for spiritual food, their low ideal of Christian character, and their powerlessness in their present state to grapple with the irreligion of the day.

Such views will be denounced as gloomy and one-sided, and so long as counter statements are listened to, the call for repentance and thorough reformation will be in vain. The great difficulty before all churches will be to shake off the paralysing ascendency of men who are satisfied with things as they are. At present this difficulty is very serious. The voice of those who call for change is rather stifled than pondered, and revivals of religion do not come unless there are humiliations before the Lord.

The above-named minister lays special stress on the necessity of making provision for real Christian fellowship. He would have arrangements instituted for mutual edification, so that churches should not entrust one man only with this service of teaching the true type and standard of Christian life and experience. The Nonconformist speaks of this suggestion as wanting in novelty. Harder things will be said of it. But if a church would risk these criticisms, boldly disregard the objections of the lukewarm, and carry it out, the suggestion would prove that reform of modern church life will come in this direction. "Exhort one another," saith the Spirit.

The controversy that has been carried on in regard to the Hospital Nursing question reveals an attitude of literary men in relation to Christianity that is an ominous sign of the age. According to them High Church teaching or Low Church, an Evangelical or Unitarian conception of Christ's person and work, are equally Christian. Nay, Theism or Agnosticism point to unimportant distinctions, provided there be sincerity. There is more of deadly peril in this new literary attitude towards Christianity than in the old hostility.

M. Pilatte, the editor of the French journal, L'Eglise Libre, is a veteran Protestant minister, who was under the ban of the police for his courageous strictures during the years of the last Empire. He has lately commented upon M. Ferry's recent speech touching Madagascar, to the effect that "superior races of the world have rights over inferior ones." He vehemently protests against such statesmanship, and such morality. It would give the right to any nation which, like the Chinese, assumed superiority, to trample out the natural rights of other nations. It is well that a brave Christian man thus rebukes diplomatists, and that love of self in defiance of all scruples, which is foretold to be a mark of the last days.

Our last issues have contained notes on the way God is answering prayer in the readiness of the people of China and Japan to listen to the Gospel. It is the same in India. At the Wesleyan Conference, Mr. Jenkins reported the result of an official tour he had made. He was altogether unprepared for the progress that met him in every direction. Native churches were influential, supporting their own pastors, and sending out the Gospel in the regions around them. He declared his conviction that in every part of India Christ is drawing all men to Himself.

Turning from the East to Africa, it is impossible for those who are tracing the movements of the risen Christ in the earth to be unawed at the contemplation of a territory opened at every point to missionary operations, and which contains 1,300,000 square miles. The Congo flows there over more than 3000 miles. There are freshwater lakes, rich soil, all natural productions, and forty millions of people. All these in ignorance, and cruel outrage, are stretching out their hands unto God; and this enormous area for Christian missions has been brought within view during the last few years. We are glad to note an ordination last week of six Baptist missionaries for this "new-found world." See, however, the letters on p. 14.

A Methodist Bishop, says The Nashville Christian Advocate, related "that an old class-leader in New York City opened class one night, and looking around, saw that one boy was absent. He laid down his hymn-book, took his hat, and with streaming eyes said, 'Brethren, sing and pray while I go to find that lost lamb.' Soon he returned, beaming with joy, with the absent youth. That lost lamb became the Bishop who told the incident."

An American paper says: Some Christians are like sponges. They go to church, suck up all the happiness and emotion they can, and then lie in the sun during the week and dry out.

Another declares wrong-doing to be so common that when a great many conversions are reported without any notable case of restitution, the fear may be reasonably indulged that the work has not been deep enough. We fear both sides of the Atlantic are much the same in these respects.

Eleven ways are suggested by The Advance by which a minister may be broken down in spirit and ruined in influence:—Go to church only occasionally, and when you go, go late; take no part in singing, nor in following the Scripture-reading, but keep up whispering. Find all the fault you can. Point out his deficiencies before your children and others. Don't aid his work, but despise his lack of good sense. Tell tales to him about the people, and their criticisms about him. Tell how much his predecessors were thought of. Keep away from all week-day meetings. Get up gaieties, particularly some entertainment near the communion season. Require him to be present everywhere. If he preaches at home, insist on an exchange; and if abroad, complain that he is never at home. Keep back his salary. Keep talking about "general dissatisfaction." Patient continuance in these practices will surely drive away both the Spirit of God and the minister of God.

"A house that is divided against itself cannot stand." A leading Roman Catholic review this month has the two following contradictory passages, which certainly do not point to that unanimity of opinion of which Roman Catholics boast:—"A good knowledge of Holy Scripture is a desideratum among Catholic children for many reasons." "God has also given us freewill, so that we may or may not choose to pursue the end for which He created us. If we wish to do his will, we want a guide, which cannot be conscience, as it is too subjective and liable to err, nor the Bible, for it is hard to be understood and needs an infallible interpreter."

The same review, in a paper upon General Gordon, contains an expression of "intense regret that such a man lived and died outside the Church of God," and, after asserting that he would eagerly have grasped at the Church's teaching, if only he had "had the opportunity of appreciating its Divine beauty," the writer goes on to say, "but it was not so to be. It was the will of God that Gordon should live and die a Protestant." In other words, upon the writer's own showing, it was the will of God that Gordon should die "outside the Church of God!"

Remarkable, however, as this may seem, it is excelled by something which follows:—"But, Protestant though he was, the Catholic Church has a right to claim him as her own, since all are hers who have the love of God in their heart and make it the object of their life to follow wherever they believe that God is leading them." If this be so, the Reformers and the noble army of martyrs who died in the fires lighted by Rome, were Romanists, because, undoubtedly, they, followed where, at any rate, they believed God was leading them. One might laugh at such logic, were it not for the painful fact that the review which circulates it furnishes mental food for grown men.

Coleridge, writing in 1833, said, wisely enough, "there should be no party politics in the pulpit, to be sure," and the remark is one which might with advantage have been inwardly digested by the Vicar of Plumpton, who, in issuing an address to the electors of Cumberland, says, "Sons of toil, do not in politics trust a Tory. No, not if he came to you in an archangel's garb and on bended knee before God's high altar swore by the sign of man's redemption that he meant you well."

No wonder that the Bishop of Carlisle has protested against the "monstrous utterances" which characterise Mr. Kennedy's address, and especially against one in which the Vicar advises the electors to use deception, and, if necessary, tell a lie, and has appealed in very plain language against teaching which is perhaps aptly designated "hateful counsel." No "legal definition of the limits of utterance which may be permitted to a clergyman" is necessary in a case of this kind, though the Bishop seems to be in doubt upon the point: a simple comparison of these utterances with the teaching of Christ is all that is required.

The necessity for Christians to take an active part in politics has been clearly shown by the difficulty with regard to the passage through Parliament of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. The Bishop of Durham has said that "our legislators, being men, legislated in the interests of men," and one does not like to concur; but when he adds, "here is the strength of the agitation for women's suffrage," we can heartily agree with him, and we hope that the fact will be remembered by Christian electors.

The Vicar of Stratford-on-Avon has thrown open the Vicarage gardens on Sundays to all the parishioners, and has invited those who have no gardens, and who work all the week, to make use of his. It is not difficult to imagine that the Vicarage garden at Stratford may become a formidable rival to the public-house, and it is to be hoped it will be found that plenty of men and women will find their way through the garden to the House of God.

More than one correspondent urges that women should dress modestly. Do mothers, or girls themselves, forget that conspicuous attire can only be interpreted as an endeavour to attract the attention of men? What wonder, then, if those attentions should be of a disagreeable and evil character?

A few days ago we met a teacher with her scholars out for their annual holiday. The lady was quietly dressed, with the exception of a heavy gold chain and valuable pair of earrings. In other cases excess may be seen in dress if not in jewellery, but in any case the effect on the children cannot but be prejudicial.

DEATHS.

On Saturday, August 22, at Partree, the result of an accident, Rev. Dr. W. P. Mackay.

On Sunday, August 23, at Cupernham, Bromley, the Rev. S. Borton Brown, B.A., aged 55.

THE EFFINGHAM TRAINING HOME has for its object the preparing of girls for service, and teaching the rudiments of housework and simple cookery. Scriptural instruction is regularly given and facilities afforded for keeping up the knowledge acquired at school. Those who are acquainted with the work of similar Homes, and know the dangers to which the elder girls in labouring families are exposed, will appreciate this preventive effort. There are still a few vacancies for girls between the ages of twelve and sixteen on payment of £12 a year. Particulars may be obtained from Mrs. Henderson, Effingham, Crawley Down, Sussex.

MISSIONS ON THE CONGO.

DEAR SIR,—By the last Portuguese mail I wrote a short note re self-supporting missions in Central Africa.

Since then, I have seen the letters in THE CHRISTIAN of Bishop Taylor, dated from St. Paul de Loanda, March 18 and 24, in one of which he states "that he has not changed his mind at all."

I now send you some facts with regard to this part of Africa—viz., the statistics of the two missions at present on the Congo.

Of one mission, the English Baptist Mission (Mr. Comber's), nearly one half of those sent out have died; of the other, the "Livingstone Inland Mission," nearly one-third. I have not counted two children, born out here in the latter mission, and buried here.

And I think that if published they will cause many in Europe and America to change their minds with regard to such a mission, and if women and children are kept out here, I think "indiscreet" would be too mild a term to use. I think it is criminal, and I know that I have the mind of Europeans out here when I thus write.

I do not write against Africa. I have taken the country myself as a man takes a wife, "For better, for worse." I have now been here four years, and hope to spend my life here. Neither do I write against Christian missions in Africa. I believe that if any Christian doubts that the time of Africa's visitation has come, he fails to read the "signs of the times."

But let the work be done by men and women who know the truth, and who "count the cost," and let the Church of Christ support them in their work. Let us have no "cruel cheapness," no "bitter cry" in this work. "Positions various, sacrifices equal." If men will come, let those at home support them.

I pray you to publish this letter and these statistics. When such missions are started the Christian Press applaud, advertise, and write leading articles upon them, but when they fail it is not recorded.

Five missionaries came out here from America in January with the same idea. They were dependent upon white people out here. One died, three returned, and one is for the present with the Livingstone Inland Mission.—I am, dear sir, very faithfully yours,

CHARLES E. INGHAM.

FAITH v. PRESUMPTION.

DEAR SIR,—Under the above caption you were pleased to republish an article in THE CHRISTIAN for June 25, written by me for The New York Witness.

One of the most convincing evidences of the fallacy of disregarding the use of means in sickness has just come to hand from the pen of Bishop William Taylor at Loanda, under the date of May 15, 1885. The letter appears in The Christian Standard for July 11.

I feel almost led to use the words of the Lord Himself to my brethren, and ask whether, having eyes they see not, and ears they hear not, and do not understand.

In my letter, which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN for June 25, I mentioned how Dr. Summers our late student, had written me of some ignoring the use of means, &c. Now we have a bare statement of simple and striking facts from such a man as Bishop Taylor. God grant that his children may have eyes to see and hearts to understand, and not to be in continued ignorance of Satan's devices to deceive. In some way or other he will devour, and while it is still true that he goeth about as a roaring lion, it is also true that he goes about as a shiny sneaking serpent, lying in wait to deceive, and worse still, as an angel of light.

There seems, also, to be something peculiarly instructive, not only to those interested in missionary effort, but to the medical profession, in the experience of Bishop Taylor's party. He states that the young men between the ages of twenty and thirty years have all been attacked, just the ones we might have supposed would have escaped, while the children and their parents, among them weak women, have almost entirely escaped; and the bishop himself, at sixty-four years of age, has not been sick at all. The bishop's party of over forty persons, of all ages and both sexes, and exposed to the same circumstances, seems likely to bring to light knowledge that will be of untold value to all parties interested in the welfare of the "Dark Continent."

Of course it would be premature to form a conclusive opinion with such limited data as we possess at present, but it has occurred to me that we may yet discover that there is something in the physiological condition of man, between fourteen and thirty years of age, that unfits him for exposure to "Afric's sunny clime," and that we must send people out either before or after that period.—Yours in the Master's service,

New York. GEO. D. DOWKONTT.

LETTER FROM BISHOP TAYLOR.

Loanda.

We now have to report the sad news of the death of Charles L. Miller, of Baltimore. He was a young man possessing a splendid constitution, perfect health, holy in heart and life, beautiful in person, loved by all who knew him, and gave great promise of long life and usefulness as a missionary in Africa. On the 9th of April he had a slight attack of African fever, and would not allow God to cure him in any other way than by a direct miracle, without even a teaspoonful of warm tea to start perspiration. For sixteen days the fever, unchecked, consumed away at his vitals. Rev. A. E. Withey and wife had his bed moved into their room, and gave him all the loving attention that they could have given their own son. At midnight of April 25, Brother Miller said, "O Brother Withey, I am choking; call Dr. Summers to come quickly!" His fever, by ordinary treatment, was broken in two or three days, but the recuperative power of his system had been destroyed. He lay in utter prostration of body and delirium of mind for twelve days, from April 25 to May 7, and died and was buried on the 8th in the beautiful English cemetery of Loanda.

Less than half of our number only have been attacked by fever. All these, who accepted the services of one of the three able physicians God has given to our party, soon recovered. Two young men besides Brother Miller refused to take medicine till death stared them in the face. They have been down five or six weeks, but we still have hope of their recovery. Two or three have been kept back by diarrhœa.

Our children and their fathers and mothers have got on beautifully, and no fever among them worth mentioning; but all our young men, except myself, have had a turn of fever—grand young men, and many of them will make grand records for God here, I believe. But, thus far, the fathers and mothers of over thirty years and their children from their teens down are best adapted to this climate. Wm. H. Mead, with wife and six children, has not had a case of fever in his family, and his wife, a delicate-looking sister, has had better health ever since she started in this expedition than she has had for ten years before. I wish I knew where to find forty such families for Africa.

Our people here are full of good cheer, though a few are yet confined to their rooms. The "sickly months" are now passed, and with the healthy season before us we expect in ten days, by the next steamer the Coanza, to proceed inland. We shall, however, leave the families and ladies here till an advance party of us shall go on and select a few stations and build some shanties, and then have them follow on.

The Governor has returned. He and his secretary came to our preaching service on Sabbath evening. The Governor is very kind to us, and will give us as many industrial school farms as we may choose to select in Angola. We will accept a few on our line of march for the far interior, and thus be able to keep up communication with our base, as I hoped before leaving the United States.—Your brother, WM. TAYLOR.

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY PIONEER.—Intelligence has been received by Rev. J. T. Graham of the death of Mr. James Roxburgh, engineer, at Lake Tanganika, Central Africa. Mr. Roxburgh was selected by the London Missionary Society at the close of 1882 to take out and construct their mission steamer Good News to sail on the above lake. This, we believe, he has accomplished after overcoming many difficulties. It is supposed he has fallen a victim to repeated attacks of fever. The following tribute is paid to his memory by the secretary of the London Missionary Society: "No braver or truer Christian worker has ever been in our ranks. The spirit expressed in his letters has been such that we have many a time thanked God for sending us such a man. He has done a most valuable work for Christ and Central Africa."

BRISTOL ORPHAN HOUSES.

IN reading the forty-sixth annual report of these divinely owned institutions it is evident that the general interest in the institution remains unabated. Mr. Muller says, "Through God's especial kindness, the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad, has been upheld to enter upon its fifty-second year. As time passed on we have had, year after year, abundant cause for praise and thanksgiving, but rarely has this been the case more than during the past year. In this report the reader will find instance upon instance as to how our prayers have been answered, though we have had repeatedly to exercise faith and patience for a long time."

Almost an entire page is devoted to an enumeration of what has been accomplished numerically through the various departments of this wonderful work. Commencing the year with a balance of about £500, no less than £41,558 has been sent, during the past twelvemonth, to this beloved servant of God, who, in giving an account of his stewardship, intersperses practical remarks, "intended for the spiritual benefit of the reader." The goodness of God, in removing the typhoid fever from their midst, is gratefully recorded. Also the preservation of the buildings from fire, and the evident working of the Spirit of God in the schools and among the orphans. "And lastly," says Mr. Muller, "I would publicly express my gratitude to my heavenly Father, for continuing to me such a good state of health as that I am scarcely at all hindered in service for the Lord, and am able to work with my head and pen with as much ease as I could sixty years ago, besides having far less difficulty with regard to my voice and chest in preaching, although, on September 27, I shall complete my eightieth year, if life be continued to me."

The benefit received through reading these annual reports is described by one of the subscribers, who says: "A few days ago I received your last report, which is more faith-strengthening and soul-refreshing than many a sermon." The following letter is also remarkable, as written by a subscriber living in Vienna: "There is a child in this city, only ten years old, who recently got one of your biographies or reports, and, after reading a portion, he has ever since been occasionally heard to pray, 'God, teach me to pray like George Muller, and hear me as Thou dost hear George Muller.' He desired to become a preacher, but his mother objected. He is, however, now undergoing preparatory training."

The writer's remarks on systematic giving, which practice he strongly urges, are very valuable. Since 1830 he has had no stipend or salary as pastor or director, but has obtained everything he needed for himself and family from the Lord, simply in answer to prayer and faith. "I speak of my temporal necessities to the Lord only, and He puts it into the hearts of his children, in various parts of the world, to supply my need. Thus I have been going on for about fifty-five years, and to the praise of God I must say that in his faithful love He has ever been mindful of me."

During the year more than one hundred thousand copies of Bibles, Testaments, and portions, have been sold, or given away among the poor. The Sunday and day schools, numbering eighty-five, entirely supported by the funds of the Institution, are not only well sustained but are enjoying much of the Divine blessing. More than ever has been done of late toward aiding missionary work, more than £6000 having been devoted to this object during the year. That the general education of the orphans is not a whit behind other similar institutions is seen by the inspector's report. "As regards the boys, hundreds of them have now a business of their own, some are partners in large houses of business, a considerable number have become teachers, and many are preachers of the Gospel."

All communications should be addressed to Mr. Muller, the New Orphan Houses, No. 3, Ashley Down, Bristol.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

DEAR SIR,—The following brief reports have reached us from different friends who are working amongst the children at the seaside:—

Llandudno. — Mr. E. Arrowsmith writes:—On Sunday afternoon, August 16, we had a grand service in the Happy Valley, about 700 children and quite double that number of adults being present. After the service, a collection was made for the day-in-the-country fund, resulting in £11 10s. 9d.

Major Evered Poole had a meeting for men only in St. George's Hall in the evening. A large number were present, and a great impression made by his stirring and manly words. During the last fortnight 110 have joined the Children's Scripture Union.

Llanfairfechan. — The first services held on August 13 were well attended. The visitors seemed pleased to come, and several at once offered to assist in the work.

Penmaenmawr.—Meetings have been continued daily since August 10, there being good attendances, notwithstanding the gusty weather. There is very much to encourage us to hope for a great blessing.

Beaumaris.—Two of the party have gone over from Llandudno from day to day to conduct an evening service here.

Colwyn Bay:—Mr. Kingdon, assisted by other University men, have had very fair attendances of children and adults. The weather has sometimes prevented out-door work, but an iron room has been utilised when this was the case.

Rhyl. — Messrs. Hamilton, Bellingham, and Paterson are much encouraged by the meetings here, and the interest shown not only by children but by elder people.

Brighton.—Mr. H. W. Figgis says:—On Sunday afternoon quite 1000 children were present as well as many adults. At the evening service eighty remained for conversation. On Monday, over fifty of us drove to Rottingdean, five miles off, and had tea on a lady's lawn, whose guests we were, afterwards having a service there and subsequently another on the beach, attended by 150. On Saturday we have a flower and toy service for the local children's hospital. A large number have joined the Children's Scripture Union.

Tynemouth.—Rev. F. Hodgson Jones says:—Commenced here with good drawing-room meeting, some sixty present. This morning (Tuesday) at least 600 on the beach; both children and workers seem enthusiastic for the services.

Aberystwith.—Mr. Josiah Spiers reports:—We had to move our prayer-meeting into the Town Hall, as eighty-five came. In the evening every seat was filled at the children's service. Wrote a text yesterday afternoon, 145 feet long, "Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." Sunday evening we had an immense crowd, quite 1000 there. This morning (Tuesday), one of the largest morning services I have ever known.

Bridlington.—Mr. G. A. King:—Services well attended by about 300 children; bi-weekly meeting for girls crammed, about sixty in our drawing-room. Boys' meeting twenty-five to thirty. Good Blue Ribbon meeting last night. About seventy new members for the Children's Scripture Union. Sports well attended.

Ventnor.—Messrs. E. J. and T. C. Church say:—The services here have been fully maintained. The audiences are increasing greatly, and the interest very marked.

Dover.—Mr. G. H. Chaplin:—On Sunday we had a good attendance on the beach; not less than 300, including adults.

Worthing.—Rev. S. L. Dixon is having services each day, which he reports well attended. The interest evinced most encouraging, and we trust that the Lord is giving us much blessing.

Ilfracombe.—Mr. W. R. Moore:—Our "Happy Gatherings" on the Wildersmouth Rocks are still well attended by young and old. At our Flower Service last Wednesday we had 440 bunches of flowers, and twenty baskets of fruit, which we distributed amongst various hospitals.

There is deep cause for thankfulness that such earnest work is undoubtedly being done. Not a few hearts are glad with a new-found joy. We still ask your prayers for this important work.

Yours very faithfully,
T. B. BISHOP, Hon. Secretary.
H. HANKINSON, Secretary.

MEMORIES OF BUNYAN AND COWPER.

BY REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

ONE morning, not long ago, accompanied by my wife, I left St. Pancras Station, and in an hour the train rolled into Bedford, forty-nine miles distant. We were driven to the beautiful house of a Christian lady at Pavenham where we had some refreshment. Then we returned to Bedford and paid a visit to Rev. Mr. Brown, who is engaged in writing a life of the famous John Bunyan, whose "Pilgrim's Progress" is so well known to most English and American children. Mr. Brown showed to us a can that Bunyan used to carry more than 200 years ago. We also saw the records of the Baptist Church of which he was the pastor, and where his handwriting frequently appears. In those days the term "Reverend" was not in common use among Dissenting pastors, and in the record of his death he is described as "Dear Brother Bunyan." We read the record of the church vote by which he was appointed pastor while he was in prison. His "Grace Abounding," and other works had been already written within the prison walls, and Bunyan had become well known as a Christian teacher. The people, therefore, resolved to have him as their pastor as soon as he was released. We also saw the monument erected in 1870, by the Duke of Bedford, to Bunyan's memory.

After looking at other places in Bedford associated with the wonderful life of the great dreamer, we took train for Olney, twelve miles distant, which is so well known as the residence of the poet Cowper. Making our way from the station to the poet's home, we fell in with one of the wardens of the church of which John Newton was once rector. This friend entertained us with some facts relating to the poet's life which we did not know before. I asked him whether it was true that Cowper once hired a cab with the intention of drowning himself, and ordered the cabman to drive to the river Ouse. He said it could not be true, because there had never been any cabs for hire in Olney. He gave us the authentic version of the story, which was that Cowper, when in London, asked a cabman to drive him to the Thames. The cab had proceeded some distance when it came to a standstill. The poet put his head out of the window and called to the driver, "Why don't you drive on?" The man tartly replied: "I do not know, unless it be that the devil is either in the horse or in the cab." Cowper evidently came to the conclusion that the devil must be in the cab trying to entice him to throw himself into the Thames, for he told the cabman to drive back to his home. It is said that on returning home his attention was drawn to the passage in Zech. xiii. 1: "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness," and he wrote the renowned hymn:—

> "There is a fountain filled with blood,
> Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
> And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
> Lose all their guilty stains."

Ever since my boyhood, I have had a great desire to visit the home of Cowper, and of his friend, John Newton. Even before I cared to read the lives of these good men, my dear mother would often tell me about them, and I became deeply interested in all that related to them. To-day my wish has been gratified. I have with my own eyes seen the spots where these two friends wrote and spoke words that have helped thousands of children as well as grown-up people to lead happy and useful lives. To-day we sat in Cowper's little summer-house. We found it covered with the names of persons from all parts of the world, who have at some time made a pilgrimage to the spot. Among others I saw the names of Hugh Miller, the famous Scotch geologist, and Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith of America.

This summer-house is in the garden, behind the house in which the poet lived for twenty years. He says, in a letter to his friend, Joseph Hill: "I write in a nook that I call my summer-house, not bigger than a sedan-chair. The door opens into the garden, now crowded with pinks, roses, and honeysuckles; and the window looks into my neighbour's [John Newton's] orchard. Here I write all that I write in the summer time. It is secure from all noise, and a refuge from all intrusion." We were told that there the poet wrote "John Gilpin," and his famous poem "The Task." When a boy this poem was one I loved to read. "The Life of John Newton" was another book that my mother encouraged me to read. Mr. Newton's godly mother prayed for him, till at last, after many wanderings, he wrote the well-known hymn beginning—

> "In evil long I took delight,
> Unawed by shame or fear,
> Till a new object met my sight,
> And stopped my wild career."

It was at the invitation of Rev. John Newton that Cowper went to Olney to reside. When the two men were writing their Olney hymns they must often have passed to and fro through the gateway that led from the one garden to the other. Cowper was called by his neighbour "the patron of hares," because of his fondness for these shy animals. In a poem addressed to one of these creatures he says:—

> "I kept him for his humour's sake,
> For he would oft beguile
> My heart of cares that made it ache,
> And forced me to a smile."

From Olney we drove to Weston, where Cowper lived after his friend, John Newton, removed to London. The poet describes it as one of the prettiest villages in England. We found the house in which he lived; it is in the possession of Christian people, who showed us everything about the place. The first question asked us by the old lady in the house was:—"Do you know Mr. Moody?" When I replied that I had known him almost since we were boys, and that two of my nieces had been teachers in his schools, she took me warmly by the hand and said, "I knew him when he was holding meetings at Croydon? Give my love to him when you see him." We saw the various points of interest that surround the house where Cowper lived and wrote, and we came away greatly pleased that it had been our privilege to visit these places so dear to the memory of all who have received benefit from the precious experiences that are recorded in the "Pilgrim's Progress," and in the poems of the sweet singer of Olney.

One important lesson I should like my young friends to learn from the life of Cowper. When he was busily engaged with his productions he was cheerful and happy; when he ceased active work he grew sad and wretched. If young Christians would be happy Christians, let them be actively employed in some good work for the Master.

DEACONESSES FOR EAST LONDON.

IN a recent issue of Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo pleaded earnestly with educated Christian women, freed by the absence of home ties for peculiar service, to give themselves to mission work in East London in one of the Deaconess Houses under his supervision. He now writes to say that the vacation is nearly over, and that the Deaconesses will resume their work on Monday, the 7th of September. There are, however, yet several vacancies to be filled, and he still pleads on behalf of women and girls of the poorer classes who can be reached in no other way so effectually, for further volunteers possessing the needful qualifications for such holy service. At a time when social questions are occupying attention, to an extent not before known, missions in the East End of London, which go to the root of all our difficulties, should have the practical sympathy and personal service of those who are free to offer them. Dr. Barnardo writes:—

"We need women who have had a liberal education, and who are strong and robust in health. We need hardly add that no payment is required from them, but we give board, lodging, &c., comfortable and refined home; and, indeed, there could be no objection to providing them also with a small honorarium to meet the special expenses of holidays, travelling, &c. But leaving the question of money on one side, our great need is devoted, earnest, godly gentlewomen—ladies indeed. The influence of a refined and educated Christian woman upon the poor, whether they are young or old, is of priceless value; and could we but get together in the East End of London a band of such ladies, there need be no limit to the useful work they could undertake in connection with the growing scheme and net-work of organisations arising out of our Homes and Mission.

"To ladies who may be interested in the subject we may add that the best age for such work is between twenty-four and thirty-five; that we have a medical mission, night schools, house-to-house visitation, inquiry meetings, schools for men, classes among factory girls, Sunday-school work, a flower mission, mothers' meetings, and much more which we need not detail, where there are abundant openings for service. The house where all live is large, commodious, and well situated in Bow-road, the widest and most healthy thoroughfare in the East of London; and every possible care is taken of the personal comfort and spiritual wants of those who enter into the work. It is required that every lady should be a communicating member of some evangelical body, and that she should, on coming to the Deaconess House, attach herself to some church in the neighbourhood. There are close at hand two or three churches having evangelical ministry, and Nonconformist chapels of almost every variety, besides our own mission-halls, so that there need be no lack of spiritual supply. Of course, all candidates for the work must be total abstainers, both in principle and practice. They are also required to wear the Deaconess dress.

"Full details will be sent to any lady communicating with us. To save delay, all applicants should in their first letter write fully about themselves, their experience, their religious views, church attachment, &c. Reference should also be given to at least two evangelical clergymen, or Nonconformist ministers, to whom the applicant is known as a Christian worker.

"Letters, marked Deaconess, should be addressed to Dr. T. J. Barnardo, 18, Stepney Causeway, London, E."

WALDENSES IN ITALY.—All friends of the cause of evangelisation in Italy are requested to unite in prayer for God's guidance of the Waldensian Synod in the matter of the proposed Union of the Waldensian with the Free Italian Church, and in the adoption of wise regulations, including a suitable name for the United Church, if the proposed Union should be carried into effect. The synod is to be held at Torre Pellice, during the first week of September.

Letters to the Editor.

ELECT MEN OF CHARACTER.

Sir,—There is one phase of the question which has recently come "so much to the fore," which, in my judgment, deserves the earnest attention of all ight-minded men and women. I have for very many years had a strong dislike to the motto, "Measures, not men," and believe that it behoves ll of us who are members of electoral associations, r who can bring any influence to bear on the matter, to make a point of objecting to the selection of candidates whether for school boards, town councils, or Parliament, whose private character is bad.

I would even go further, and say that Christian people should refuse to join in paying honour to men, however high their position, whose private ife will not bear inquiry into, and that especial care should be taken in religious newspapers not to extol such; that a stand should be made against asking them to preside at the annual meetings of philanthropic institutions, or to be patrons of such. Would not this course do much to raise the tone of things in English life?—Yours truly, Gloucester. J. Marshall Sturge.

THE SAD CONDITION OF THE EVICTED MINERS AT DENABY.

Sir,—It has been widely circulated through the daily newspapers that the lock-out was at an end, and that the men had returned to work. This statement has had its desired effect, so far as the managers of the Denaby Colliery Company are concerned; it has stopped the flow of Christian sympathy and support of the evicted families. The so-called settlement was brought about in the following way. A few of the men sent for an ex-agent of the Miners' Union, who has access to the managers of the Denaby Main Colliery, and instructed him to effect a settlement on their behalf. He saw the managers, and accepted a lower price for getting the coal than the Company had ever offered before, namely, 1s. 2d. per ton for lump, and 6d. per ton for slack. This is a great reduction upon the price the men formerly had, and also upon the price previously offered by the Company.

The men then came to me saying that they could not live at the price, and that it was most unjust. I told them that I was thankful that I had had nothing to do with "the sêttlement," but as it had been published in the newspapers that the lock-out was at an end, and that other men were coming to Denaby, from Staffordshire, they had better accept the terms, try them, and make the best of them. If they had not agreed to the terms, even though they were most unjust, public opinion fostered by interested persons would have been against them. I have already had to bear a considerable amount of persecution on account of my charitable work and, if the men had not consented to accept the terms, I would have been blamed still more for giving them bread.

The lock-out has continued now for thirty-five weeks, and there are still 103 men who had not been sent for by the manager to resume work on Saturday. Some of them are in great distress. The high wind blew some of the tents over a few days ago. Two families found shelter in an old barn, where pigs are kept. I visited them the other evening; the stink in the place was sickening, and I was obliged to leave and return home without making any more visits to the poor families. I hope the Company will now allow the men and their families to return to their cottages at Denaby, or to take other houses, which is more desirable, from which they will not be compelled to remove when they get to work. The lock-out having continued so long, some of the poor families have parted with almost everything they could for bread. One woman came to my house on Friday morning, she had no bread for her own and the children's breakfasts. A man came to me last night, he has eight children, his wife was confined of the ninth child on Tuesday last; he has been out of work for thirty-five weeks. Two women came to see me, the husband of one of them had died during the week. The husband of the other is in prison for alleged disturbance at Denaby, both these women have families to keep.

It is hoped that the managers of other pits will no longer refuse to employ men who leave Denaby in search of employment. Thanking the readers of The Christian for the generous help which they have given to the evicted families of the Denaby miners.—I am yours truly,

Thomas James Leslie,
Mexborough, Aug. 24. Congregational Minister.

SOCIAL ETHICS.

Dear Sir.—I once prepared a very little cookery book, but could get no one to publish it. If you will take up the matter I will be glad to lend you a hand. How to eat and drink to the glory of God needs teaching as well as other duties, and is more closely allied to social purity than most people are aware of. Fulness of bread and abundance of idleness was the social condition of Sodom, and it led to Sodomic crimes. Science tells us, that "any new set of conditions occurring to an animal, which render its food and safety very easily attained, seems to lead as a rule to degeneration." A cock or a drake, in its wild state, is satisfied with one mate, and is true to it. Domesticate it; give it abundance of food and abundance of idleness, and it becomes a polygamist and keeps a harem, and has its neck drawn in the middle of its days. The condition of some portion of English society supplies the first part of the parallel, and incidents like the great French Revolution will, sooner or later, supply the second. There are evil spirits still which only come out by prayer and fasting.

In the meantime I would recommend to a "Hard-working man," total abstinence from stimulants, and a diet mainly vegetable, such as he will find in a penny book on vegetarian cookery, but with a little meat added to some of the dishes to give them flavour. The pamphlets of Kinnaird de la Bere, of Burbage Hall, Hinckley, Leicestershire, got by application to himself, will teach a working man how to cultivate his bit of ground. M. D.

THE TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

Sir,—A well-attended meeting of mothers of a very poor but respectable class has authorised me to say that, setting aside the question of overcrowding, there remain these causes for an increasing demoralisation amongst their children:—

(1) Children of respectable poor mingle with those of vicious parents in Board-schools.

(2) When released from school, these children have nowhere to play except in the streets, where they make indiscriminate acquaintance, and learn much that is evil, particularly if they are big boys and girls.

As long as this continues, it is evident that the supply of girls for evil purposes will yearly increase, however much the laws may be amended, and we must, therefore, endeavour to dry up the various sources from which the evil flows.

The meeting of mothers, to which I have alluded, suggested certain remedies which appear to me practical, and which I may tabulate thus:

(1) Musical drill classes during the mid-day play hour from 12 to 2, only a portion of which is devoted to dinner, the rest being passed in the street.

(2) Evening discussion classes for the elder children on such subjects as they learn in school, but regarding which their minds are left practically in the dark, owing to their having no opportunity of discussing them with persons of education who will have patience with their childish questions and efforts at thought.

(3) Toy and game classes for the younger children.

(4) Industrial classes, where the older ones may learn the elements of co-operation as well as some industrial art.

(5) Dancing classes, where, under proper supervision, boys and girls might learn to enjoy themselves decorously, and acquire a distaste for the style of dancing they are liable to indulge in if not taught in a better school than the streets.

I have promised to aid these mothers in trying the experiments, by bringing their views before the public. As the Hon. Secretary of a large "Band of Mercy" in the East End, I have placed at their disposal our hall and piano, also my own services, as far as I can find time. The mothers, most of whom I know personally, are willing to pay something per month towards expenses, and to assist in making the effort successful.

To any friends willing to help either personally or pecuniarily, I will gladly give any information they may desire. The above-mentioned Band of Mercy is unsectarian, and is under the patronage of Lady Brabazon and the Earl of Shaftesbury. We purpose holding periodical conferences of parents, on the subject of the bringing up of children.—Yours faithfully, (Mrs.) Sarah Heckford.

6, Crescent, Minories, E.C.

[With regard to teaching these children dancing, we imagine that there are few of our readers who would approve of it. There are many things harmless in themselves, which become dangerous and hurtful from their associations.—Ed.]

AN OPENING FOR A LADY.

Dear Sir,—You are doubtless aware of the recent death at Constantinople of Mrs. Newman, widow of the Rev. C. S. Newman, missionary of the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. Mrs. Newman had for several years been in charge of an Industrial Training Home for Girls, primarily intended for Jewesses, but to which Christian children were also admitted, with the view of removing from Jewish minds any prejudice they might have against Christians. Would any Christian lady, with a true love for Israel, and means sufficient for her self-support, be willing to undertake the management of this Institution.

It is proposed that the Home, which is now situated on the Bosphorus, should in September be moved to Hasskein on the Golden Horn, in order that the children may have the advantage of a free education at the day-school in that village of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews. That Society contributes £105 a year towards the maintenance of seven Hebrew girls in the Home, and the remaining children, who now number eleven, are provided for by contributions from friends and general subscriptions.

I shall be glad to enter into correspondence with any lady who has the Lord's work at heart, and is willing to gather sheaves in this distant field where our departed sister has sown the precious seed.—I am, yours truly, J. R. van Millingen.

Melville, Ladybank, Fife.

"WHAT SHALL I DO?"

Dear Sir,—"The Petition of the Moralist" in your issue of July 23 brought back to me a thought on that full subject, which I do not remember to have ever seen in print. It was given to me under circumstances where, as good old George Herbert says quaintly, "God taketh the text and preacheth patience." The preacher told us the answer to the question was contained in Luke x. 37 (his subject was the same question in ver. 25 of that chapter), "Go, and do thou likewise!" Here God took the text, and showed me, as a lawyer, that the question itself was a palpable absurdity. "What shall I do to inherit?" Something must be done to purchase or exchange money, or an equivalent must be provided. But how can I "do" anything to inherit? To inherit, something is needed outside me altogether—to be done for me. I must have been the lawfully born son of my father to be his heir, and thus, and only thus, can I "inherit"—by being my father's son—no person can deprive me of this birthright nor partake it, unless he be the "born" son of the same father.

Is not this what lies at the root of the new life, and its neglect at the root of what has ever kept sinners from salvation? Men want to "do" to "inherit," and so they struggle on, working for salvation, and rejecting the free gift. And how true the converse, now, as of yore, "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power ('right' or 'privilege') to become the son of God, even to them that believe on his name, which were born," &c., John i. 12, 13.

It is true that the Lord showed where the inquirer was lacking on his own footing—but I think the shape of the inquiry, and the ignorance betrayed, were intended to be used as showing that "new life" must begin with "new birth."—Yours truly, Chas. Smale.

"A LOST VILLAGE."

Dear Sir,—No doubt many hearts have been touched by reading your correspondent's letter on "A Lost Village," and perhaps many will feel terribly shocked to think that there is such gross darkness in our highly favoured land; but this case is only a specimen of scores of others. A Christian man visited a poor old farm labourer and asked him if he had the Bible in his house. Imagine the preacher's surprise when he said, "I got the rules of the old Devonshire Club, sir, if that's what you mean."

Some will say, "What can be done for these poor creatures?" This is just such a question as a Christian gentleman living in Wiltshire asked himself, and the result is he has now three tents in different villages, and three preachers from the Evangelisation Society preaching the Gospel nightly and twice on Sundays to crowded congregations. So eager are the people to hear the Gospel, that they think nothing of walking several miles after a hard day's work to hear the old, old story, and on Sundays some two or three thousand people are reached by these three tents alone, which are not large enough for the numbers who attend, there being sometimes as many listening outside as inside.

Now one is led to ask, if one of God's servants can be the means of carrying on such a blessed work as this, what could be done, if a thousand or even a hundred would only go and do likewise? It is a melancholy fact that in these dark and evil days there are tents and preachers idle for the want of means to sustain the work. What a host of barns there are which at a trifling cost could be fitted up and used for Gospel services to which the poor would not be ashamed to go in their working clothes. Thank God, numbers of his people are being aroused to a deeper sense of their responsibility in this matter, and all kinds of buildings are now being used for God's glory. Perhaps some who read this might say, "Why I have a capital barn, and I could arrange the meetings; but I cannot preach." To such we would say, You need have no difficulty there, for the same society which supplies the preachers for those tents I have named can supply you, and would be most thankful for the opportunity of doing so.—Yours in the Gospel, John Elliott

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

At Newcastle-under-Lyme, on August 19, there was a great Temperance Camp Meeting.

It is said that all the Methodist Free Church students and 82 per cent. of the ministers are total abstainers.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, in a published letter, urges his party to adopt Local Option as a cry for the General Election.

The Duke of Bedford has prohibited the sale of wines and spirits at the Promenade Concerts, held in the Floral Hall, Covent-garden.

On the House of Commons order-book there stands for next Session a notice by Mr. Stevenson of a Bill for the Prohibition of the Sale of Liquor on Sundays.

Newcastle-on-Tyne Temperance Society is to hold its Jubilee September 20 to September 27, inclusive, and great preparations are being made to ensure its success.

The Irish Temperance League has issued a vigorous manifesto to the Parliamentary electors of Ireland. They are urged to vote for men who will grant Local Option, and not to admit any vested interests in licenses.

The Burnley Temperance workers intend to address the Brewster Sessions against grocers' licenses, and the issue of a new retail license; and also to procure evidence, and proceed against publicans who violate the law.

"Manchester Liquor Traffic in the Sixteenth Century" is the title of an interesting article in The Manchester Guardian, August 12, in which it is shown that two centuries ago the traffic was as troublesome as to-day.

At the ordinary Blue Ribbon Meeting, Central Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, August 15, was passed a vigorous resolution to be presented to the magistrates at the Brewster Sessions, urging the refusal of new and the reduction of the number of old licenses.

The death from consumption took place last week in Greenwich Union Infirmary of Annie Parker, aged 35, who has been over 400 times charged before the magistrates at Greenwich Police-court with drunkenness, but never with felony, and has spent the greater part of her life in prison. She was always well conducted in prison, and shortly before her death sent a letter to Mr. Marsham, the magistrate at Greenwich Police-court, thanking him for kindnesses, and acknowledging that her life had been misspent. She had a luxuriant head of hair, and on the morning of her death presented to Dr. Dixon, the assistant medical officer of the infirmary, a lace-bordered sampler, on which was artistically worked, with her own hair, the hymn commencing "My God, my Father, whilst I stray." Another beautiful specimen of her hair work is in the possession of the Rev. J. W. Horsley, for many years chaplain of the Clerkenwell House of Detention, and a third is framed in the parlour of Mr. James, Old King-street, Deptford. She had received an excellent education, and a bad word never escaped her when before the magistrate. On one occasion a lady took her to Canada with a view to her reformation, but she could never resist intoxicating drink.—Daily Paper.

Under the presidency of Cardinal Manning the annual fête of the Catholic Total Abstinence League of the Cross was held, at the Crystal Palace, on the 17th inst. It was stated that this organisation is doing a good work in Ireland, gaining influence when other movements have failed.

At the annual licensing session in Birmingham, last week, it was shown that since last session 43 licensed victuallers and 61 beersellers had been proceeded against for offences under the Act. Last year the total number of licensed victuallers summoned was 22, and of beersellers 59.

Notices of Books, &c.

Guide to Principal Chapels of England. 1s. Whittingham & Co. An excellent little work, carefully compiled and clearly classified.

Unpolished Gems of Scripture. By Rev. J. Hawker. 1s. Elliot Stock. These selections from the Book of Psalms are, in the hands of the gifted writer, made to shine with unwonted lustre, hidden truths being brought to light, many of which have been overlooked by the revisers. This is No. 2 of the quarterly issue.

Unbelief. By M. C. Hime. 1s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. A valuable treatise, aiming to confirm young men in their belief in Christianity, and to prepare them to meet the arguments of unbelievers. The author's experience leads him to deal with the subject in a concise and courageous manner. Young men, read it!

Obiter Dicta. 1s. Elliot Stock. Seven cleverly-written essays on Carlyle, Browning, Truth-Hunting, and other subjects. In capital style the writer denounces many human weaknesses, exposes various popular fallacies, and, with humour and satire equally at his command, gives forth his views fearlessly, both as to men and things. His work deserves a large circle of appreciative readers.

For Ever with Jesus. By Rev. Dr. Doudney, 3s. 6d., City Press. Another contribution to religious literature from this veteran soldier of the Cross should meet with a hearty reception. Many precious thoughts on the hope set before us, which have filled his mind, often during the night watches, are here presented, and come with a freshness and power which should stimulate every Christian during the little while yet remaining.

The Tongue of Fire. By Rev. Wm. Arthur. 4s. 6d., Bemrose. One of the most influential books for good, as it is also one of the most eloquent and attractive in its style written by any living man. It is, we fear, comparatively unknown to the younger generation. We, therefore, cordially welcome "the Author's Uniform Edition," and earnestly hope this noble and spirit-stirring book may become a living power in every Christian heart and home.

Short Records of the Missionary Work of Rev. Edward Porter. By his Widow. 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The story of a zealous and devoted servant of the London Missionary Society, written by his equally zealous and devoted wife, who retains at four-score the spirit and energy of a missionary heroine. It is an interesting account of arduous labours under trying and often distressing circumstances. and will be greatly valued by all true friends of missionary life and work.

Platform Echoes. By J. B. Gough. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. The perusal of this delightful book will carry many readers back in thought to the happy gatherings seven years ago, when they listened spell-bound to this veteran orator of the Temperance cause. The humour and satire of his anecdotes, the earnestness of spirit, and the solemn warnings which he uttered, are all reproduced in this volume, which deserves as prominent a place in literature as its gifted author has won in oratory.

Unsectarian Notes. By Richard Herring. 1s. Longmans. Arrogant assertions of free will on the one hand, and the abuses of the doctrine of election on the other, are both deprecated, while the plain teaching of Scripture on these subjects is forcibly presented and lovingly urged. The treatise also contains chapters on justification by faith, and on good works, concluding with illustrations of the Ecclesiastical seasons from the "Pilgrim's Progress." The whole is clear, concise, and on thoroughly evangelical lines.

Among recent sermons which the present agitation has called forth may be mentioned God's Great Army, by Rev. J. C. Almy, Baptist Chapel, Brixham; Vice and Sin in the Light of the Lord, by Rev. A. Rowland, Congregational, Crouch End; The London Vice Market, by Rev. J. F. Porter, Methodist, Bow; A Hole in the Wall, by Rev. C. H. Marsack Day, South London Tabernacle, Peckham; Warning Words, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Leicester;—which have been published for free circulation, and may be obtained of their respective authors.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. W. FORBES has been giving addresses a Margate and Westgate-on-Sea in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and the Congregational churches.

KENSAL GREEN.—Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan have held a blessed series of tent services amongst the working population, with such results as to give great encouragement to the workers who shared in the effort.

FULHAM.—Mr. J. Creer, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a successful series of services in a large tent at Fulham. The meetings increased in interest and blessing, the attention of the audiences showing that the Gospel has lost none of its power. These meetings will (D.V.) be conducted through September, for which the prayers of the Lord's people are asked.

BRIGHOUSE.—During the Rushbearing holidays a series of meetings has been held in connection with the Christian Workers' Association, the members of which have been assisted by a number of missionaries from the Manchester City Mission. Altogether, during the two days, thirty-eight addresses were given in the neighbourhood, in addition to 4000 tracts being distributed. On Monday and Tuesday the missionaries visited Elland, where they addressed open-air meetings, and distributed about 2000 tracts.

STANSTEAD ABBOTTS, HERTS.—Mr. W. E. Bailey, of the Open-air Mission, has held several meetings in the open air, in this and the adjoining villages, delivering the Word with all boldness or heart, visiting the Rye House on several occasions and distributing tracts to the excursionists. Mr. Bailey has also visited the villages of Hunsdon, Widford, Hadham Cross, Green Tye, Perry Green, and several outlying districts, sowing the seed by the wayside. The Open-air Mission is doing a work in country villages, the result of which will only be fully realised at the coming of the Lord.

DORSETSHIRE.—While on a visit to Corfe Castle, I found a tent there, being worked wisely and successfully by Mr. D. Newell. At Wareham, also, the tent was pitched on the lawn of the Rev. Pelham Stokes, and one evening about thirty-five drove over from Poole, four-in-hand, to show their fellowship with him. At this place a Bible-reading has been started. On Sunday afternoon Rev. Pelham Stokes said that he had experienced true Christian fellowship with Mr. Newell, though not seeing eye to eye in all things. He gave a powerful address, exhorting Christians to more godly living, and to renew their service with vigour. Mr. Hall, who accompanied Mr. Newell here, reads and expounds Scripture very clearly, and both sing the Gospel with real power. Our town seems stirred—Christians of various denominations rally round, and many confess being much helped. I have heard of at least eighteen conversions. Children's services are also held in the tent, and Bible-readings are announced for next week.

Poole. George Hawes.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—For ten summers it has been my privilege to have a tent near the Esplanade, and many have, we believe, heard and accepted the Word of Life. In consequence of the south-west gales from the Atlantic, which have so frequently blown our ordinary tents to ribbons, I have had one made with wooden sides in panels, screwed and bolted together, and two doors, so that when the wind is very boisterous in front we let the congregation in at the back, and when very hot the side shutters can be lowered one, two, or three feet. Two services are held in the tent each week-day, and three on Sundays, besides frequent meetings conducted on the sands both for the young and adults. We have also a Bible-carriage constantly at work outside, and a book-stall in the tent, by which means precious seed is scattered broadcast amongst the increasing multitudes flocking to this fashionable watering place of the West. During the present summer we have had tents of various sizes at work in Bath, Westbury, Thornbury, Keynsham, St. Judes, and Staple-hill.

J. A. Vicary.

KILBURN.—In connection with the Evangelstic Mission, a series of special services was commenced in the large tent, Carlton-road, on Sunday, July 19, which have continued with unabated nterest until the present time. Messrs. E. Hurditch and F. C. Spurr conducted the meetings for he first fortnight, the remaining meeting being held by Mr. Spurr and Mr. Wm. Grove. On Sundays he sides of the tent have been let down to allow he overflow crowd to listen, and each week night he tent has been nearly full. A number of very nteresting cases of conversion have been met with, and all round the workers are much cheered. The nission will close on Sunday, August 30, and prayer s asked that much blessing may follow.

THE BISHOP OF SODOR AND MAN has been setting a good example to his episcopal brethren, by preaching in the open air to the crowds of visitors who flock to the Isle of Man at this season of the year. Every Sunday afternoon he may be seen, attended by one or two of his clergy, with Bible in hand, and standing on a small platform, preaching the Word of Life to the multitude on the headland above Douglas Bay. On Sunday last here was a gathering of about ten thousand, wrapt n earnest attention, and joining heartily in the hymn-singing. We understand that there has been very great blessing. May God prosper the work!

Y.M.C.A., TORONTO.—Mr. W. H. Hewett, general secretary of the Manchester Y.M.C.A., and founder of the Y.M.C.A. Social Purity Branch (who is visiting Canada at present in the interests of the emigration of young men suited for farm ife) has lectured on "Social Purity" to crowded udiences of men only in Montreal, London, Peterboro', Toronto, and other Canadian cities, and n each place his Social Purity Pledge has been adopted by a standing vote at the close of the lecture. "I promise by God's help to use all legitimate neans to preserve my own purity and that of all nen and women." He was also heartily thanked n each place for the judicious manner he dealt with a difficult subject.

FROM A RAILWAY GUARD.—About four years ago, when I first became anxious about my soul, I used to find a great many tracts in the carriages, nd they were, by God's blessing, the means of onsiderably enlightening me. I used to save all he tracts I found, till at last I had some hundreds. I kept them in a box for some time. One day the hought came into my mind that it was wrong for ne to let them lie idle, and that I ought to distribute them. The thought flashed into my mind hat I had an unique chance of distributing them, n a manner so as to reach every class travelling to ll parts of the country, and, in fact, the whole vorld, and in a manner calculated to make, I hought, a great impression on the minds of those eceiving them. I offered up a prayer to God to irect me to put the right tract in each parcel or iece of luggage, and that He would bless them. By this means I am enabled to reach a class that, omparatively speaking, would be, in many ways, naccessible, and much good may result: as in the ase of a servant going to a fresh place, young adies or gentlemen on their way to school, or those n affliction; and thus, in a variety of ways, the ruth, by the power of the Holy Spirit, might be arried home to the heart.

WORKING TAILORS' ASSOCIATION.—This association has been formed by working tailors at the East-end of London to try and improve their position by establishing a workshop of their own, conducted on o-operative principles; that is to say under their own management, and in which, the working xpenses paid, the profits will be divided amongst the ctual workers. They hope thus not only to get better wages, but to reduce their hours of work rom fifteen or sixteen to ten or twelve a day, with he advantage of working in a clean, well-lighted, nd well-ventilated workshop instead of being rowded together in unhealthy dens. It has aken a year to raise sufficient capital to make a tart, but premises have now been taken and fitted up as well as the small capital will allow. But the urplus in hand will barely suffice to carry the Association through the slack time before the winter eason commences, and is totally inadequate to provide for any extension of the premises or machinery which may be necessary when that time rrives. The Association is registered under the ndustrial and Provident Societies Act, and the hares are £1 each, with no further liability after hey are once paid up. Any offers to take shares r to lend small sums of money will be gladly eceived and duly acknowledged; and I shall be pleased to give information to any interested in the natter. Charles F. Nash, Treasurer.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

JAPAN.—Contrary to European experience, women are said to form only a fourth part of the members of Christian churches in Japan.

CONGO.—A Swedish missionary has the honour of being the first to publish a book in the Congo language, and that book is the Gospel of John.—L'Evangéliste.

POSTAGE STAMPS.—A gentleman in Würtemberg contributes from £10 to £20 per annum to the Bâle Foreign Missions by the sale of old postage stamps to collectors.

ICELAND.—M. Paul Passy, an assiduous worker in the McAll Mission at Paris, has just been appointed by the Minister of Public Instruction to a mission in Iceland. M. Passy is to study the literature and condition of the schools in the island. —Témoin de la Vérité.

"LA BONNE NOUVELLE."—Visitors to the French-speaking part of the Continent may be glad to read and distribute this periodical paper, which contains interesting articles, all full of Gospel truth, and may be obtained from 86, Boulevard de Versailles, St. Cloud, Paris.

THE POPE.—Leo. XIII. in a recent letter to the Archbishop of Paris says, "The clergy alone have the right to teach, to judge and to govern; to the faithful it belongs to follow the clergy simply, and to submit their own judgment to them." The Apostle Paul says, "I speak as to wise men, judge ye," and the Head of the Church commanded those even who sought to slay Him to "Search the Scriptures."—Evan.-Kirch. Anzeiger.

KAISERWERTH.—The forty-eighth report of the Deaconesses' Institution has just been published. The work was begun in 1836 by a few sisters, and now there are sixty separate institutions, and more than 6000 deaconesses, whose work extends from Lapland to Egypt, from Lebanon to the Western part of North America. Education and the nursing of the sick form the principal part of their work. It has been found necessary to build an additional Nursing Home.

NEUCHATEL.—In this Canton a teacher of one of the public schools is about to be dismissed, on account of "reprehensible practices," namely, the distribution of religious papers on the railway, and the organisation of religious meetings for her pupils. Her school is acknowledged to be conducted in an irreproachable manner, and the examinations of her classes have always been very satisfactory. This sentence, says Le Christianisme, is strongly agitating the minds of the evangelical Christians of the Canton.

MADEIRA.—The natives of Madeira are utterly ignorant of the Bible, and very few of them have ever seen it. The most hopeful course is to begin with the children. Here is a wide and promising field for Christian effort. The necessity is great. A native girl had been taught to read the Bible, and read it earnestly. Her father, hearing of this, asked her for the book, but she hesitated to give it up. He said he only wished to see it, and that he would return it to her. On a promise to this effect she gave it to him. The father went to the Bishop, who told him that it had "some good things in it, and some things bad." The man then went to some sisters of charity, of the Jesuit order of St. Vincent de Paul, who told him that it was "a very bad book, and should be burned!" The father, however, kept his promise, and the girl gladly received back her Bible. There are yet only four schools, two of which are wholly supported by two ladies in England; and the others are dependent on the contributions of those who value the Bible. In the island very little aid can be obtained, and hence the necessity of appealing to friends of the cause in England. J. Hutchinson.

Madeira.

EXMOUTH.—The anniversary services of Beacon Place Congregational Church were recently held. W. J. Merrington, Esq., of Seaton, preached, morning and evening, appropriate and vigorous sermons, and Mrs. M. E. Jones, of Exeter, addressed the parents and children in the afternoon. This lady, who is a well-known evangelist and Gospel Temperance advocate in this neighbourhood, has the special gift of persuasiveness and wins on her audience by her earnest and loving spirit. Having rendered us good service on several recent occasions, we would counsel other churches and societies to avail themselves of her assistance. No charge is made, but what is freely offered is accepted. Her address is 4, Bloomfield, Pennsylvania, Exeter, Devon. W. T. Bull, B.A., Minister.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THERE was a large gathering on Tuesday, August 18, in the George Yard Mission Hall, Whitechapel, to bid farewell to Mr. M. J. Walker, of the Y.M.C.A., who is leaving for China as a missionary. The audience was composed of those who regularly attend Mr. Holland's services, and many a fervent prayer was offered on behalf him who had so steadily laboured in their midst. The boys attending Mr. Walker's Bible-class showed their love by presenting him with several texts of Scripture, neatly framed; whilst the men and women, with the help of the workers, gave some suitable books for use in China. After an earnest word of exhortation from Mr. Holland, Mr. Walker concluded with a solemn address from the passage which had first led him to think of China (1 Chron. xxix. 5): "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" Many hearts were stirred, and from among the large staff of workers present it is believed that others will be soon offering themselves for the foreign mission field.

COLAR.—Dear Sir,—A short time ago you were kind enough to insert a request for prayer on behalf of my brother, W. A. Redwood, and his wife, of Colar, which created the impression they had left that place. Will you kindly state that they returned on June 29, and intend continuing until Miss Anstey returns to deliver up their charge personally.—Yours faithfuly, E. W. Redwood.

CLAPTON PARK TABERNACLE.—Two interesting and blessed gatherings were convened on Thursday and Friday evenings, to listen to lectures by Mr. C. King, the converted actor. The Tabernacle was crowded to excess on both occasions, and with breathless attention the people listened to the thrilling and solemn words which he spoke to them. I am convinced many homes were brightened, and many spirits lightened, and many led to unfasten the burden of their soul travails into the bosom of God. Will your readers pray most fervently that we may have showers of blessing—saving blessing and sanctifying blessing—upon Lower Clapton. We are panting after the promised "floods."

John Bain.

THE SALE OF WORK.—Numbers of our sisters in this country, who are left alone in the world, or, perhaps, have relatives dependent upon them, would gladly add to their scanty incomes by making useful and fancy articles for sale. Many invalids, too, who cannot share in active mission work, would rejoice to use their skill by working for the benefit of others. But their great difficulty lies in finding a means of selling such work. Mrs. Cotton suggests the establishment of a Society, organised and carried out on sound business principles, for the sale of ladies' work (such as fancy and art needlework, painting, &c.) at a fair market value, the article being the work of ladies not in trade, which would be the only restriction. The proposed subscription is 5s. per annum, entrance fee, 1s. The Christian Women's Union, of which Mrs. Cotton is Hon. Sec., promises to give the proposed Society its fullest sympathy, but cannot help it with funds. Their Conference Hall at Clapham, however, may be used as the London depôt of the parcels of the proposed Society, whose head-quarters would be at Brighton. Mrs. Cotton will be glad to furnish further details to any friends interested in the scheme. Her address is 69, Lansdowne-street, Hove, Brighton.

ROTHERHITHE.—About two years since, the Riverside Gospel Mission was started to bring the labourers resident upon the shores of the Thames within the sound of the Gospel, and for this purpose a small shop was taken. Resolute opposition was encountered, the meetings being at times broken up, and the workers meeting with much hindrance. But the number of worshippers increased, and a room at the back of the shop was added, accommodating eighty persons. During the winter this has been crowded by those who had habitually neglected church and chapel. Eighty-seven have professed to find Christ, and fifty have become members of the mission, thus linking themselves permanently with the work. The Sabbath-school with 200 scholars, a Temperance Society, a Band of Hope with 120 members, each claim support, and it is therefore proposed to build a Hall before the winter arrives, to carry on the work. The site has been secured for forty-two years, at a ground rental of £8 per annum, with the option of purchase within two years. The cost of erection and furnishing is estimated at £400.—R. D. Tregale, Hon. Superintendent, 19, Marden-road, Drummond-road, S.E.

Notes on Daily Readings.

v. 1.—“For this Melchisedek,” &c.—Speculation has been busy as to who Melchisedek was, but Dr. Saphir well remarks: “These speculations are not merely useless, but entirely in contradiction to the scope of this very passage. The Scripture purposely does not mention who he was. If he was Shem, then we know who his father was; and this is just the very point which the Holy Ghost does not wish us to know. . . . It is equally obvious that this Melchisedek is not a theophany, an appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. For he was “made like unto the Son of God.”

v. 2.—“First being by interpretation King of Righteousness.”—Seven points of typical likeness to the Son of God are here mentioned: (1) King of Righteousness, (2) King of Peace, (3) without father, (4) without mother, (5) without descent, (6) having neither beginning of days, (7) nor end of life.” “The sacred narrative regarding Melchisedek was so ordered, both in what it said and what it left unsaid, that the historical picture is singularly fitted to represent in typical outline the Son of God.”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 19.—“But the bringing in of a better hope (did).”—The A.V. is evidently wrong, according to the Greek, in putting this sentence in contrast to what immediately precedes. It is a contrast to the 18th verse. The R.V. renders it correctly: “For there is a disannulling of a foregoing commandment, because of its weakness and unprofitableness (for the law made nothing perfect), and a bringing in thereupon of a better hope, through which we draw nigh unto God.”

v. 25.—“Save to the uttermost.”—The Greek word for “to the uttermost” is compounded of two, “all” and “accomplish,” so that it might be rendered, “to the all accomplishment;” or, as in R.V. margin, “completely.”

v. 26.—“For such an high priest became us.”—Again, as so often in this Epistle, we meet with the number seven in the characteristics of his high Priesthood: (1) “holy,” (2) “harmless,” (3) “undefiled,” (4) “separate (or rather, as in R.V., separated) from sinners,” (5) “made higher than the heavens,” (6) having once “offered up Himself,” (7) “perfected for evermore,” R.V.

AUGUST 28.—HEBREWS VIII.

v. 2.—“A minister of the sanctuary,” &c.—“Though He be seated at God's right hand, it is not as one who has no active duties.”—Sp. Com.

v. 3.—“Whence it is necessary that this one also should have somewhat to offer.”—“Which He is now offering as Minister of the heavenly sanctuary. Evidently this cannot refer to his ‘offering of Himself,’ which was made once for all on earth; and in virtue of which He entered in once for all into the heavenly sanctuary; the covenant promise of ‘remission of sins’ having been once and for ever definitely established. It must refer to his offering the ‘gifts and sacrifices’ of his people, their prayers (iv. 16), their ‘sacrifices of praise’ (xiii. 15), their ‘works of love’ (xiii. 16), their oblation of themselves, their souls and bodies (Rom. vi. 13, xii. 1). They who come unto God through Him, bringing such gifts, find Him at all times ready as Minister of the sanctuary to ‘present’ their gifts, hallowed by his own all-efficacious offering of intercession (vii. 25).”—Dr. Kay in Sp. Com.

v. 5.—“Who serve unto the example,” &c. Better rendered in R.V., “Who serve that which is a copy and shadow of heavenly things.”

v. 7.—“If that first covenant had been faultless.”—“Or without room for blame. In itself, indeed, it was so, ‘holy, and just, and good’ (Rom. vii. 12), tending unto life (xvi. 10). But in respect of sinful men it was defective, and found to tend ‘unto death.’ If, then, it was to be blamed, the ground of blame was not with it but with them, ‘finding fault with them,’ ver. 8.”—Sp. Com.

v. 9.—“I regarded them not, saith the Lord.”—“The Holy One must withdraw from them the providential preference and protection which He had purposed to vouchsafe. Could, then, Israel's unfaithfulness to the covenant annul the faithfulness of God? God's faithfulness to that first covenant was gloriously vindicated in the very fact, that when it had failed to accomplish his gracious purpose in its institution, He forthwith devised a second covenant, which could not fail.”—Delitzsch

AUGUST 29.—HEBREWS IX.

v. 1.—“And a worldly sanctuary.”—The R.V. renders this, “and its sanctuary a sanctuary of this world.” The Greek is literally, “and the sanctuary a worldly one.”

v. 8.—“While as the first tabernacle was yet standing.”—It is to be lamented that the R.V. here reproduces the expression “is yet standing,” which conveys a false impression of the meaning, the Greek being “literally, ‘as yet had standing,’ or retained its divinely appointed status.”—Sp. Com.

v. 11.—“Through the greater and more perfect tabernacle.”—“A large number of commentators, both ancient and modern, understand this of our Lord's human nature, comparing x. 20” (Sp. Com.) Dr. Kay, however, prefers the view of Delitzsch, that it refers to the heavens. “Not of this building” should be, as in R.V., “not of this creation.”

v. 15.—“Mediator of a new covenant.”—The R.V. thus rightly corrects “testament” of A.V., but presently adopts it from supposed necessity of ver. 16, which they render “For where a testament is there must of necessity be the death of him that made it,” a translation which takes no notice of one important word in the Greek which they render “be,” but which is literally “be borne;” or “be represented.” Speaker's Commentary says, “There must needs be alleged (or supposed) the death of him that made the covenant;” adding, “the term rendered ‘alleged’ is wide enough to include the representative deaths by means of sacrifice which accompanied the elder covenants, as well as that actual death which sealed the new covenant” (1 Cor. xi. 25).

AUGUST 30.—HEBREWS X.

v. 5.—“A body hast Thou prepared me.”—The quotation here is from the LXX. or Greek translation of the Old Testament, which so renders the Hebrew words, “Mine ears hast Thou opened.” Dr. Kay says, “So the LXX.; paraphrasing as it does elsewhere in a difficult passage. The Hebrew is literally, ‘Ears hast thou digged unto (or, for) me;’ ears into which thy word may sink deep. The rendering of the LXX. seems to imply that they understood the passage of the Messiah, whose obedience was to be exhibited in the midst of intense bodily sufferings” (Ps. xxii. 14, 15).

v. 9.—“He taketh away the first”—“The legal typical offerings”—“that he may establish the second”—“His own perfect obedience, ‘even unto death’ (Phil. ii. 8).”—Sp. Com.

v. 10.—“By the which will we are sanctified.”—Or rather, as R.V., “we have been sanctified,” and, perhaps, “have been consecrated” would better express its meaning, as we use the word “sanctified” more to express the work of the Holy Spirit, whereas this refers to the consecration of Christ's people in virtue of his blood.

v. 12.—“One sacrifice for sins for ever.”—This, which is the punctuation of the text both in A.V. and R.V., is borne out by ver. 14, “By one offering He hath perfected for ever.”

v. 19.—“Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter in,” &c.—This is the commencement of the practical part of this Epistle, and the practical obligation resulting from the doctrinal teaching which has preceded, is summed up in one verb, “let us draw near.”

v. 22.—“Having our heart sprinkled . . . and our body washed,” &c., R.V.—The allusion seems to be to the consecration of the priests (Ex. xxix), where both washing with water and sprinkling with blood were essential elements in the ceremony.

AUGUST 31.—HEBREWS XI.

v. 1.—“Faith is the assurance of things hoped for,” R.V., or in margin, “the giving substance to.” If it were not an awkward expression, “the substantiating things hoped for” would express what is meant. Giving them a substance and reality: treating them as real.

v. 6.—“That He is a rewarder.”—Both A.V. and R.V. fail to give the full force of the original here; it is, literally, “to them that seek Him out He is become a rewarder.”

v. 10.—“Builder and Maker.”—Rather, “Architect and Builder.”—Sp. Com.

v. 11.—“Even Sarah herself,” R.V.—Sarah, who had been rebuked for unbelief (Gen. xviii. 11).

v. 13.—“Embraced them.”—The R.V. has turned this into “greeted them,” which entails the loss of a most significant and appropriate expression, which might well have been allowed to stand.

v. 17.—“Offered up.”—The A.V. thus renders the two verbs in this verse, which in the Greek differ in tense. The first is perfect, “hath offered up,” because in intention and purpose the deed was as good as done. But the second verb is in the imperfect, “was offering up,” as showing the actual fact.

v. 19.—“In a figure,” lit., “in a parable.”—The whole transaction of Isaac's being brought to, and laid on, the altar, and then, as his father's hand was stretched out to slay him, being delivered by God's command, forms a parable of death and resurrection.

v. 31.—“Them that believed not.”—R.V. makes this “them that were disobedient.” The Greek word combines both meanings, and might be rendered, “them that refused to be persuaded.” (See Josh. ii. 8—10.)

v. 40.—“Some better thing for us.”—Not as making our lot better than theirs, as it is often supposed to mean, but better for us than if they had been perfected without us. Resurrection perfection seems meant.

SEPTEMBER 1.—HEBREWS XII.

v. 1.—“So great a cloud of witnesses.”—Not of us, as it is often thought to mean, but witnesses to faith.

v. 2.—It is a pity that the R.V. continues the “looking unto” of the A.V., instead of giving the literal meaning of the Greek, “looking off unto.” The Sp. Com. thus explains the words: “with eyes turned away from other objects, and fixed on one only.”

v. 10.—“After their own pleasure” is better in R.V. “as seemed good to them.” “To the best of their judgment; though sometimes they might be over lenient, and sometimes unduly severe. God's discipline, on the contrary, always tends with certainty to our highest welfare.”—Sp. Com.

v. 14.—“Holiness, without which,” &c.—The whole verse should be taken together, not this latter clause by itself, as is so frequently done; “holiness,” too, has the article, which should be expressed, as in R.V., “Follow after peace with all men, and that sanctification (or holiness) without which no man shall see the Lord.” It is in cultivating peace with all men that we are so apt to forget that line of practical separation between Church and world, “that sanctification,” without which we shall not see the Lord either here or hereafter. It is by no means certain that the reference is not to the present vision of faith. Comp. what is said of Moses (xi. 27), “He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible.”

v. 15.—“Lest there be any man that falleth short of the grace of God” (R.V.).—This is more literal than “lest any man fail of,” &c.

v. 22.—Sion is contrasted with Sinai, Gospel with Law. After the mention of Mount Sion follow seven features of its privileges, each commencing with “and”; the second of these should be taken nearly as it is in margin of R.V., “and to innumerable hosts of angels, a festal assembly.”

SEPTEMBER 2.—HEBREWS XIII.

v. 4.—“Marriage is honourable,” &c., is probably better rendered in R.V., “Let marriage be had in honour among all,” &c.

“God will judge.”—“Human law may not be able to reach such, but there is One who will, without fail, judge them—God.”—Sp. Com.

v. 8.—“Jesus Christ, the same yesterday,” &c.—“The Greek order is somewhat more emphatic: ‘Jesus Christ is yesterday and to-day the same and for ever.’ Thus the last chapter resumes and applies practically the testimony to Christ which had been given in the first, ‘Thou art the same’ (i. 12).”—Sp. Com.

v. 10.—“We have an altar, whereof,” &c.—Dr. Kay in Sp Com. well shows that (1) this cannot be taken of the cross. “That was the instrument by which our Lord's death was effected; but so far was it from being as ‘the altar which sanctifieth the gift,’ that it stands as the outward symbol of the curse pronounced by the law upon the malefactor (Gal. iii. 13). The cross was as little an altar as the Roman soldiers were priests;” (2) “Nor yet can it be understood of the Lord's table.” . . . “What could the altar itself be but Christ's own Divine-human personality?” Dr. Saphir, too: “Altar does not refer to the actual cross, but to Christ Himself, as the sin offering. As Owen remarks, that which the Apostle throughout opposes unto all the utensils, services, and sacrifices of the Temple is Christ Himself.”

v. 15.—“Through Him then let us offer up a sacrifice of praise,” &c.—This seems naturally to refer back to ver. 10, “through Him” (i.e. Christ) as our altar; “let us offer up,” &c.

v. 18.—“We trust we have a good conscience.”—Does not this look like a reminiscence of the only words which Paul was able to speak before the “Council” at Jerusalem (Acts xxiii. 1), “I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day”?

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

"Feed My Lambs!"

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes" are just now in very urgent and immediate eed of help.

Almost every week defenceless Little Girls are being rescued from ntold misery, and the prospect of shameful lives. No case is turned away.

The 1400 children in the "Homes" have also to be supported during he holiday season, when almost all the friends of Missions are away from ome. Every Autumn this gives rise to much anxiety, and greatly increases he burdens of those "who abide by the stuff."

Any gifts, however small, will be gratefully accepted and acknowledged f addressed to WM. FOWLER, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, or to

Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable
Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee). at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—A teacher of a class of young women desires that prayer be offered that the whole class may be led to Jesus.——For evangelistic meetings to be held in Wellwynd U. P. Church, Airdrie, N.B., early in September. May Christians be filled with the Holy Spirit, and the unsaved be led to see Jesus.

DALSTON.—Allow me to call attention to some very promising and blessed work in "the Tent" in Dalston Lane, in connection with the "Evangelistic Mission" on Tuesday, the 18th inst. Mr. and Mrs. Smith, converted gypsies, conducted the meeting; they had a crowded tent and a "good time." Services are conducted every night of the week (except Saturday), and on Thursday nights by Mr. and Mrs. Grove who generally attract good numbers. The surroundings of the meeting-place are bad enough: within a stone's throw are numbers of habitual frequenters of the Secular Hall scattered about, while passing backward and forward in an endless stream in front of the very door are droves of wretched girls, in sad truth, "unfortunate females," as Carlyle used to call them. Not myself connected with the "Mission," I solicit the prayers of all in sympathy with Christian work.

Tent Work in East London (Mr. H. G. Guinness)—B. P. E. Clifton, £2.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM. — It cannot now be complained of that the wolf is hiding himself in the sheep's clothing of tolerance. Bishop Ryan, of St. Louis, whom the Pope has recently called to be Archbishop of Philadelphia, writes in his paper The Shepherd of the Valley, an article which for clearness, leaves nothing to be desired: "We maintain that the Church of Rome is intolerant, that is, that she uses every means in her power to root out heresy; but her intolerance is the necessary result of her infallibility. She alone has the right to be intolerant, because she alone has the truth. The Church tolerates heretics where she is obliged to do so, but she hates them with a deadly hatred and uses all her power to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics in this land should become a considerable majority—which in time will surely be the case—then will religious freedom in the Republic of the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how the Romish Church treated heretics in the Middle Ages, and how she treats them to-day wherever she has the power. We no more think of denying these historical facts than we do of blaming the Holy God and the Princes of the Church for what they have thought it good to do."—Evan.-Kirch. Anzeiger.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Miss A. S , of WAREHAM.

This lady visited Coombe Lodge in the first instance. She had been in a very weak state for a long time, and never well since she had pneumonia in 1883. All the usual symptoms of consumption were present. There was family tendency, a brother, aunt, and cousin having died of that disease. Examined by Dr. Brown: "Commencing disease of upper lobe of left lung; apex of the right lung slightly affected."

This patient recovered, and by a letter dated May 5 I find she continues well.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from Mr. M. RIDDINGTON, BOROUGH FEN, PETERBOROUGH.

"I must say that I find the greatest relief from your medicine whenever I have a bad cold. Some that I know personally are living proofs of the efficacy of your medicine. Mr. H. and others. My sister-in-law, Mrs. C., is receiving the greatest benefit from your treatment."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

AFTER YEARS OF AGONY.

REV. F. A. VINCENT, B.D., Rector of Elsted, Trayford, &c., writes:—"Dec. 23, 1884,—I shall be glad to reply at my own expense, to all inquiries as to the effect of the invaluable remedy 'Tikheel.' After taking two bottles I derived benefit I never could have anticipated, after suffering many years of agony. I had in vain tried all specifics known, as well as consulting physicians. Books suitable for Bible Students and Teachers.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."
British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted Covers, 1s; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."
Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES

In order to abiding Communion with God. Also, Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study, and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. ANDERSON. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Whether viewed as an analysis of the whole Bible, or as a plan for its daily perusal, or as a directory to the spirit and intention with which it should be studied, it is equally judicious and complete. The one design of the whole Scriptures is kept in view throughout."—Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR. Cheap Edition.—Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, Limp, 1s. 6d. Superior Edition.—Cloth, Elegant, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This book is original. Dr. Saphir has the power of originating and combining, which is the mark of genius. It is the old truths to which we listen; but the old truths clothed in a living language, set in new lights, and drawn out in fresh applications."—Weekly Review.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID;

or, God's Dealings in the Sanctuary. By ANNA SHIPTON. Best Edition, toned paper, Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s. 6d. Cheap Edition, Cloth neat, 2s. 6d.

"This is a well-written volume of spiritual instruction, interspersed with interesting narratives, from the able pen of Mrs. SHIPTON. It is well worthy of a wide circulation, especially amongst members of Christian congregations, Sunday-school teachers and scholars."—Free Press.

NOTES FOR BIBLE READINGS.

A Collection of over Six Hundred Subjects, carefully compiled and arranged. Suitable for Bible Readings, Cottage Lectures, Sermons, Addresses, Sabbath-school Lessons, &c. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. A cheap edition may also be had in tinted covers, 2s. 6d.

"A book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the class teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation, and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES:

As seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services. By Rev. GEORGE RODGERS. New Edition. With two full-page Illustrations, and numerous smaller Engravings. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth, bevelled gilt boards, edges, 2s.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."
The Record.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book, the Saviour being typically portrayed in the Tabernacle, the High Priest, and the Sacrifices."—Churchman.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12 Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

PROTECTION AGAINST EPIDEMICS.

MANY instances are on record in which the employés of Electric and Telegraph works have been, by the nature of their employment, protected against the ravages of epidemic diseases. Occupants of the same houses have sickened and died, while those in daily contact with this energising influence have been exempt. It is well known that a man is especially liable to succumb to disease when in a low and languid state, and that he is open to these attacks from external influences when the Magnetic and Electric forces are not in their normal condition. We can now counteract these external influences by simply wearing a garment. Every man, woman, and child may be in this safe, Magnetic condition. So marked is the different experience of the protected and the unprotected, that many of those who had never crossed the Channel without being sick, have, as a consequence of the healthy equilibrium established by the Odo-Magnetic influence, found themselves to be the only persons on board not sick during severe storms. It is as clearly within the ground of certainty that our whole organism is beneficially energised by Odo-Magnetic influence, as that the breathing of a pure and genial atmosphere is a natural means of energising the invalid, although the influence upon the system is unperceived.

Modern scientific facts prove the immunity of whole classes of individuals from epidemic fevers, small-pox and cholera, owing to their daily contact with Electric and Magnetic forces in their employment. This is but one fact among many showing the value of Magnetic influences exerted almost imperceptibly.

We believe it is the motive power by which the will directs the voluntary forces of the system. Magnetic influence can be shown to have an effect as immediate, while at the same time more penetrating and permeating than Electricity, and its constant operation and its latent odic influences are far more exhilarating, and may be used with less possibility of producing any ill effects than any other vitalising means, however carefully applied.

Mr. J. S. ALLEN, University House, Arthur Street, Belfast.

"May 25, 1885.

"Having been for years overtaxed in mind and body through close application to business, entailing severe suffering from indigestion, sleeplessness, and spinal weakness, I sought your opinion and advice.

"I am pleased to tell you that after four months of your Treatment I can fully endorse your description of what Magnetism can effect in derangements arising from mental and nervous causes. Your method of adapting the remedy to the requirements of each case is to my mind using this most effective remedy in the best way. I had worn something of the kind for twelve months without the slightest benefit previous to my knowledge of your treatment, but since you prescribed for me I feel as though I had a new lease of life. I am strong, robust, and vigorous, and I consider your treatment to be the best investment I ever made."

Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT will always be pleased to attend to inquiries from sufferers, no matter how chronic or severe their affections may be, and will in every instance state his candid opinion of the case brought before him. All consultations, whether personally or by correspondence, are free. A series of essays and tractates upon Mr. Garratt's treatment may be had post free upon application at his Consulting Rooms, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to GOD, their own FATHER and MOTHER, and true BIBLE Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables PARENTS to teach one child or a family of twelve children, TEACHERS to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, EDUCATED LADIES to teach all ages, or MINISTERS without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

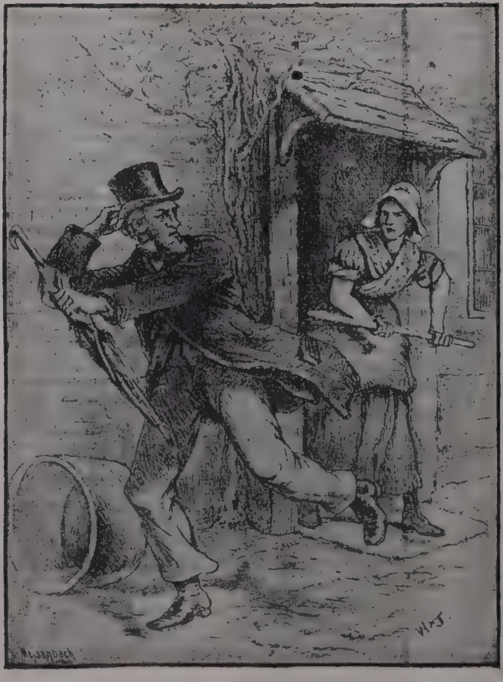
THE DEACON'S WEEK.

By ROSE TERRY COOKE.



This racy and telling narrative has been reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN for the purpose of Distribution in a neat form, suitable for enclosing in the modern square envelope.

"'Good mornin, ma'am,' and then I stopped. Words seemed to hang, somehow. I didn't want to pop right out that I'd come over to try'n convert her folks. I hemmed and swallered a little, and fin'lly I said, says I, 'We don't see you to meetin' very frequent, Mis' Vedder.'

"'No, you don't!' ses she, as quick as a wink. 'I stay to home, and mind my business.'

"'Well, we should like to hev you come along with us, and do ye good,' says I, sort of conciliatin'.

"'Look a here, Deacon!' she snapped. 'I've lived alongside of you fifteen year, and you knowed I never went to meetin'; we a'n't a pious lot, and you knowed it; we're poorer'n death and uglier'n sin. Jim, he drinks and swears, and Malvinny dono her letters. She knows a heap she hadn't ought to, besides. Now what are you a-coming here to-day for, I'd like to know, and talkin' so glib about meetin'? Go to meetin'! I'll go or come jest as I please, for all you. Now get out o' this!'

The Christian.

"OF THE WORLD."

"Be not conformed to this world."—Rom. xii. 2.

IT is deeply impressed on my heart that many professing Christians of this day are living under an awful delusion, from which may God deliver them. It is this: That they may be in the world, and share its follies and pleasures, and be in Christ at the same time! There is a great mistake somewhere.

Teachers have not made it plain enough what the world is, and the impossibility of a union between it and the believer; or else hearers have wilfully misunderstood their teachers. But a grand misunderstanding there must be, or we should not have the anomaly of people heart and soul in the world of fashion and pleasure, who never give an hour in the week to the service of Christ, who never think of Him for five minutes at a time, calling themselves by his name.

If the heavens opened and He appeared, it would be to them an awful surprise. If they were called to meet Him, they would meet a perfect stranger, one who never came into their "set," whose name was never breathed in their revels. They would expel the man or woman who could be so ill-bred as to introduce religion into a gathering for amusement—"there being a time for everything."

The mockery of such words! Truly they have a time for everything, earthly business, pleasure, idleness, sinfulness; but when does the time come for thought of Him whose name they bear? Never. Far better that men and women would get rid of all delusion, and come out into the light of their true position, saying honestly, what they already act, "We will not have this man to reign over us."

Let us ask, therefore, what is this world to which, as Christians, we are not to be conformed? First, it is the seen and temporal, in opposition to the unseen and eternal. No one but the fool, who says "There is no God," needs to have it proved to him that this life is but the ante-chamber to our real, our eternal life. Our souls, if we hearken to them, tell us this.

We know life here is short; that the things we prize slip from us like the sand we grasp and try to hold. Time will not stay. It hurries on, and we go with it to the eternal. If this be so, are we not mad, indeed, if we let the passing and the perishing drive out of our thoughts the abiding and eternal? However legitimate these things of time may be, should they not always be subordinate to the things of eternity? Even self-interest would say so. Yet it is truly "out of sight out of mind" with these nominal Christians, and if they get the "seen" well spent and cared for, they are content to let the unseen take its chance.

But the world means also the power in our midst usurping the place of God. There is a god of this world, bitterly opposed to the God of heaven. We see his spirit in men and women who hate the name of religion, and the society of real Christians. They do not know that the power that rules their life is the same that made the devils cry out, long ago, "What have we to do with Thee, Jesus, thou Son of God?"

But we see this spirit of the god of this world working, in a more refined way, among those who take upon them the name of Christ. For them the devil transforms himself into an angel of light. They profess to respect religion. They go through its forms and ceremonies. Yet all the same they have fallen down and worshipped the usurper. And what has he given them for their allegiance? The kingdoms of this world, riches, honours, pleasures, power, a name in Society. What does life mean to them? A time to enjoy these things. The theatre, the opera, the ballroom, the dance, the hunt: time for these ad libitum is living.

Can Christ come into this whirl? Certainly not. If they were sick, perhaps they would call for Him. But in their world of pleasure and self-indulgence He can have no place. They can see that for themselves. So He is not asked. They have yielded to the prince of this world, and all he requires is that they should enjoy themselves, conform to the customs of this world, and forget the next. They find no trouble in doing this. To float with the stream is easy work.

This usurper's kingdom is known by the name Society. And, oh, the ruin it is working among us with its deadly soul-destroying customs, habits, and pleasures, with its grace and elegance, and sin veiled so that you cannot see its hideousness! How it is leading men and women gently, gracefully, down to the eternal death. Lift the mask of beauty and culture over the face of Society and what do you see? Vileness and impurity that is making our land like Sodom and Pompeii, and preparing it for an overthrow swift as theirs.

And to this unholy power those naming the name of Christ are conformed. We send missions to the heathen because they bow down to idols of wood and stone, but their idolatry is a light thing compared to that going on at the shrine of the god of this world, under the name of Christianity. Men and women calling themselves Christians, and serving the devil. Away with the hideous lie! If they will be lost, let it at least be without this mockery of a name to live while they are dead, without presenting to the world this parody of Christianity.

The cross of Christ has a power still. It does make a change in the life. Christ does satisfy. Those who know Him do not require to go to these miserable world pleasures. This thing called religion by the votaries of Society is not the religion of Christ. God forgive the teachers who are keeping these poor deluded ones in ignorance of their true state, preaching to them smooth things; and God help his people to come out from among these idolaters, and let the world see that a mighty gulf divides the Christians from the world. M. B.

"A CRY FROM EAST TO WEST."

DEAR SIR,—In your article, "A Cry from the East to the West," in your issue of July 2, your correspondent, "A Layman," asks the following question: "Mr. Moody's visit brought shoals of West-end folk," Christian workers, "to the East-end for a season, but where are they now? gone, to a man and to a woman." Now allow me to answer this question. The little shoal of workers, for little it was after all, were only able to come for a season. Amongst those I met there, four are in China—one would hardly wish them elsewhere—a fifth is in America, a sixth I met two months ago in Cairo, intending (D.V.) to labour a few weeks there, a seventh is on the Continent working there, none are, as far as I know, not working for their Lord in the vineyard.

But after all, this is hardly the way to help the East-end. A more practical question is, "Why are they elsewhere?" and easier to answer, "Because they have been invited." How many meetings have I attended, and been invited, and even urged to go and work in China, India, Africa, &c. Why did we go to the East-end? Because Mr. Moody and his Committee gave us work and invited us to come. Why do not "A Layman" and his friends invite people to the East-end and give them work there? Why not start an "East-end Inland Mission," and provide centres of work? Why don't the clergy and ministers, who helped Mr. Moody, go and ask the West-end to assist with something else than money, for many of us can't give that?

Seven years ago a mutual friend asked me to stay from Saturday to Monday at a friend's house in the East-end. I went, and shrewdly guess it was "A Layman's" own house. From that time to this, periodically, I have invited myself to that same centre of work, because I have found a day among the London poor has wonderfully sharpened my love to my Master; but others have not found out this, and plenty would at once come if they saw definite work and the way made plain. Some it may be for one Sunday a month, others for a month in the year, and some for years together, but to get them you must fish and angle for them.

Do as the China Inland Mission have done. First, ask their Father for workers, and then set to work to find them. Get up meetings for the Christians to come to, as the Mildmay Committee do, with the same spiritual attractions. I have in my waste paper basket here, at the present moment, an invitation for the East-end, but it is to see a Duchess lay a stone, "accompanied by his Grace," but such would be no attraction for us. Ask for help in the Saviour's name, pointing out what is needed, provide food and house-roofing, and scores of Christian men and women, in responding to the call, will long and crave for fresh work when once they have tasted how useful they have been.—Yours, W. J. Robertson, CANON WILBERFORCE has passed the crisis of his painful illness, and there is every hope of a complete recovery; but his medical advisers want him to spend the autumn abroad.

THE PRESS AND THE PEOPLE.

THE Press is upon its trial. A great moral question has served as a touchstone; and how has the test been endured? A powerful movement sways the hearts of the People, and the Press—with rare exceptions—has nothing to do with it. By the Press we mean the leading journals of the day. Can it be that a huge work of reformation shall be accomplished, and the principal newspapers shall not be able to say, "We did it," or, at least, "We helped the doing of it"? The Times, referring to the recent Hyde Park demonstration, said: "The most vigorous efforts had been put forth to make the meeting equal to its name. Every part of London, even to remote suburbs, had been beaten up by means of placards, by announcements in chapels, and by teetotal associations and other bodies of people. Benefit societies, trade organisations, religious communities—all took part in organising the proceedings."

So much had been done to gain success. But The Times omitted to say what had not been done. The leading journal had done nothing, except to brand the indignant protest of the people as "an obscene agitation." The Demonstration was denounced beforehand, and a wish was expressed that in some way the strong arm of the law might be invoked to put down the entire movement.

Without saying that all journalism was opposed to the "crusade," we are quite justified in asserting that the general attitude of the daily press was unfavourable. Thanks are due in certain quarters; but what is to be said for The Times, The Standard, The Morning Post, and The Daily Telegraph? On the part of the weekly papers, so far as the secular Press is concerned, the case has been the same.

This state of things is significant, and may serve to open the eyes of the public to the moral condition of journalism. There has been a "revelation" concerning the Press. Where real, earnest, religious work has to be done, striking hard at the corruptions of Society, the help of the leviathans of the Press must not be reckoned upon. Rather let there be an expectation of antagonism, or, at the best, of cold indifference.

Happily there is another lesson taught by the fortunes of the "crusade." It is this: that the help of the secular Press, speaking generally, may be dispensed with, and its opposition may be deified. The Press is not all-powerful. It has been worshipped, and feared, and defied; but it is a man-made fallible thing after all. There is a rock against which it may dash itself; but only to be broken in pieces. Its treatment of the agitation for the removal of the foulest curse which can befall a civilised community, has shown its moral weakness. A large portion of the community, including a multitude of the worthiest of England's sons and daughters, have broken away from the tutelage of infallible editors, and have obeyed a higher call than is to be found in the ethics of leading articles.

The newspaper Press, taken in the aggregate, is not as it ought to be. It may happen that some other question shall arise, which shall serve still further to test its real character. It cannot long be borne that the dearest and most cherished convictions of the mass of religious men and women shall be set at nought by the professed exponents of "public opinion." In regard to the Hyde Park Demonstration, it is a notable fact that not only did sundry journals attack it when first proposed, but they have misrepresented it since it has been held. The indignant remonstrance addressed to the editor of The Standard by Rev. J. W. Horsley is only too well justified by the extraordinary specimen of reporting which appeared in the columns of that journal in regard to the Hyde Park meeting, and the ungentlemanly remarks contained in the leading article devoted to the subject. We hardly remember a cooler piece of journalistic assumption than that which appeared in the obscure paragraph where it was stated, in reference to the Demonstration, "There were eleven platforms, but the speakers at them were insignificant men, all unknown names." We regret that a paper which has often spoken well on social and national topics should have acted so unworthily on this great occasion. "I am jealous for the honour of the Press," says Mr. Horsley, "but the Press needs reform. The daily journals load their columns with trash, in which the gay and frivolous may find pleasure, while the tastes and wishes of those who seek for better things are utterly disregarded." As the nation becomes more earnest and right-minded, this aspect of journalism will become altogether intolerable. We venture to say that a great moral victory, achieved in the teeth of contumely and neglect on the part of the leading newspapers of the day, is a serious blow to the supremacy of journalism as it now exists. One of the People.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

DEAR SIR,—We are greatly encouraged by the continued reports from the Children's Seaside Services, and append some further extracts:—

Llandudno.—Mr. C. Arrowsmith had 1800 in the Happy Valley on Sunday, the 23rd. On another occasion a procession with 250 lanterns was organised. One day the ladies took fifty girls for a small picnic. Mrs. Menzies is to speak four times next week to ladies.

Eastbourne.—Messrs. E. Salisbury, H. M. Trickett, Rev. L. B. Wane, and other friends have had large meetings. There is no difficulty in getting people to come and listen; the difficulty is to get them to go away.

Brighton.—Mr. H. W. Figgis says:—"The mission this summer has been far better than in previous years. In North-street church a praise meeting was attended by fully 600. The large number of persons, old and young, after each service seeking personal talk about the great salvation is a most blessed feature of the work."

Aberystwith.—Mr. Josiah Spiers and Messrs. Banaster and Kidd in yacht Kingfisher. Mr. Banaster says: "Having had a capital fortnight at Ramsey, I joined Mr. Spiers at Aberystwith to give him a little rest, as he had been working for a month, three meetings a day. The mission here is one of the most encouraging I have ever witnessed. Some eighty or ninety attend the morning prayer-meeting, whilst the ordinary gatherings run from 400 to 1000."

At Weston, Worthing, Barmouth, Bournemouth, Ventnor and Sandown, I.W., Ilfracombe, Saltburn, Redcar, Tynemouth, St. Leonards, Felixstowe, and at North Berwick, Bridlington, Whitby, Exmouth, Margate, Dunoon and Lamlash, N.B., there has also been deeply encouraging work.

As many of these services have closed with the month of August, we ask the prayers of your readers that those who have now gone to their homes happy in the Saviour's love, may be witnesses for Him.

Yours very faithfully,
T. B. Bishop, Hon. Sec.

BRIGHTON SERVANTS' HOME.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask you at this time, when all hearts are stirred to do what they can for the protection of girls, to call the attention of your readers to the Servants' Home in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association in Brighton. It is situated close to the railway station, and therefore calculated to be most useful in this important town, where so many young girls from London and elsewhere come to seek situations. It has proved so in many cases; young girls arriving late at the station, strangers, some foreigners, have been brought in and carefully sheltered, instead of being exposed to the dangers of seeking lodgings just anywhere. Until lately this home only provided lodging for the servants, and they either boarded themselves or were boarded by private arrangement with the matron. Now all board together as a family, and instead of a working matron, we have a resident lady superintendent, whose wise and loving Christian influence has been greatly blessed; the servants bearing testimony both by word and letter to the comfort of the Home, and many to spiritual blessing received there; but there is much need for enlargement in the work—for some weeks we have had to take extra beds out, and refuse applications. Our landlord now offers us the adjoining house on favourable terms, and could we take it, it would not only enable us to carry on our present work more efficiently, but to carry out more fully that which was the original intention—preventive work amongst younger girls on the Bristol plan, taking them as they leave school, and having a few beds for those who are being trained. There is a branch of this work at Kemp Town and also at West Brighton, but one is greatly needed in this central part near the railway station; and if we had the extra house-room, it would work in well with our present plan.

Ladies connected with the Metropolitan Association, and others, have borne testimony to the usefulness of this Home, many of their girls having been cared for until situations were found for them, and those in Brighton continuing to attend the Bible-class, where it is possible. But great as is the need, we do not feel justified in accepting our landlord's offer of the second house unless we have in hand at least £100 to meet the extra rent and furnishing expenses, as we have no funds from the Y.W.C.A.; our subscriptions are small, and the Home, in its present state, quite too small to be anything like self-supporting. But I believe God has owned and is blessing the work, therefore I do not think He will withhold the money so urgently needed now. I believe that many of your readers, interested specially in the Lord's work amongst young women and girls, will be glad to help at this crisis to extend it here, if you are kind enough to make the Home and its need known. Our landlord requires an answer as soon as possible.

Donations may be sent to the Hon. Treasurer, Miss Perrott, 17, Dyke-road; or to G. B. Pasley, Esq., 35, Vernon-terrace; or, Messrs. Hall, Bevan & West, Bankers, North-street. Miss Davis, our lady superintendent, will be glad to see and give any information she can to visitors who are kind enough to call at the Home, Alexandra House, 69, Gloucester-road, Brighton.—I am faithfully yours,

Annette Cubitt, Hon. Sec. Alexandra
Branch, Y.W.C.A., Brighton.

LITERATURE FOR THE BLIND.—Dr. Armitage, of the British and Foreign Blind Association, says that, without wishing to disparage Dr. Moon's system, which is invaluable "for those whose touch has been destroyed by hard manual work, or for a large number of persons who lose their sight in adult life," the Braille system is being largely adopted in Blind Institutions as being readily learned and easily written, and is the basis of the musical notation now in use. The British and Foreign Bible Society has complete sets of plates, and can supply the entire Bible in either Dr. Moon's or the Braille system, should there be any delay in the renewal of Dr. Moon's plates.

MR. MOODY'S CONFERENCE AT NORTHFIELD.

[FROM OUR OWN REPORTER.]

THIRD DAY, FRIDAY, AUGUST 7.

THE attendance increases, while the interest also grows and deepens. The weather, though of course warmer than is exactly agreeable to a stranger from England, is bright and beautiful, setting off to the best advantage the natural charms of the neighbourhood, and lending both comfort and colour to the outside aspects of the Convention. On the evening of the second day the arrival at Northfield of Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, aroused much expectancy, especially among those who had heard him at previous conferences and knew the richness of his thought and his gifts as a public teacher. His facial appearance awakens the appreciative prepossession of the stranger. With square, well-set head, on a figure of goodly proportions, with features finely cut in a classic mould, and a quiet, dignified demeanour, he seems the beau ideal of one who will command attention by fresh and invigorating thoughts expressed in language at once simple and choice. Mr. Moody holds the Doctor in very high esteem, and it is partly at his request that I give full notes of the addresses delivered at the Conference by the Boston preacher. Even when dissociated from the charm of his personal presence, I feel sure the readers of these utterances, will find in them much that will throw new light on the Holy Scriptures and bring out unsuspected beauties in many a well-known and perhaps hackneyed passage. That, at least, is how they have struck myself. His first address this morning on the Life of the Ascended Christ will be found not unworthy of so transcendant a theme. I certainly felt, after hearing it, that I had a far clearer view and understanding of the grandeur and glory of the risen Christ, and of the responsibility attaching to one who claims to be his disciple. [This and other addresses will be given in our next and future issues.]

In the early part of the meeting Mr. Sankey had sung with great and expressive charm a hymn composed by an Indian young lady,

> "In the secret of his presence
> How my soul delights to hide."

The minds of the company were further prepared by some very weighty and solemnising exhortations from Rev. S. H. Pratt of Pittsfield, based on an incident in the life of Jacob, about the need of more personal communion with God. We hear a good deal, he said, about the wrestling Jacob, but very little about the wrestling angel. The lesson of this experience of the patriarch, when the hand of God was laid on him and he was to realise human weakness, is very pertinent now. We are apt to depend too much on such gatherings and on our fellow-men. "Meditation" is a word that has almost dropped out of our vocabulary. Who has time now to be alone with God in closet communion? The reason why we have so many spiritual dwarfs among us is that we do not get our nourishment direct and undiluted from God and his Book. Like Jacob, we must get self-conquered if we would have power with our fellow-men. When Jacob met his brother Esau the morning after his interview with the Angel of the Lord, there was no need for the costly presents he had brought, thinking to propitiate his offended brother. When Esau saw him coming along, weak and halting on his thigh, all anger and prejudice fled, so that there was a perfect reconciliation between them. We need to be much alone with God, that we may better understand our own weakness and his almighty power, and that we may in his strength go forth to meet and bless our fellow-men.

At the close of his address, Dr. Gordon had referred to the death of Stephen and to Christ "standing" on the right hand of God as if watching with eager interest the faithful testimony of his servant. As Dr. Gordon sat down, Mr. Moody said, one of the best things I got from Dr. Bonar of Glasgow at our last convention was just as a meeting was breaking up. He was speaking of the death of Stephen, and he said, "Did you ever notice this? The Jews accused Stephen of blaspheming Moses. The moment he was accused of that God seemed to light up his face with the glory that lighted up the face of Moses on the mount." Said Mr. Moody, "I went a good many days on the strength of that precious word."

One of the rising stars of the young American ministry in the region of Bible exposition is Rev. W. W. Clark, of Staten Island, whom I mentioned in my last letter as having given a very clear and comprehensive outline of the drift of Scripture teaching and the leading characteristics of the various books. Following up Dr. Gordon to-day he said: The Bible sets forth two things—Christ and the Throne. The whole of the Old Testament may be said to point to the cross. The Gospels tell us the story of the cross. When we come to Acts, the Epistles and Revelation, we have a picture of Jesus on the throne. We have failed in giving proper emphasis to this last thought. We who have accepted Christ as our Saviour ought not to think of Him now in connection with Calvary and humiliation, but as He now is seated in the place of power and glory as our Advocate and Intercessor. We long for the time when we shall be with Him.

Mr. Moody, ever on the alert, had a little story ready to clench Mr. Clark's final words. A young minister who had just returned from Palestine was describing how he had visited the different places where the Saviour lived and worked. An old bishop who heard him said when he finished his recital: "My brother, I had rather be five minutes with Christ where He is now than five years where He has been."

Dr. Pentecost said: Christ is now in his glory appearing for us, but He was on the earth for us, and the writer of the Hebrews admonishes us to look to and consider Him who endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself. When we meet with trial and weariness and discouragement and disappointment, let us look at Christ and see how He went through it all. In Heb. ii., we are also shown our identity with Jesus Christ. As we are in the world so was He; as He is in the glory so are we potentially, and shall be actually. God regards Jesus and his believing disciples as one. So long as we simply consider ourselves as down here in the midst of difficulty and discouragement we will be at a disadvantage. In the Incarnation Christ "took hold" of our human nature, but He has not dropped us now that He is in glory. He went back to the bosom of the Father carrying with Him a full humanity. There we are in his grip at the right hand of God until the day when He shall say, "Here am I and the children whom God hath given me."

In the afternoon, the thought of progress in the unfolding of Scripture truths, which had been mentioned in previous sittings, was expanded, to the evident appreciation and delight of the hearers. Rev. W. W. Clark described in outline the course and scope of Barnard's book, already referred to in these notes. The New Testament, he said, may be divided into four parts: the Gospels contain the building of the temple, or the life and work of Christ for us; the Acts show the doors of the temple thrown open, and the world invited in; the Epistles describe the life of the dwellers in the temple; while the closing book unfolds the final and glorious consummation.

Following in the same line, Dr. Gordon distinguished thus between the doctrine of the Old and New Testaments: In the first, repentance comes before salvation; in the second, salvation precedes repentance. Dr. Pierson insisted on the organic unity of the Bible, which would be imperfect if the smallest part were taken away. Another simile he used with great effect was in comparing the Book of books to a grand orchestral chorus; every book has its own distinct note, but there is perfect harmony throughout. The Apocalypse is one magnificent burst of song, in which heaven and earth combine. The development of teaching was further dwelt upon by Dr. Pentecost, who said the watchword of the Old Testament was "Do," while that of the New was "Done."

FOURTH DAY, SATURDAY, AUGUST 8.

The pièce de resistance of this morning's meeting was another admirably clear and practical address by Dr. Gordon, on "The Threefold Sonship of Christ and the Believer." Notes of it will be furnished in an early issue. It will be enough now to say that the three main thoughts were the Sonship of Christ, as One begotten by the Father, as witnessed by the Holy Spirit, and as manifested to the world. These were applied to the life of the believer in a most practical way.

Mr. George C. Needham, who, with Mrs. Needham, had arrived from the Niagara Conference the previous day, said the sonship of the believer is a fact that must be fully accepted before it can be realised. It is a false humility that would lead any of us to say, "I hope so," when questioned as to our sonship. Two thoughts press themselves on the mind and heart in connection with this subject. The first is the dignity of Divine sonship. It is enough to thrill our hearts and keep us on a high level of ecstasy throughout our lifetime, and to make us march through the world with the tread of conquerors. Then there is the responsibility of sonshsp. Let us imitate our Father in heaven in the exercise of grace and love to our fellow-men, even those who are our enemies.

Terse and incisive as ever, Dr. Pierson added some thoughts. He cited the Roman custom of a father publicly investing his son who came of full age with the manly "toga," and in addition to that an elegatly embroidered robe, to illustrate the investment of the believer, first with the pure white garment of Christ's righteousness, and the embroidered robe of Holy Ghost power for service. Recurring to his favourite idea of the development of doctrine the Doctor presented Christ in this sevenfold aspect —the Promised One, the Anointed One, the Crucified One, the Risen One, the Ascended One, the Glorified One, and the Coming One. In all these respects there is a wonderful identification between Christ and the believer. In his closing sentences Dr. Pierson gave forth one of those brilliant flashes of suggestive thought that ever and again scintillate and light up his addresses. Touching on the resurrection of our Lord, he said it was this doctrine that made the grave lose its terrors to him. "I hope the Lord will come before death," he said, "but if it be the will of God that we should die, let us remember that Jesus Christ has been in the grave. It has seemed to me that before He went there the grave was a dark, dense cavern, with only one opening, and that on the earthward side. When Christ went into it He burst asunder the bands of death, making, so to say, an opening on the other side of the grave, turning the gloomy cavern into a tunnel, through which the light streams in from the heavenward side." This beautiful idea seemed greatly to take the fancy of Mr Moody, who is always in the most receptive attitude, with pencil in hand, to note down the many good things spoken by those who surround him on the platform. Doubtless he will quote this saying of Dr. Pierson's in days to come, as one of the gems of thought of the Northfield Convention of 1885.

GENERAL GRANT'S FUNERAL.

This being the day of the funeral obsequies of the deceased General, whose praise seems to be in the lips of every American one meets, the thoughts of many attending the Convention were naturally turned to that event. I cannot say whether it was the result of design, but, if not, it was a remarkable coincidence, of which Mr. Moody himself took notice, that Dr. Pierson closed his comforting words about the light from beyond the grave, just as the slow tolling of a bell was heard without. Mr. Moody at once rose and said: "I suppose there are a hundred million people, throughout the world to-day, with their eyes turned towards New York, where a most solemn procession will be wending its way to General Grant's last resting-place. All over the land at this hour services are being held, and I think it would be most appropriate that we should spend fifteen minutes in earnest prayer for the bereaved family of the nation that mourns its loss." He then called on three gentlemen to lead in prayer, Hon. Mr. Williams, of Cambridge, a representative in the Senate of the State of Massachusetts, Rev. J. Hardie from Alabama, who was a colonel in the Confederate Army during the civil war; and Dr. Gordon of Boston. The assembly, with almost one consent, knelt while these three friends prayed in touching tender words for a blessing on the family of the late warrior-statesman, and on the people over whom for eight years he presided as chief of the executive government. Perhaps the most earnest in his petitions was the ex-Confederate officer; the spectacle of North and South uniting as with one heart in doing due homage to the man who led the one to dearly bought victory, and that brought on the other as dearly bought defeat, was a most pathetic and yet happy one in its augury of good for the future of the undivided nation.

Later in the afternoon a large number of the Northfield townsfolk assembled in the public hall, situated immediately opposite Mr. Sankey's residence, to hold a memorial service. Suitable addresses, recounting the career of the dead General, the leading characteristics of his life, and the services he rendered to the nation, were delivered by Dr. Pentecost, Hon. Mr. Williams, and Professor Sawyer (principal of Mr. Moody's boy's schools). Mr. Sankey sang most feelingly and sympathetically, "Beyond the Smiling and the Weeping" (which, it may be remembered, was sung at President Garfield's funeral) and "When the Mists have rolled away." The feeling of regret at the decease of this illustrious and tried servant of the Republic appears to be as sincere as universal. In conversation with some who have special facilities to know I have learned that though not a man who wished to become conspicuous in the religious world, General Grant was at heart a decided Christian man. Much satisfaction is expressed here at the warmth with which many in Old England have shared in the tributes of respect to his memory. One friend remarked that it would surely be a thing henceforth impossible for Great Britian and the United States ever to be in open strife with each other.

CENTENNIAL TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION.—The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America has declined to send delegates to the demonstration at Philadelphia on the alleged ground that the latter may be political in its aims. Roman Catholics are not usually afraid of politics.

SQUALID LIVERPOOL.—In an article under this title, The Liverpool Daily Post says:—"Rev. H. J. S. Wood, M.A., has given up preferment in the Church to do something to ameliorate the condition of our dense population. Gay-street is a fitting spot for the headquarters of an attack upon squalor, and Mr. Wood has selected that locality for his philanthropic operations. An old warehouse has been converted into a Mission Hall. Plainly, but neatly furnished, the place is made bright with flowers and texts of Scripture on the walls. In the neighbourhood the bulk of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics, and consequently avoid any effort of a religious character which does not emanate from their own Church, but Mr. Wood describes his mission as 'an effort to raise all, without distinction of creed, to temperance, soberness, and chastity.' A recent visit to the services showed the up-hill work which has been commenced, and the persistent effort that must be put forth before any good can be effected. Mr. Wood has secured several ladies as workers, and in his address he dwelt upon the drunkenness and squalor of the district, and expressed a strong belief that if there were fewer facilities for drinking, and the people could be brought to lead a godly and sober life, Liverpool might become 'a bright spot on the Mersey.'" We hope to hear more of this good man.

OUR HIDDEN HAMLETS.—6.

SCARSWELL may have improved during the last ten years; if not, God help its people. One generally discovers, in every place, some few of the Lord's witnesses; but here, at one time, I was inclined to believe that this spot had been wholly given over to the devil. I heard that the Mormonites had drawn several poor dupes from among its ignorant cottagers, nor did I wonder to hear it. Any "ism," or "schism," bearing the faintest appearance of reality, must have possessed attractions for those who had been shut up to the so-called ministry of the local clergyman.

My first visit was to an old blind couple whose natural infirmities might have prepared them for listening to the sweet sounds of the Gospel. But nothing of the kind; and they very soon gave me to understand they wanted neither the Gospel nor myself in their home. They were having their "evil things" in this life, and were therefore sure of "good things" in the life to come. In fact, they rather gloated over the idea that the squire and parson would fare but badly in the next world, while they would be enjoying themselves in heaven.

Their neighbours all appeared equally churlish, giving me to realise some of the difficulties encountered when the early Methodists began their village work.

But God had not left Himself without witness, even here in Scarswell. I found another old blind man, the very ideal of an English rustic. I fancy I can see him now, clad in his white smock-frock, all braided before and behind, and reaching down nearly to his shoes. Though possibly the only one in the village, a true child of God was he. They say there is no music in the tune, "Rousseau's Dream," and that it is ill adapted for the grand hymn, "Rock of Ages," and all this may be very true; but whether from old association or not, I cannot say, the two, when used connectedly, have, in my hearing, aroused a congregation of professing infidels to fill a large church with such a volume of harmony as one seldom hears in the public worship of professing Christians. And I believe it was while using these connectedly, as I sat by his lonely fireside, that I discovered in the old smock-frocked cottager a brother in the Lord Jesus. I saw the tears start from his sightless eyeballs, and run down his sunken cheeks as soon as I began the hymn. "I've mony a time bin the instigation o' havin' that sung in bygone days, sir," said he, when I finished; and I suppose, as old memories came crowding into his mind, he found it difficult to decide whether he were pained or pleased. But, oh, the cruelty which that dear old saint had to endure for belonging to Christ! His foes were they of his own household; and, as he afterwards told me, my visit drew on him the most violent rage from the members of his family. He went home soon after I left the neighbourhood, nor was I sorry to hear he had gone.

But nothing makes me remember this village better than the test to which the efficacy of the two sacraments was subjected, as considered distinct from faith in the Lord Jesus. I was stopping with a clerical friend, who just at this time was requested by the vicar to visit the poor of Scarswell, A pronounced Sacramentalist himself, it was very natural for us to find ourselves engaged in controversy that at times became rather heated. One day he told me that he was about to baptize a young man whom he had persuaded to receive the ordinance.

"Let us mark, then, its effect upon him," said I, for I knew him to be a graceless young scoundrel. "Well, and how about Smith?" asked I some little time afterwards, as his conduct had proved anything but satisfactory. "I will answer you plainly," he replied. "He is tenfold more the child of the devil than he ever was before."

Just before I left the neighbourhood my friend and I were going over to Scarswell, to visit the poor as usual, when he told me he purposed administering the Lord's Supper to an elderly woman who was very ill, and asked me to accompany him to her home. I knew she was unconverted, but not understanding conversion himself, he determined to carry out his idea, in spite of all I could advance against it.

"There, Mary," said he, when the ceremony was over, "you have the consolation of knowing that you have obeyed the last dying command of your Lord and Saviour, Christ."

"Yes, sir," meekly replied Mary, who, like the lame man at the temple gate, evidently expected an alms, which I fear she did not get.

But, be this as it may, when we went again old Mary was missing, and, in answer to my friend's inquiries, he was told that later on that same night she had been blaspheming so horribly, that the women who were attending her fled in horror from the house, and that the vicar (now roused to action as well as indignation) had prevailed on the parish authorities to take her off to the workhouse, where, I believe, she afterwards ended her days impenitently, even according to the judgment of my friend.

And yet, while these dark places remain in the almost undisturbed possession of the great enemy of souls, numbers of enlightened people, or people who claim to be such, are arguing, and often actually quarrelling, about distinctions between Christ's Body, his House, and his Bride; or about some other doctrine of Holy Writ, on which opinions will be found to differ as long as men may hold opinions. Three ladies, sisters in the flesh, and, I believe, sisters in Christ, have just recently had a quarrel about a believer's standing in heaven, and now are unable to hold fellowship with each other. Is it not very lamentable, this kind of thing? Souls, by thousands, are perishing, and, in his poor, hidden ones, the Lord Jesus remains unfed, unclad, and unvisited, by those who, with time on their hands and money in their pockets, are, forsooth, labouring at doing nothing, and, Athenian-like, going about the spiritual world seeking ever to hear and learn some new thing. Knowledge is undoubtedly precious, but Scripture saith it puffeth up. JOHN E. LINNELL.

MISSIONARIES IN AFRICA.

We are very glad to find in The Standard the following letter with reference to Bishop Taylor's party:—

SIR,—I noticed an article in The Standard of August 10 purporting to set forth the condition of Bishop Wm. Taylor's party of missionaries at Loanda, South Coast of Africa. As some of the statements are very misleading, I wish to call the attention of the public to the facts in the case.

The writer states that soon death terminated the sufferings of several. Only one of the party has died up to the present time. Charles Miller, of Baltimore, died on May 7, not through any lack of care; but he had unfortunately imbibed the idea that he would trust the Lord for health, and would not take any medicine. The article referred to indicates that the party were in a starving condition. The facts are, we had plenty of good, wholesome food—not dainties, to be sure; neither did we use wine as a beverage, and I am satisfied that we were better off than if we had used it. Several of the party have escaped sickness altogether. On July 14 the entire party were well and happy.

Orders had first been received from the Bishop, who has been up in the interior for some time, for the remainder of the party to come. "They were expecting to go on one of the Coanza River steamers any day." Two of the young men, who had thought they would have to return to America on account of ill health, and had made arrangements to go, have fully recovered, and gone to the interior. There is no thought on the part of any to abandon the work. We fully understand that the Christianisation of Africa means much privation and hardship, but we have invested our lives in it for Christ's sake, and the motto of our party is "Africa for Christ." I am now on my way to America for my wife and children, and other recruits, to labour in this needy field.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

LEVI D. JOHNSON, M.D.

SIN and GRACE.

AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK CONVENTION.*

By REV. H. WEBB-PEPLOE.

I WISH to put before you what I believe to be the mind of God on the subject of sin, in order that we may realise, as believers in Christ, what a marvellous blessedness it is for us to have the propitiation that God has given us in his own dear Son; for there seem to be many who do not quite understand what the Lord Jesus Christ has intended to do, or what it is that they really need Him for. They have accepted Christ, as we have heard, for pardon, and they think that they have accepted Christ for one more final act of deliverance from all that can be called sin—when they offer themselves to Him for sanctification. I would say, at the outset, that if Jesus Christ delivers from sin as a principle, as well as saves from the commission of sin, then the man so saved must be living a more or less independent existence from the Lord. The Lord Jesus Christ may be his Keeper; He may be his Life; but He is not the same Jesus to that man that He was at the outset; He is not to him the Cleanser; He is not to him the Provider of perpetual acceptance in the eyes of God. Such a man is more or less compelled to live a life of personal self-satisfaction; he cannot centre his soul in Christ as a dependent sinner just from moment to moment. The man that believes in a sanctification which eradicates sin from his person, as a principle, must be satisfied with his own condition, and be able to take his place more or less independent of the Saviour, even while he may say that He hangs upon that Saviour for his vital joys and powers from moment to moment.

My object is to trace what I believe to be the mind of God on the condition that attaches to man up to the last moment of his existence on earth—that is to say, however much Christians may have rejoiced in the Saviour, and have known experimentally the power of God the Holy Ghost, however advanced they may be in actual personal sanctification, they are, according to my own conviction, and as I gather the truth from God's Word, dependent upon the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon, for power, and for actual acceptance in the sight of God, to the very last instant they live upon earth.. And because I believe this to be true, it seems to be incumbent upon me to meet those who differ from me on this subject, and to put before them the Word of God as clearly as I can trace it; and if, by the power of God, we are enabled to see the actual personal condition of each man, in regard to this terrible subject of sin, to the last, then, and then only, shall we apprehend what a glorious Saviour we have; what boundless tenderness and loving patience there is in the God of heaven towards his children on earth; what a boundless wealth of mercy there is in the Saviour, that He should continue to bear with the sinful condition of those for whom He died to make them God's true children for ever.

What marvellous, unspeakable yearnings of God the Holy Ghost, and what tender workings there must be in the Saviour in reference to those who provoke the Spirit, however unconsciously—for I speak of men who do not know they sin, perhaps, but who, if I gather the truth from God's Word, are perpetually, in that sense, acting as a provocation to the Spirit of God, by reason of their want of actual perfection. Therefore the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost must all be bearing and forbearing in a way that ought to enhance the beauty of their provision for sinners all through life, and the intended final perfection of every true child of God. How is it that we are to write every man in this world down a sinner to the last moment of his life? You shall be the judges of what God the Holy Ghost has set before us in the Holy Word; and then if, by God's mercy, we come to a right conclusion of what is God's truth in this matter, there shall rest upon each of us the blessed privilege—for I do acknowledge its unspeakable blessedness, even while I recognise its tremendousness—of just taking ourselves instant by instant to God as sinners to the last, saying, "God be merciful to me the sinner;" and thanking God that there is not only a once-accomplished justification when I believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, but a perpetually giving Christ for sanctification; so that without this perpetual action of Christ, I should have to acknowledge myself at any moment to be lost, but that, thank God, I have to rejoice with a joy unspeakable and full of glory if I rightly accept the provision that God has made for me. There appears to be a great anomaly—a regular paradox, as we term it in theological language —in this statement: that there can be this realisation of sin every moment of a man's life; and yet that there can be an unspeakable joy and calm every moment of his life. You ask, "How can these things be?" Before I proceed to trace the mind of the Holy Ghost on sin, and then on grace, I ask you to realise the tremendously vital distinction between the penalty for sin committed and the guilt incurred at every sinful act, and the want of communion that may be realised when the soul is brought into a position of disturbance between itself and the great God in heaven.

I ask you to realise that at the moment when you first believed in the Lord Jesus Christ as your Saviour, the question of the penalty for all sin, whatever it might be and however much repeated in your daily life, has once for all been settled in God's sight independently of you altogether. You awake to it, and you clearly rest upon the finished fact, from the very moment that you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. The question of the penalty was settled upon Calvary, and has nothing whatever to do with the sinner in regard to the provision God makes for him. The question of the penalty was between God and Christ. Christ satisfied the demand of the Law, and granted in God's sight a complete pardon to all mankind, who are willing to accept the provision by faith, for all the sins they have committed; so that they are delivered at once by their faith from the penalty they have incurred.

But the child of God, however far he may be advanced, if he be enlightened by the Spirit, may awake to the consciousness that he has been incurring guilt in the sight of God, not because he has committed what are known among ourselves as definite acts of sin against the codes of morality and respectability, but because he comes short of the standard that God puts up, and it may be brought home to his soul that he has committed an act, or spoken a word, or thought a thought, from which guilt will arise in the sight of God. Every thought, word, and deed, that proceeds from him, has, in a deep spiritual sense, brought guilt upon his soul by being short of the glory of God, lacking the perfect holiness which characterised every thought and act of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But you will observe again, independent of the man, the provision that Christ Jesus made for sinners and for sin, keeps the man—if my doctrine be right—moment by moment cleansed from this guilt, altogether independent of his feelings or experience; that is the availing power of the blood; for though the man comes short of the glory, and though he cannot walk in this mortal flesh up to the standard of the Lord Jesus Christ's perfection, and is, therefore, in that sense, and only in that sense, a sinner, yet he need never have a feeling of depression on account of these unconscious shortcomings, because the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ "is cleansing him from all sin." That is the benefit of that glorious text. Moment by moment as the thing proceeds from the man, coming forth from him, springing from the sinful nature that lies deep within him, unconscious, it may be, of guilt at the moment, yet incurring guilt, the man finds, by the grace of God, that he is kept cleansed, instant by instant, through the operation of the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ in God's sight. That is the second great question we have to deal with: first, the penalty, secondly the guilt.

Now, thirdly, the child of God is conscious of something altogether independent of the question and of the penalty of sin, and the question of the guilt. He is grieved at times—we have all found it so; he is disturbed in his blessed sense of communion with God by the fact that he has broken some one of God's perfect enactments; he has come short of the glory of God; he has wandered in thought at least from God, and communion is disturbed. Now, the question of communion has to be settled, and communion can only be restored by an experimental action on your part. There is only one thing we can do as God's children, and what is that? "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." So that when I awake to the fact of having in any sense broken God's holy law, I may instantly be restored to communion with my Father and my Saviour, and there is perfect peace in the soul again. We have a precious Advocate and a glorious Propitiation in the presence of God; and, therefore, if we discover our guilt, and confess it, in that moment the restoration is complete. Keep clear by instantly confessing, directly you discover anything between yourself and your Father in heaven.

If you have followed me thus far, and have at all agreed with the doctrine I have tried to trace as to the penalty, the guilt, and the communion, or want of communion, I am not afraid to trace out now what I believe to be the saddening condition that every man exists in to the last moment of his life on earth, and yet the glorious position we occupy in having such a perfect Saviour as God has made his Son Jesus Christ.

In Romans v. we find, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."

Now I am not proceeding or proposing to treat this subject in a general way, in which way it would be taken as a great announcement of the justification truth which is supposed to be the close of this great judicial passage of the Epistle to the Romans, but I take the words in the last verse but one in their pure assertion, "Where sin abounded grace did much more abound;" and I want you to realise that sin abounds. Now, I believe that is contrary to many of our ideas. When we think of ourselves as pardoned sinners, we fancy sin is done away as well as sins, and that from that moment we may begin to walk in perfect deliverance from any presence of evil. Are you prepared, as the Lord Jesus Christ has told us, to go to be judged? He is the kindest Judge that ever lived; but He is also the most strict and stern that ever was known, and cannot abate one single jot or tittle of the law because you desire to escape from the exact standard that God puts before us. We are here to-night not to be judged by any human ideas, but by God's high standard. It is not what men think of themselves or deem to be kind, but what God deems, what the Holy Spirit deems, and it is that judgment which I must accept.

With regard to sin, whether it is a new sin or the acts of a sinner before conversion, the principles laid down remain the same for one as the other. When we speak of sin, you are perfectly aware that it is the inclination of the child of God as well as of the sinner to lower God's standard to suit our own condition. We read in some writings that sin is only what we consciously commit or say against the law of God, or the requirements of our heavenly Father. Is that to be our standard at a Holiness Convention? God forbid, I say, with all my soul. I say, God forbid that we should ever accept a standard with regard to the subject of sin which lowers God's requirements and our own possibilities, or to our own conception of what God really demands. Let us take the Word of God in all its fulness and know sin as God has traced it before us. Let us pass on to some of the passages from Scripture.

In 1 John iii. 4 we read these words: "Sin is the transgression of the law." Now, I suppose you do not admit as Christians that you have escaped from the law of God, or say that because you are saved you are not under the law, but under grace. The law is the expression of God's mind. The law of God is to be the delight of my soul. God has never changed the standard or altered the tone of the language. God has left the law what it always was—the actual expression of his mind and will, and, therefore, the law remains what it ever was. If you and I are led by the Spirit, we bring forth fruit as far as God will enable us to bring it forth. In the first place, take the letter of the law and write that before your own souls and ask whether you can, like the young man, say, "All these things I have kept." Thank God if you can—if you can say that you have kept the letter of the Ten Commandments since you received sanctification, or since you came to a Keswick Convention. But what of the spirit of the law as Jesus enunciated it in Matthew v. 6, 7—the look, the inward feeling of the heart, these make adultery and murder; for those feelings that the Lord Jesus has declared are actually as guilty as an open act of the hand. What shall we say in regard to it? Thank God if you can say—though I doubt if your tongue would dare to say the words—"All these have I kept according to the spirit."

* A full Report of this Convention is given in The Life of Faith, for September, from which this address is quoted. It has not been revised by the speaker.

Go a step farther, and look at the tremendous expansion of the law. Go to Matthew xxvii. 32 and onward, and with St. Paul to Romans xiii., on the doctrine of love—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Will any man say he has kept that law? And once more, add to this the new law, the new commandment the Lord Jesus gives in John xiii. 34, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." Let us think of the meaning of that "as," and then to hear a man say, "I have kept that law"—love one another "as I have loved you." Let me ask you to realise that a transgression of the law is sin, and that, if a man has failed for a single instant in loving me as Jesus loves me, while I am speaking, and hurting his feelings, perhaps, that man is a sinner. We never loved each other as the Lord Jesus Christ loves us all.

Turn to a sentence in 1 John v. 17, "All unrighteousness is sin." According to the Greek the word means that everything that lacks the thoroughness and glory of the standard that God lifts up, is sin. What are we to say to this?—everything coming short of the perfection of God is sin! "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Go one step farther and look at the sins that may be committed by word. "By thy words," says our Lord in Matthew xii. 37, "thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." And in the preceding verse God says that "every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." Now look at Proverbs x. 19, "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin." God does not change his standard because that is Proverbs and the other Matthew; God's Word remains the same in Matthew as in Proverbs, and you and I must put Preverbs and Matthew together and have wisdom to see that in a multitude of words there is sure to be sin, and that for every idle word I shall be brought to an account with God.

I would go a step further and ask, What about thoughts? Turn to 2 Corinthians x. 5. There we are told to "bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." That is where some of my friends go wrong; they do not study their tenses in Greek sufficiently. Let us turn to Proverbs xxiv. 9. We are told that "the thought of foolishness is sin;" and remember that the soul that sinneth shall die. And that applies to God's saints exactly as much as to God's unsaved sinners, until we recognise the blessed truth I spoke of—perfect provision with regard to penalty, and perpetual provision with regard to guilt; that keeps the soul of man from perishing. Sinning necessarily brings condemnation; so that we are perfectly right in saying that a child of God, for one sin, would pass to everlasting shame if it were not for the precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

Now, with regard to other sins, we must take a general view of them. And what think you of such words as those in Proverbs xxi. 4, where we read, "The ploughing of the wicked is sin," or "The light of the wicked," as it is in the margin? Then go to James ii. 9: "If ye have respect to persons." I am speaking to the children of God who want to be honest—"If ye have respect to persons ye commit sin." And what about those solemn words in James iv. 17: "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin"?

We have read about our passions and our lusts, and there we have the positive side of sin. I remember being much struck with this remark upon sin—that sin was not so much a positive quantity as a negative one, and the negative side of sin is perhaps the most tremendous judgment of the people of God. We read in St. John's Gospel (xvi. 9): "Of sin, because they believe not on Me." That is not only for the world. Then such words as those in Romans xiv. 23: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." And those words in James iii. 2: "For in many things we all offend." Let us now take one or two texts affirming the general condition of mankind. In Proverbs xx. 9, we read, "Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?" Then go to Ecclesiastes vii. 20, where we read, "There is not a just man that sinneth not." But what is perhaps the passage most solemnly declaratory of the meaning of God's Word is to be found in Job iv. 17: "Shall mortal man be more just than God? Shall a man be more pure than his Maker?" What are the alternative readings of that? "Shall mortal man be just before God? Shall any man be pure with his Maker?" But that you say is Eliphaz the Temanite talking to Job. But St. Paul quotes Job. v. 13 in the third chapter of his First Epistle to the Corinthians. He quotes the words as coming from God, and says that God inspired his lips when he spoke those words. Then he says, in Job. iv. 18, "Behold He put no trust in his servants; and his angels He charged with folly." Now the greatest authority upon Hebrew, Delitzsch, informs us that in that passage God is speaking about his angels and servants, and that though not actually guilty of sin, yet their shortcoming in regard to holiness is such as to make them chargeable with folly in the sight of their perfectly holy Maker. I believe that Delitzsch is right, as far as I can speak on a matter of that kind. Every word of God testifies to one fact, that there is not a perfectly just man upon earth; that even when he is just, it cannot be said that he "doeth good and sinneth not;" and why? because Job, the most perfect man we read of, is brought into the realisation of his true condition—of a man of whom it is affirmed "that in all this he sinned not with his lips;" yet when this man comes before God, with the perfection of God before him, he says, "Behold, I am vile." Yet that is the man who would not let go his integrity, and of whom it was said that all things were bright and clear with him. He calls himself vile when he sees his God, and recognises his own condition. If that be the state of a holy servant of God, such as Isaiah, or Ezekiel, or Jeremiah, or Peter, or John, when he comes to the vision of his living God, when they see their inherent corruption, shall we not acknowledge that sin hath abounded? It is abounding and must abound as long as man remains with the inherent principle of evil indwelling their mortal flesh, and they are subjected to the lusts and corruption during the time that we are in a state of probation. I am convinced that it is good for us to be subjected to the presence of evil here; not to be under the power of evil—but its presence, whether it be physical disease or spiritual corruption.

Now many of you will ask, as Christians, Why should this man have taken away all the bright blessedness of which he traced a little yesterday when he spoke on the words that "we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies might serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life"? Why do I speak thus to-day? Because I love the doctrines of grace, that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." I mean by grace what I find in God's Word, and I have found that though it does not deliver me from the perpetual instigation and presence of evil, and the principle of sin, the indwelling natural tendency and taste which once came from Adam, and which, as I believe, remains somewhere in the being of man to the last;—I say, though I do not believe in grace exactly as some do, yet I believe in it as I read it in God's holy Word, that while sin is always abounding, grace is infinitely more abounding; and to what end? It is a solemn thing to speak of grace much more abounding. There are parallel truths and parallel texts to meet every word that I have spoken on the subject of sin. The limitations that I spoke of, and the distinction between penalty and guilt and lack of communion. There are parallel texts to all that I have uttered which proclaim this: that though God does not remove that indwelling principle, or corrupt thing we call sin, yet He does by his infinite mercy give us a perfect, perpetual, and enjoyable deliverance from the activities, from the power, from the domination of sin, moment by moment, so long as we trust Him, and that we acknowledge ourselves to be guilty sinners at every instant of our lives. I pause at that word because it was misunderstood three years ago, and I reiterate it now—while we acknowledge ourselves to be guilty sinners every moment, if we take the perfect standard here traced; yet we need never fear while we are doing nothing to offend against God's holy Word.

The doctrines of grace tell me that whatsoever sin hath done, Christ Jesus, in his wondrous power, hath more than undone with regard to the guilt and the penalty; it tells me that grace bringeth salvation. Look at Titus ii. 11: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men," in Revised Version it stands, "hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men"—"that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." Then, brethren, what is grace to bring me? I read with regard to the Lord Jesus Christ in John i. 16; "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." Then in John i. 17: "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." And in Rom. v. 1, 2, "the grace wherein we stand." Then go to Eph. i. 7; i. 14; and ii. 5, where you will see references to the abundance of the riches of grace. But more than this, what do I read about the daily provision for need up to the end of our lives? Turn to 2 Cor. ix. 8: "And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." What do I read in 2 Cor. xii. 9? "My grace is sufficient for thee." That is my much-loved text. It was that which first brought me to Keswick, and taught me the power of God's love. "My grace is sufficient for thee." A friend said to me, "I thought you preached absolute deliverance from the principle of sin, eradication of the root of sin." I said, "God forbid." "Then," she said, "what is the difference?" My answer was: "You preach a perfect sinner; I preach a perfect Saviour." I thank God for a perfect Christ. Then one said to me: "If Christ were revealed to destroy the works of the devil, how can there be any sin left?" I said: "Dear brother, do wait a bit; Christ's day is coming. The devil has had his, and God's is coming. When God sees fit to take us away from this poor corrupt mortal flesh, corruption shall give place to incorruption, mortality to immortality, death to life, and glory with God through all eternity." Saved by grace, kept by grace, when I ought to be condemned every moment for my folly, I shall be glorified by grace, and there shall be glory to God in the highest, and all through the realms of God's great universe, peace, joy, and gladness, for we shall be fully saved unto eternal glory when Christ comes. When we behold Him we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. O brethren, don't forget that while there is sin there is grace to meet all evil! O God, if this be true, make me to hate sin that gives Christ so much to do! Give me deliverance from all known sin. Reveal to me more and more what is the latent working and principle of sin. O God, open my eyes, show me more and more of Jesus! I will run the way of thy commandments exactly so far as Thou in thy mercy dost set my heart at liberty. Amen.

In Memoriam.

REV. W. P. MACKAY, M.D.

DEAR SIR,—An esteemed friend of mine has requested me to write a brief account of the last days of my dear friend and brother, the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. It was my privilege to see a great deal of him during the last fortnight of his life, and to be in his company almost every day. He was in excellent health, and apparently possessed of all his youthful energy and zeal. His ministry was never perhaps more appreciated than it was during the last Sabbath when he officiated in the Oban Free Church. It was my happiness to hear him on three different occasions. On the last Sabbath the effects produced by his sermons were quite remarkable. The church at both services was crowded to excess, both pews and passages being full. I heard him only in the evening, but I scarcely ever heard a discourse so full of power and that set forth the glory of God in so striking a way. On leaving the church I found that my opinion was shared in by all whom I met. All felt, to use a common phrase, that he had "surpassed himself." The morning's discourse, I was informed, was even more extraordinary. Little did we think that God was speaking by his honoured servant for the last time. So great was the impression which these sermons made that a lady told me in every shop in town persons were speaking about them. Mackay himself heard what was being said, and expressed to me the hope that God was about to give a "revival" in Oban. May his death do more in this respect than even his living voice! I was the last person to say "Good-bye" to him as he stepped off the Oban pier into the ss. Clydesdale for Stornoway. I wished for him a pleasant voyage, little thinking how far that voyage was to be. He meant to be back in two or three days, to preach again in Oban on the following Sabbath. His evening sermon seemed to be ready, so far as thinking out the subject is concerned, as he had given to me and another ministerial friend a day or so before an outline of his intended sermon, the text being the latter clause of the verse on which he had discoursed on the preceding Sabbath, viz., "Peace on earth, good-will to men" (Luke ii. 14). But return he never did; this contemplated sermon he never preached. "Glory to God in the highest" will ever be henceforth associated in my mind with the last testimony of this servant of God.

How he met his end is soon told. A friend writes: "He had gone off the boat at Portree with a gentleman to call at the Post-office, and on returning he met some farmers to whom he spoke, and then wended his way to the boat alone. The night was dark: he attempted to enter by the plank gangway, slipped his foot, and fell down between the vessel and the pier. His head was considerably injured, but the chill, from which he never recovered, brought on congestion of the lungs, of which he died on Saturday morning." This same friend adds: "Great grief is felt at Oban; all feel as if they had lost a friend."

Another friend, who, hearing about the accident, hastened to the spot to see him, but arrived only after death had done his work, writes to me: "Mackay went on well for the day after the accident (which happened late on Wednesday night), and thought he was to recover, and would not let his wife be sent for; but the chill from being so long in the water brought on acute pneumonia, which choked the lungs. He was quite conscious till near the close."

The Rev. J. R. McIntyre, minister of the United Presbyterian Church of Portree, has sent me a deeply pathetic and interesting account of our brother's last hours, which I am sure many readers of THE CHRISTIAN, and especially those to whom Dr. Mackay was well known as a preacher and an author, will be glad to receive. This brother nursed him along with others with a true brother's tenderness. After describing his reasons for taking a trip to the Isle of Skye, and detailing the way in which the accident befell him, he goes on to say:—When carried in an insensible condition into the Marine Hotel, near by the place of the accident, he was attended to by Dr. Ross, Portree. It was found that he had sustained somewhat severe injuries in the head in falling; but when these had been attended to, and his stomach and lungs relieved of the seawater that had been forced into them, his case was not thought to be of a kind to cause any very serious apprehension. Dr. Mackay, himself, took the most hopeful view of it. Indeed, it was some considerable time before he abandoned the idea of being able to fulfil his engagement to preach at Oban the following Sabbath. This was the position of matters till Thursday morning, when acute pneumonia set in, and, notwithstanding all remedial appliances, developed so rapidly that ere the night a fatal termination to his illness seemed to Dr. Ross and Dr. Maclean) whose help Dr. Ross had sought) more than a possibility. As the night wore on, this possibility became almost a certainty. The suffering was agonising; the great strength of frame which the disease had to battle against making this more intense. Death came about half-past ten on Saturday morning, quietly and peacefully.

All through, till very near the end, Dr. Mackay retained full consciousness, and some hours before his death he realised that recovery was beyond hope. About three o'clock on Saturday morning he asked Dr. Ross, "What is your private opinion?" and turned towards the doctor, his face covered with big drops of perspiration, and looking so wearied and baffled. The doctor had to reply, "Well, it is not very good, sir." Later he asked, "Is there any hope?" and on the doctor replying, "There is hope," he added, "But it is a very slight hope." Yet all through, and to the last, there was no wavering, or shrinking, or apparent concern in view of death. At times he was heard to utter short, earnest prayers. On one occasion Dr. Ross, on entering the room, caught the words, "for thine own glory, Amen; for Jesus Christ's sake." This he was saying with great fervour.

He seemed slightly to wander during his last moments, but his thoughts refused to leave the green pastures, and the quiet waters with which they were so familiar; and though these retreats may have seemed to his vision shrouded, as when the light grows dim, two precious landmarks were recognised and clung to. The first of these was "God is love," and the other "God is light." He repeated these over with great assurance shortly before his death, and made feeble efforts seemingly to gather other words around these. But he was now to deal with realities instead of with mere names. Instead of the mere vision of the light and love of God, by means of weak, earthly faith and hope, he was to feast his eyes on that light and love as he stood where they see face to face. These being rays of his glory (of which he had spoken so earnestly, and eloquently, and impressively when he preached at Oban for the last time) he was to bask in, and not merely talk of.

My pulpit last Sabbath was occupied in the morning by Rev. George Turner, and in the evening by Rev. M. Sawday, of London, both of whom had been among Dr. Mackay's audience when he preached his last sermon at Oban. They both paid a noble tribute to Mr. Mackay's memory, and made touching reference to the sad event which had so suddenly brought his career to a close.

Friday Morning.—Since writing the above I have received from this same friend some more particulars:—"I remarked to him that the way in which the pier was lighted was disgraceful, and that he was not the first nor the second that had fallen over the pier. He replied, in his own humorous way, 'I suppose a Bishop must go over before anything is done.' 'I began to despair,' he said one time, piteously; 'I never was in such a state in my life, pulse high, temperature high, everything high.' Poor Mrs. Mackay arrived after all was over, on Saturday afternoon. It fell to my lot to break the sad news to her. She was wonderfully sustained. . . . On the Sabbath afternoon Dr. Gauld, Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, London, Mr. Sawday, and myself took part in an open-air meeting on the deck of the ss. Glencoe, at the very spot of the accident. There was a large attendance.

"The remains were taken on board the ss. Claymore for transmission to Hull on Monday evening. A large and sympathetic crowd accompanied them, and as they were carried on board the passengers lined the side of the ship and stood with uncovered heads. . . .

"I have only further to mention that though Dr. Mackay came to suffer and to die here, where he had no personal friends, God raised up friends who ministered to him most kindly and lovingly. I may mention Dr. Ross, Mr. and Mrs. Weir, of Hampstead, Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland, of the Marine Hotel, who could not have done more for Dr. Mackay had he been one of their own family. Amongst others who showed great kindness and made earnest inquiries were Mr. W. McDonald, Mr. J. Robertson, Rev. W. Reid, Mr. D. Maclachlan, the Bishop of Argyle and the Isles, &c. &c."

I have no doubt these tidings, Mr. Editor, though sad, will be gratefully received by many who will long fondly cherish the name of him to whom they relate. May the God of all grace and truth sanctify this painful event to thousands. It is comforting to think that his influence for good will live on in the churches that he did so much to rear, such as the one to which he weekly ministered, viz., Prospect-street Church, Hull, and Holderness-road, Grimsby, and York, and in the book "Grace and Truth," of which he is well-known author.

To thousands and tens of thousands in Great Britain and in America and other parts of the earth, that book has been made a great blessing. Only the night before he met with the accident, when yachting with him and his family, his dear wife told me that that very morning a letter had come from Burmah, from a gentleman there, telling about the light and peace that had come to his soul through reading the book that our departed friend wrote now several years ago. Many will read that book with a fresh interest, from the fact that he, whom God honoured to write it and send it forth to the world, is no longer a sojourner on earth, but has entered that world where He who is alike "the Grace and the Truth" is beheld in all his glory and is praised with holy gladness, world without end.

Yours, &c., RICHARD LEITCH.

A RETREAT FOR HABITUAL DRUNKARDS.—The Middlesex county magistrates have under consideration an application for a licence to keep one of these retreats at Twickenham.

LOWESTOFT.—Mr. W. Johnson has for some years been labouring amongst the sailors and fishermen of this part. Bethel services, cottage meetings, and Sunday evangelistic addresses in the public hall each contribute their share to the spread of Gospel truth and light. In addition to these the vessels in dock are visited and supplied with Bibles, books, and tracts, and bags of these silent messengers are made up for quiet perusal on the voyage. Mr. Johnson would gladly welcome a call at The Bethel from any Christians visiting Lowestoft.

A MORMON RIOT IN LONDON.—Considerable excitement has been occasioned in the East-end by the proselytising efforts of Mormon Missionaries in the district, a number of disorderly scenes having taken place, culminating in a riot of a serious character. The Mormons have for several weeks conducted meetings in the Clifton Hall, Mile-End-road, and recently their propaganda has assumed a more active form in the shape of open-air meetings and the distribution of literature. On the 25th ult., during a special meeting in the Clifton Hall, the platform was stormed, and six or seven Mormon elders, who were conducting the meeting, were driven from the building. They were then chased down the Mile-End-road by the mob, and pelted with all kinds of refuse. Their clothing was torn almost to rags. In Stepney-green they managed to hide themselves in a house until two cabs were procured when they were driven rapidly away.

Notes and Comments.

A CONFERENCE will be held at Dundee for September 15—17. General subject: "Christ in his Relations to Believers." Robert Anderson is the secretary.

We have been pressed by friends to name a day for united humiliation on account of our social, national, and individual sins; thanksgiving to God for his longsuffering, and for having awakened the conscience of the nation; prayer that He may purge us from our iniquities, endue us with the righteousness that exalteth a nation, and purge us from sin, which is a reproach to any people. In order to give sufficient notice, it has been thought desirable to name Tuesday, September 15, as a day on which all into whose hands this may come are invited to unite in spirit and to spend as much of the day as possible in waiting upon God.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Soltau arrived safely in London last week from Burmah. They have both suffered severely in health from the climate, and from the heavy strain on their minds, through the troubles arising from the pillage of Bhamo by the Chinese, some months ago, when they lost almost the whole of their property. Their address for the present will be 69, Beresford-road, Highbury New Park, London, N.

We are astonished and grieved to receive from a correspondent ticket No. 58431, of the "Neath Prize Drawing (in aid of the New Congregational Church)," to "take place in the schoolroom Nov. 19, 1885." There are "twenty prizes value 10s. each; the winning numbers will be published" in a London and a provincial paper. This illegal proceeding has caused much pain among Christian Congregationalists.

We are glad to state that the "Monthly Letters" to merchant seamen, now extended to lighthouse keepers, which for many years have been written and issued in print by the late Mrs. N. C. Best, and continued by her daughter, L. C. Best, from 15, Lansdown-circus, Leamington, will not be interrupted through the recent marriage of the latter, but appear in future with the signature Lydia C. Jeffery. The copies distributed have not exceeded 8000, though there are tens of thousands of seamen yet to be reached. Many persons have written to the author to sustain and encourage her endeavours, but it is obvious that upon the support given her must depend the extent of her distribution of these letters.

It cannot be with knowledge, or after inquiry, that The Spectator, in order to show that popular excitement on another question will be certain to burn itself out, refers to the transient effect of "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." Very far has that been from burning itself out. At least three great religious denominations are, at considerable cost, occupied in attention to the grave problem of the effect on the health, comfort, and morality of the people by overcrowding; they are taking note of the destitute; promoting emigration by a careful system of investigation; sending back into the country those who made a mistake by leaving it; and attending to the social condition of the children of London. No "excitement" has been more fruitful than that raised by "The Bitter Cry."

The following, from a Norfolk clergyman of long experience, in a letter to The Guardian, deserves quotation:—

> "When and where is it that young girls are first led astray? It is in their first places. We country parsons watch over the young girls in our schools almost as if they were our own children. They appear to be growing up all that we could wish them. But as soon as they have passed the necessary standard they go to service. Then comes the difficulty. No lady will take a girl who has not been out before. Girls must go first into some inferior situation. The mistresses in such places (I know there are noble exceptions) utterly ignore their responsibilities. Young girls are unwatched over, unwarned, made irritable and unhappy by constant nagging, and they fall an easy prey to any designing person.
> "Now, cannot ladies and the wives of respectable tradespeople and farmers be persuaded to take such young girls into their own service, and to treat them, not so much as servants as children to be trained? I know full well the difficulties. I know all about the broken china, and soiled paint, and aggrieved older servants. I know, too, that mothers will be unreasonable and the girls themselves ungrateful. But I know, too, from experience that all these difficulties may be overcome. I know that girls taken thus early into respectable families often prove inestimable treasures."

If there is a grand self-denial to rescue from vice, might there not also be self-denial to preserve from it?

It has been stated that in 1881 there were not only nearly a million females in excess of males in the United Kingdom; but that, while the population of that period had increased three millions over that of 1871, the number of marriages, instead of proportionably increasing, had, through the emigration of young unmarried men, and other causes, actually decreased by 6525. The fact is very startling. The suggestion of organising a Female Emigration Society is a practical one, and goes to the root of manifold evils in two hemispheres.

In relation to all the perils that prey upon society, it is a first necessity not to let efforts end with sentimental feeling, or even condemning words. All of self is to be laid at the feet of Him who is calling us to look into these chambers of imagery. And those who would rescue from the might of the destroyer must guard against despising methods that look prosaic. Notional men rush in at a time like this; but practical measures are above all things needed, and individual self-denial.

The first coloured member of the Ohio legislature has written a valuable book on "The Negro Race in America" (Putnam, New York and London). He sets aside all ideas of the negroes dying out in America; and maintains that, as the negro race founded some of the mightiest ancient empires, it will again rise over separating barriers; that the Providence of God is opening for it a great era of redemption, and that the signs of this are growing on every hand.

Mr. Williams, the author of the above work, reminds us that, so comparatively recent as 1832, a Quaker lady in Connecticut was put in gaol for receiving young ladies of colour into her educational establishment, and that (to say nothing of the numbers who perished in the transit) no less than 15,000,000 of native Africans were brought across the seas to feed the slave market during the continuance of the system. About this unutterable horror of wickedness the Press of the United States was mostly silent. The fact should not be forgotten. The Lord did not look on in unconcern.

When Her Majesty's responsible advisers resolved on giving effect to the purpose of their predecessors in office by the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition and education of the blind, it was generally thought that Dr. Moon's labours during the past thirty-eight years would secure him a place among the nobles and gentry selected. Strange to say, while the foremost advocates of the Braille type and of other systems find a place at the Board, the man who by his sterling industry and acknowledged skill has produced thousands of volumes in more than 250 languages, and dialects for the use and instruction of the blind, is left out in the cold, to the great injury of the institution at Brighton over which he presides.

A friend has called on us with the following communication:—

> "'Babylon the great,' indeed! I cannot tell you how my heart was stirred within me, and lifted up in thankfulness to 'the Judge of all the earth,' for your timely note in last week's issue as to the pressing necessity for Government inspection of 'Religious Houses' in this our land.
>
> "First we were stirred by 'the bitter cry' of London's poor. Recently we have been compelled to listen with tearful eyes, as well as tingling ears, to 'lamentation, and mourning, and woe,' in consequence of intensified sexual vice and systematised crime perpetrated in the same 'Modern Babylon.'
>
> "Now the third muffled wail is reaching us through a God-made 'hole in the wall' (Ezekiel viii. 7) of English Roman convents and nunneries, where our sisters are held captive by demon-inspired vows, and victimised by priests of that system on whose brow is written, 'Babylon the great, the mother of Harlots.'
>
> "'Mystery;' yea, 'mystery of iniquity,' indeed!
>
> "I may say that one such inmate known to me has found egress from her cage, and the revelations me known surpass all that the imagination of the aduninitiated could conceive.
> "I pray that God will breathe through this letter as with trumpet call for many of his own faithful ones to prepare themselves for the coming conflict and rescue in this direction."

Mr. A. S. Dyer has received a letter containing the following narrative. It is too late for The Sentinel this month, and we therefore insert it, as perhaps (in the words of the writer) "it may prevent some innocent young girls from being cruelly decoyed."

> "Two young girls (say Annie and Kate), of prepossessing appearance, were sent from a West-end establishment to a customer's residence for the purpose of fitting a dress. On arriving at their destination (which was near a railway station) Kate entered the house to fit the dress, and Annie waited outside.
> "While she was waiting, a lady (to all appearance) came hurrying out of the station, and seeing Annie, requested her to deliver a letter for her, as she was afraid of losing the train if she took it herself. Annie in all simplicity promised to deliver it, and when Kate came out, told her of it. Kate would have nothing to do with it, and as Annie would not go alone they took the letter to their place of business and acquainted their forewoman of it. The forewoman at first was for consigning it to the flames, but, on second thought, decided to open it. Judge of their surprise when they read thus: 'Detain the girl.'"

It is well that young people and their employers should know the infamous traps laid for the unwary, and that forewomen and others should earnestly warn those under their oversight of the dangers to which they are exposed. The ingenuity of the wicked will be more severely tasked now that light is making their infamies manifest, and they will increase in craftiness and boldness. Therefore those who love God must the more earnestly watch and warn.

MISS MACPHERSON'S EMIGRANT PARTY.

ONCE more it is our happy privilege to record a peaceful voyage, invigorated constitutions, and plenty of openings for each boy and girl. No more blessed ministry on earth can there be than thus comforting sorrowful childhood.

For this party of sixty—the forty-sixth we have sent out—we had several openings from ladies who had utilised cottages on their own estates, filling them with lonely hearts, cheering them with kindly smiles. He who nestles the young in his bosom will not forget such gentle deeds to tender yet shadowed lives :

"Do you hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years?
They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
And that cannot stop their tears."

Home is childhood's world. Hence we all spend a season together in this bright Canadian Home.

A sunny gleam amid the past dark shadows of maybe a drunkard's home, or a struggling widow, who was never able to make her scanty room a home at all, or a lone waif tossing from one lodging-house to another, knowing no rest, comfort, or home.

Horrible and appalling is the gloom which vicious acts are casting over children's lives, selling them for lust of drink and dress.

While our "pity weeps, and purity turns pale," we must awake and gather in the innocent lambs whose wail has arisen to the mighty God.

We had the High Commissioner of Canada on board, who gave a public tribute to our work "as the most Godlike on earth." His heart is large and would invite all to come who are "honest and industrious;" these qualifications, we know, in this drink-ridden age are not inborn, but, taking charge of the young while plastic, we can do our part to make them so.

It is a toilsome work, and if done in a wholesale manner will foil the very purpose before us all; a Home for returns and retraining in Canada is as absolutely necessary as the Training-home is in England.

The Canadian is easily outwitted if a boy discovers habits of deceit or lying, or a girl becomes heady and high-minded.

To all our lady helpers we again express our united gratitude, as we open the boxes of clothing and fit out our now rosy-cheeked girls, all so soon to leave us. My sister, Mrs. Merry, has places for each one, and amongst no longer strangers, but some are going to fill up the spaces made by our former girls having married.

A lady from a neighbouring town called yesterday, and in course of conversation said, "I heard of one of your orphan girls being married, and I gave her an easy chair as a wedding present, and went to see all her gifts. Her house was furnished by her father-in-law, and her trousseau by the farmer with whom she had lived nine years." We thanked God and took courage, determining to redouble the work in saving the young girls especially. They are toned by those who surround them, and surely many Christian women in England are tired of fancy bazaars and making of altar-cloths, and would be a thousand times happier in giving forth to young hearts thoughts of truth and faithfulness in domestic duties, virtue and Christlikeness.

How receptive each ear is to hear the sweet, sweet story of a Saviour's love, instead of the scorn and misery that follows upon its refusal. From a life-long experience, we can testify that there is on earth no purer or more unselfish joy.

We have left injunctions to have our receiving and training Homes prepared for rescuing early in October.

Meanwhile we are much enjoying the season of change of work, and the bright side of children's lives.

Prayer and help are still our requirements. Our present machinery is all we need. Grace and power is our daily want for each one of us. We know Him in whom we trust, and with our Emmanuel is no defeat.

Yours in Him, ANNIE MACPHERSON.

P.S.—All letters till October addressed to my nephew, Mr. J. Macpherson Merry, 60, Commercial-street, E.

M. COILLARD IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—As many of your readers have so kindly helped Mons. Coillard, I am sure they will be interested to hear that after many weary months of travelling, he writes to me from Leshoma, Zambesi :—

"You will be glad to hear that my journey to Learuzi, the capital of the Barotsi, was a most happy one. The chiefs received us very kindly, and very warmly. . . . The country itself is anything but attractive, an immense plain—at this season of the year swampy—through which the broad, calm, and beautiful river runs." The people are so sunk in superstition, that he says, "Can even Jesus find room in these hearts? It will be a miracle of his grace. But such miracles which He has wrought in us He is able to perform there too, and change a den of pollution into a temple of holiness. . . .

"I was struck with the almost boundless influence which the Makololos (Basutos as you know) have had in this country, and how marvellously the Lord has used them to prepare this field for us. To this day Lebetoane's name (who died more than twenty years ago) is held in great honour. Most of the old chiefs swear by him, and have the greatest respect for all his institutions. It is the golden age of the old people, and you hear them, with deep sighs, compare the present state of the country and its rule with what existed in the good old time. Every chief's ambition is to have as his first wife a Makololo woman, and whenever he is visited he never fails to call her and introduce her with a manifest pride. You will understand from that how popular our native teachers are. When it was rumoured abroad that one of them, Aaron, had come with me, people came from long distances to see him, and brought him all kinds of presents of food. He is a special favourite with the chiefs.

"What a pity that while so many doors are open to us we cannot muster a small band of native teachers. I do grieve over it. In 1876 the churches in Basutoland thought they could contribute something like £300 annually, and that, not counting travelling expenses, would comfortably keep six evangelists. Now, owing to the war, the famine, and the burden of the schools, Mons. Mabille writes, they could with difficulty make up £50. . . . What I have seen and heard during my journey to the capital has deeply impressed me with the needs of this part of Africa, and I feel that strenuous efforts must be made both on our part and on the part of friends at home."

Any further contributions to aid this important work I will gladly forward.

Yours sincerely, CAROLINE MALAN.

Le Christianisme says :—M. Coillard, the brave pioneer, is passing through a time of trial. One of the most prominent among the converts, Karumba, having for some time ceased to walk faithfully in the Lord's ways, has married a Pagan. The oxen that were drawing the wagons belonging to the missionary party have all died. Rain and ants have spoiled most of their goods and furniture. Mdme. Coillard's health is very feeble too. M. Coillard, nevertheless, writes cheerfully: "Let not our friends be discouraged; it is true we can ill afford to have our expenses increased; but there are Christians who, with a stroke of the pen, could save us from these terrible financial anxieties. But as for me, I am not going to beg while in the service of the King of kings. God will help us; it is his work."

OPEN AIR MISSION.—There is a deficit in our funds. Much work remains to be done before the season closes, and £700 is needed for the remainder of the year.—GAWIN KIRKHAM, secretary, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

THE JOY OF THE LORD.

"The joy of the Lord is your strength."—NEH. viii. 10.

THE joy of the Lord!
I must sing it to-day, for ye do Him foul wrong,
Ye Christians who journey with sighing along!
Like sunshine his blessings lie scattered abroad;
The joy of the Lord!

The joy of the Lord!
I have drunk to the depths of his chalice of pain,
And his hand to my lips may uplift it again;
But the draught draineth sweet, for the radiant reward:
The joy of the Lord!

The joy of the Lord!
"'Tis a hope for the future," you murmur and say;
Nay, not so! I have it, I hold it to-day!
For the bliss He bestows be his bounty adored!
Sweet joy of the Lord!

The joy of the Lord!
A shade in the sunshine, a light in the gloom!
A guide through the desert! a friend in the room!
The heart fails with counting the wealth that is stored
In the joy of the Lord!

The joy of the Lord!
With laughter and luring the world sidles up,
The wreath on her brow and the charm in her cup;
But the joys of the alien my heart hath abhorred
For the joy of the Lord.

The joy of the Lord!
Do dangers encircle and perils look near?
The song of the ransomed raise ringing and clear;
For the heart of the singer no thought can afford
Save the joy of the Lord.

The joy of the Lord!
"A palm for the victor, a crown for the saint,
But scarcely a meed for the feeble and faint;"
Ah! these hands clasp the gift, else could scarce wield
Blest joy of the Lord. [the sword.

The joy of the Lord!
'Tis a blade that the foe dares not linger to feel,
A spring in thy bosom, all sorrow to heal;
'Tis life, light, and strength, a threefold blest cord;
This joy of the Lord.

The joy of the Lord!
And when, the dark valley left under our feet,
We stand by the Throne in his likeness complete,
The glad lips of thousands shall shout with accord
For the joy of the Lord.

CONFERENCE AT DUFFTOWN.

A CHRISTIAN Conference was held at Dufftown, Banffshire, N.B., on August 20. At the morning meeting the Chairman, Rev. James Smith, spoke on "The Christian's Position," as seen in Rom. v. 1, 2; Gal. v. 1; and 1 Pet. v. 12. These show the Christian's standing—in Christ, in grace, in liberty. The amplification of this subject was continued under the three main aspects of Sonship, Saintship, Friendship, as expressive of the Christian's God-given, inviolable and eternal relationship. Mr. Duncan Davidson, of Inchmarlo, followed with an earnest address on "The Christian's Work." He impressed on all who have named the name of Christ the necessity of departing from all iniquity, and of faithful dealing with the unsaved about their souls. Mr. Smith, of Grimsby, pointed out a sevenfold description of a Christian worker in 1 Tim. i., as a spiritual ambassador, a father, a steward, a teacher, a pattern, a soldier, and a sailor. Mr. Mathieson, of Mildmay, exhorted Christian workers to cultivate the spirit of Christ in Phil. ii.

The afternoon meeting was devoted to the subject of Foreign Missions. Mr. Gordon, of Pluscarden, and Mr. Smith, of Grimsby, gave instructive addresses on the work of missions in China, specially in Amoy and Formosa. Dr. Gauld gave several convincing testimonies as to the value and power of Medical Missions in spreading the Gospel among the heathen.

The evening meeting was entirely for spreading the Gospel. There was a large attendance and some manifest results, which we trust will stand the test of time and eternity. Judging from the numbers present, from many parts of the country, and the rapt attention and evident joy of the Lord's people, we cannot doubt but the object of the Conference has been attained. Dufftown being one of the best health resorts in the North we trust many more health-seekers will find their way to the Conference next season and be blessed in body and soul.

For the Young.

FLORRIE'S CONFESSION.

IT was a lovely Sunday afternoon. The children's service was being held in a little chapel in the town of Hawley, and the lower part of the chapel was filled with girls and boys attentive listeners, most of them: for the subject was one almost always interesting to children: the story told in the third chapter of Daniel; about the three Hebrew children who dared to disobey the wicked king's commands, and so were cast into the "burning fiery furnace." And then, most wonderful of all, how God delivered them in their trouble, and brought them out without a hair of their heads being singed.

"Children," said Mr. Martin, the minister, as he finished the story, "have you ever dared to be brave for God as those men were? Some of you, I know, are loving God and trying to serve Him; but have you ever confessed Him before your friends and companions who do not know Him and love Him? Would you rather die than do anything to dishonour your Saviour?"

Some of the children got very fidgetty at this part; they liked the story, but they did not care to have it brought home to their consciences in this view. So they yawned, or looked at their companions, and one or two even looked at the clock, and wondered how soon they would go home. Mr. Martin's own little girl Florrie was amongst the scholars, and he could not help noticing her grave, quiet face, looking almost sad to-day, he thought. When the service was over and the children went to their different homes, Florrie looked round for her father, but he was going home with the superintendent of the school, and she had to go alone. It was only a short distance, but Florrie could hardly keep down a little sob, for she had so wanted to speak to papa alone. The little girl had no mother: and though the aunt who took care of her was very kind, the child felt that she did not understand her. And now she would not see papa till to-morrow, for he was to preach at night, and she was considered too young to go to chapel in the evening. When auntie put her to bed, she lay awake much longer than usual, thinking and wondering "what would have happened to the Hebrew children if they had bowed down to the golden image."

She awoke in the morning as people often do, forgetting what had troubled her the night before. But it all came back to her long before she went down stairs to breakfast; and her face wore such a troubled look that her father noticed it again, and wondered what was the matter with his little daughter. After breakfast came prayers, and when Mr. Martin prayed as usual for his dear little Florrie, the child could not keep back her sobs. When they rose from their knees, "Florrie, my darling, come here," said her father.

It was such a relief to Florrie at last to find herself on papa's knee, with his arms round her.

"Papa," she whispered earnestly, "what would have happened to the three men you were telling us about yesterday, if they had worshipped the golden image?"

Her father said to her, "Well, Birdie, is this what is troubling you? You must tell me first all about it." And then, with downcast eyes and trembling lips, Florrie told her story.

"Papa, in Miss Wilson's school there are some girls who laugh at those that try to be good. And I heard them on Friday, and I never told them I loved Jesus, but I laughed too, and then May Williams gave me some sweets, and told me I was a spirited little thing."

"And so my darling has been denying Jesus," said Mr. Martin, sadly. "But Florrie," he added, "have you forgotten that Jesus is always ready to forgive? Have you forgotten how Peter denied Him? Try to be bold and imitate the example of the Hebrew children another time, and ask Jesus to forgive you now."

"Is He angry with me?" whispered Florrie.

"Not angry, only grieved, darling; and you know He will always forgive." And so Florrie was comforted; and, in answer to her prayers and her father's, strength was given to her, so that next time the girls began to laugh at those who tried to be good, little Florrie, in the greatest surprise at herself, "I want to be good more than I want anything, and I love Jesus better than anybody." One or two of the girls tried to laugh; but the little child's words for Jesus were not useless, and it was not long before the seeds thus sown produced their harvest.

Miss Wilson's school is different now, and a new-comer would not be laughed at for religion, but helped by many loving words; and the elder girls acknowledge it is all through Florence's influence.—Southern Cross.

"COME OVER AND HELP US."

"You will come back to us, mem sahib, say you will come back! Oh, promise me!"

Very earnestly this entreaty fell from the lips of a young Indian wife, and the pleading look in her dark eyes, and her caressing gestures gave touching power to the soft Urdu words. I was returning to England for a time.

"But why, why, mem sahib? why are you not certain to come back? and why do not many ladies come from England to teach us? Are not all English people Christians? are they not all rich? why do not many of them come?"

Alas! poor, ignorant Rádí! How could I explain to her that of the millions of England comparatively few were Christian except in name, and that even among those who do own Jesus as their Lord not one in a hundred thinks of carrying out his last command?

"Promise me one thing, mem sahib—tell your Queen, for she is good—tell every woman that you see in England, to send out hundreds of ladies to tell about the Lord Jesus to our people. How can we ever know about Him unless you teach us?"

It was the simple echo of Paul's great question floating down the ages, unanswered still—"How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" Women of England, I pass on the appeal to you. The only preachers that can reach these Indian prison homes are women—who that reads these lines will go? "The Lord giveth the word"—for ages He has been giving it; but oh! when shall the sentence be fulfilled—"The women that publish the tidings are a great host" (Ps. lxviii. 11, R.V.)? When will each one to whom the light of truth has come, accept with it the solemn charge to pass it on?

We do trust that to some hearts this message from a far-off land may prove the Master's call.

BIBLE ACROSTIC.

These words have sweetest comfort given
To many a weary heart;
A deep, resigned, and joyful peace
Gained, though the tears may start.

(1) The father of the king, spoken of as an instrument in the evil counsel of the enemies of Judah.
(2) A people, one of a confederacy against Israel.
(3) Those whom St. Paul exhorts to be sober.
(4) A thing promised surely to him that "walketh righteously."
(5) A place conquered by the Assyrians, and mentioned by them with contempt.
(6) The king to whom the folly of the use of strong drink was shown.
(7) A name signifying no mercy.
(8) One spoken of as the beloved of the Lord.
(9) That which Israel shall not find when scattered among all people.
(10) A place on the borders of Zebulon.
(11) An object first desired and afterwards a cause of shame.
(12) A fruit garden mentioned in the Old Testament.
(13) The possessor of a field which he eventually sold for a considerable sum.

"HE IS FAITHFUL THAT PROMISED."

UNBELIEF is fretful ever,
Tossed with doubt and fear;
Faith has asked what Truth has promised,
That's enough for her.
He may try thy faith with fire,
E'en as gold is tried;
'Tis to bring thee ever nigher
To his side.

Faith beholds the promised blessing,
For it she can wait;
God may tarry, but He never,
Never comes too late.
Venture on the untried waters!
To the winds thy fear!
Thou wilt sink? No, Peter, never!
He is there.

Let thy weakness lean, my brother,
On his mighty arm;
He would have thee, without caring,
"Do thyself no harm."
All is thine, if thou hast Jesus,
All He has to give;
Thou art at a royal table,
Eat and live!

SCATTERED SEEDS.

A BIBLE-CARRIAGE to visit the neglected markets of the Metropolis had long been before our minds, but as this seemed difficult to obtain, we resolved to start with a costermonger's barrow.

Having hired one for three or four hours for a shilling we went out with joyful hearts to preach Christ, and Him crucified. On reaching the market, the inquiring crowd which gathered round us gave us a grand opportunity of exposing our wares, consisting of Testaments, texts, and various religious books.

Two policemen stood and viewed the stall. "It's about time summat of this kind was down here, ain't it Bob?" says one. "Ah! you're right, lad," replied the other. Indeed many seem to think that the Saturday-night markets should not be neglected, for often came the encouraging words "I hope you will be here next week."

But our work has a dark side as well as a bright one. The enemy of souls has his instruments in the persons of the infidel, the blasphemer, and the scoffer, to whom the spreading of the Gospel seems a source of great discomfort.

As we often found it difficult to hire a barrow when we required one, our Heavenly Father laid it on the heart of a sympathising Christian to send us a tricycle for our colportage work. Thus our need was supplied; and the tricycle, fitted with a tray to carry our Bibles, &c., was substituted for the barrow.

Still we did not cease to pray that we might have the Bible-carriage which we felt was needed for the work. At last we saw one advertised for £3, requiring a further outlay of £3 for repairs. In a few days the money was made up, and the following Saturday we used our Bible-carriage for the first time, and are now able to increase our radius.

We received great kindness and encouragement from Christians of all denominations.

Thanking Him for the past, and looking to Him for still greater things to come, we ask your prayers that He will keep us faithful till He comes.—Yours, in the Master's service,

C. H. Connor,
H. T. Beames, } Colporteurs.

BATTERSEA.—A Temperance demonstration and church parade is to be held on Sunday, Sept. 6 at St. Stephen's Church, Bridge-road, Battersea TENT WORK AT HACKNEY.—In connection with the Hackney Branch of the Y.M.C.A. forty tent meetings have been held, embracing evangelical services, also meetings for Christian workers, and for the promotion of social purity and Gospel Temperance. They have been attended by nearly 9000 persons, and we believe much good has been done.

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly insert enclosed letter from Mr. Pundsack?

"DEAR MR. LAWRENCE,—Yours of the 11th to hand. I forward you various Spanish papers, so that you may judge for yourself as to the material help needed in the various towns and villages which suffer most. I expect we shall have cholera three or four months more. Malaga, Seville, and Cadiz have hitherto been preserved. The cholera at Malaga would be awful, it is such a dirty place. I believe you would do a good and great work in coming to Spain, provided with sufficient means for distribution among the poor, who are suffering immensely for lack of food and comforts. Protestants did something during the earthquakes, but now they do nothing, as far as I know, because there is no one to travel about on this self-denying errand. Even people here would do more if they knew it was going through honest hands. The priests got a lot of money for the earthquake, which they afterwards used to rebuild churches."

I have sent copies of the following printed leaf to Mr. Pundsack for distribution:—

Cholera.—A diploma received by Mr. Edward Clarke from the Directive Council of the "Star of Italy," under the Patronage of Humbert I. says:—

"In forwarding the Diploma of Honourable Member and Patron to the illustrious Mr. Edward Clarke, add this special attestation of Merit, inasmuch as the same laboured in Spezia during the cholera of 1884, showing the heart of a true Christian and the sublime greatness of a humanitarian citizen."

"Nybhal" was the medicine recommended and used so successfully by Mr. E. Clarke. I shall be happy to forward gratis this remedy, with instructions to any friends in Spain who may apply.

It would be a useful thing if the experience of others in the treatment of cholera could be procured. I should be happy to receive communications.—I am, &c., GEORGE LAWRENCE.

Welcome Home, Cardiff.

A member of the Committee sends to the editor of The Times a copy of the rules which were adopted by the French surgeons in Paris last year, and by the English and American surgeons there, and printed and circulated in English by the Committee of the British Charitable Fund.

RULES FOR PREVENTING CHOLERA AND FOR DEALING WITH IT.

The following rules, adopted by French doctors, are approved by the English and American physicians in Paris:—

Preventive Measures.—Sanitary precautions are indispensable during a time of epidemic. It is necessary to be warmly clothed and to avoid any risk of catching a cold. Wear a flannel belt next the skin. The abuse of wine and alcoholic liquors, the excessive use of iced water, raw fruit, and all uncooked food, as well as excesses of every kind, should be avoided. It is essential to use nothing but clear water well filtered, and, if possible, boiled, and then aerated after cooling. Natural mineral waters are also very good to use.

First Remedies.—Cholera is generally preceded by symptoms which to get rid of very often suffices to prevent any further development of the disease. The most important of these symptoms is diarrhœa. As soon as diarrhœa shows itself a doctor should be called in, and while waiting for the doctor the patient should be put to bed and given nothing except hot tea, with rum or brandy added. An injection of a solution of starch, with, for adult persons, ten drops of laudanum of Sydenham added, is also efficacious.

Isolation of Patients.—The patient should, if possible, be placed in a separate room. Only the persons in attendance should enter the room. If the apartment should not allow of sufficient isolation the patient should be removed to the hospital. If the patient is kept at home the bed should be placed in the centre of the room so that the air may circulate freely. All hangings, rugs, and curtains should be taken away.

Disinfection.—It is of the greatest importance that all the ejections of the patient should be immediately disinfected. This disinfection may be obtained by the addition of at least an equal quantity of a solution containing to each litre 50 grammes either of chloride of zinc, sulphate of copper, or sulphate of zinc. About a glassful of one of these solutions should be beforehand poured into the receptacles. In the patient's room the clothes, linen, sheets, and blankets should, after use, be immediately soaked in a disinfecting solution. When washed, clothes, linen, &c., should be plunged in water at boiling point, and afterwards thoroughly washed in water, with an addition of eau de Javel. When a sick room is vacated a fire should be lit in the fireplace, and all papers, old linen, old clothes, and other objects of small value burned there which might have been contaminated. The chimney, windows, and other openings should then be shut, and in the middle of the room containing the furniture and bedding a jar with some live coals should be placed. On the coals should be put a layer of sand, and on that a quantity of sulpher broken into pieces, proportionately to the size of the room (20 grammes for a cubic metre). The door should then be shut. After being thus hermetically closed during 24 hours the room should be fully aired by opening the windows, and must not be again occupied or at least a week after being disinfected.

Precautions against Contact—Those who are in continued a tendance upon choleraic patients, or who live with them, should obey the following rules:—Neither food nor drink should be taken in a room occupied by a patient. The mouth should be carefully rinsed before each meal, and the hands and forearms washed with a solution of borax. The face, head, and hands, and, if possible, the whole body should be washed daily with water containing 10 grammes of borax or 1 gramme of thymic acid per litre. When any part of the clothing has been contaminated by the ejections it should be well washed at once with a solution containing 20 grammes of sulphate of copper to a litre of water; or, if no disinfecting solution is at hand, with boiling water. If possible the whole of the clothing should afterwards be disinfected. This may be done by placing all the clothing in a cupboard or closet, and burning therein from 15 to 20 grammes of broken sulphur per cubic metre of space. The clothing should remain there for 24 hours.

Dr. Rubini's Solution of Camphor (Homœpathic) and also Chlorodyne have been found very useful, especially the former.

DEAR SIR,—As you lately published a letter from Mr. Tugwell, of the Spanish Episcopal Church Aid Society, referring to the visitation of cholera as preparing the minds and hearts of the people for the reception of the truths of the Gospel, and saying that "the cry 'Come over and help us,' is ever becoming louder and more earnest," it may be well to give the following extracts, as showing rather a different view of the situation.

In a late circular written by Senor Empaytaz, the excellent Swiss pastor at Barcelona, referring to the terrible ravages of cholera, the following passage occurs:—"May we not, at least, hope that these calamities, which have come as successive blows upon this poor nation, will bear some spiritual fruit? In individual cases doubtless they will, but on the mass there is reason for coming to a different conclusion. The good conduct of many of the priests and sisters of charity will restore to them a measure of popularity, of which they had not too much before. Superstition has seized the occasion for coming to the front, and strengthening itself: the Saints and Virgins of different localities are seen more than ever encircled with prayers and honours, and it is just this that makes me believe that fear alone actuates the people, and that the progress of superstition is taking the place of true religion, or rather is destroying it, and is preparing the way for religious indifference."

Another, who knows Spain well, says:—"There is no sign of penitence in Spain, for there is no sense of sin; all that has been destroyed, and the only sin they seem to know is sin against the Church."

I have other extracts of letters from Spain, but they do not say that the present calamities have as yet produced anything like godly sorrow and a desire for the Gospel, at least in other parts of Spain than those referred to by Mr. Tugwell. At the same time we do know, in regard to God's providential dealing, that "He causeth it to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy," and we are, therefore, encouraged to hope and pray for the Spanish nation, as we remember the salutary effect produced on the French nation after the Franco-German War of 1870.

Faithfully yours,
DONALD MATHESON.

DEATHS.

THE death of Rev. S. Borton Brown took place at Cupernham, Romsey, Hants., not Bromley, as stated last week.

On August 26, in the Kangra Valley, Punjab, Herbert Edwardes Urmston, of Narwanah Tea Plantation, second and beloved son of Colonel and Mrs. H. Brabazon Urmston, aged 29.—(By telegraph).

FALSTAFF YARD, BOROUGH.—The urgent need for the efforts of the Christian public in this poor district was witnessed last week on the occasion of a free tea, kindly given by a few friends, in lieu of a day in the country (given annually). I am convinced that, by love and sympathy, the junior Arab class can be even more readily reached than the adults. Conspicuous here and there was the wish to be cleanly and even tasteful; others again bore the marks of neglect, and, distorted in features, one could but feel pity for their position. A bountiful tea, and, at intervals, singing and kind addresses, helped to pass a happy, and I must say a profitable evening. C. W. D.

COUNTRY VILLAGES AND THE GOSPEL.

WE have again this summer had times of blessing in the villages. A few weeks ago we met for work for three successive Lord's days, filling in most of the week days between.

The first Lord's day four of us left at 8.30 a.m., returning after fourteen hours' absence, during which we visited eight villages from house to house. We also held meetings at all available points until 7 p.m., when we ceased visiting and collected the people in groups in the open air.

After equally happy days during the next week, lodging with various friends at night, we left for another fourteen hours' work the next Sabbath.

Meeting during the day with an old friend, he gladly joined us. On one village-green during the evening I was especially delighted to notice how the people seemed to awake to a new thought when we told them that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself."

After the end of another week we found ourselves on the road home on the next Lord's day. As this was through a very neglected district and where we had been known for ten years, the interest to myself was very great. In one village there seemed to be anxious ones in half the houses. Meeting those to whom our visits have been previously blest is very happy work, and great was our pleasure that day. After tea in a farmhouse we found our time too limited for much visiting, so passed on through several large villages proclaiming the Gospel at every point where listeners were to be found.

The happy memories called up by again visiting houses where seeking or suffering ones had been pointed to the Lord Jesus filled our minds with joy.

The approaching month, September, is a good month generally, especially for reaching hop-pickers. If any friends could recommend us to any inexpensive lodgings between this and the Herefordshire hop-gardens they will greatly help us. We believe that every village in England may be reached. There is plenty to do if Christians will take up this work. There are plenty of outlying places where the Gospel is seldom or never taken.—Yours truly, T. S. HELEY.

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.

THIS valuable institution is still pursuing its philanthropic work, and is evidently prospering. One of its objects is to aid the societies that look after discharged prisoners, and so prevent their drifting again into crime. During the past year no less than 12,500 such cases have been reached. The work of rescuing children has resulted in the preservation of about 230 from dens of iniquity during the same period. A Female Mission has rendered aid to 200 fallen women by inviting them to the missionary's house to lodge, and then removing them to a Home. Further accounts of this work will shortly be published in separate form.

Financially the year has been good, more than £11,000 having been subscribed. A great deal more, however, is needed to meet the ever-increasing demands of each branch of the Institution. The inspector's report is most satisfactory, especially that bearing on the religious and moral training of the boys and girls.

Seventeen persons have been admitted after attempting self-destruction, some of whom have been restored to their families and others provided for in various ways, but all of them looked after and restored. The 29th report may be had of the Secretary, at the Office of the Union, 32, Charing-cross, S.W. A legacy of nearly £4,000 swelled last year's income, but of this only the interest is available year by year. Information relative to suitable homes for destitute children can always be obtained at the office.

AUSTRALIA.—A Good Templar Lodge here has been named the "Lord Wolseley," and his lordship has gratefully accepted the compliment.

ABORIGINES' PROTECTION SOCIETY.—This Society has been informed by a native chief that 11,559 Maories have joined the Blue Ribbon Society, and many others are following.

ENGLISH GIRLS IN FOREIGN CITIES.

By Miss LEIGH.

THE most practical and needed parts of Mr. Booth's National Scheme would appear to be that of a Central Office for Help and Inquiry.

There are numbers of Homes and Institutions admirable in their way, in London and elsewhere, probably at the moment I write, with empty beds, whilst there are numbers of unrescued ones outside; but there lacks the hand of loving wisdom to deal with them personally, and to take each girl when she is willing, and asks to be saved, and to place her into the Home best adapted to her case. For such a purpose a Central Office would be invaluable in any large town, as a place where the Homes now existing might be registered.

Our work in Paris is well known to be one of prevention, and our Homes exclusively for respectable young women. During the year 1883 we reached personally, by one or other of our agencies, over a thousand of our young countrywomen, and our Homes had 442 admissions.

It would not be possible to do a work of prevention on any large scale in a city like Paris without its bringing many for whom such efforts come too late. The subtlety of sin is so varied, and vice wears such a virtuous garb, that ere she is aware of it, an unsuspecting girl is entrapped and lost.

Such an one is but too thankful to find a friend in whom she dare confide, and who will at once help her out of Paris to friends, if she have any—for the number of friendless girls in Paris is one of the saddest features of our work—or on to new ground where she may begin again. And we thank God that there are numbers of our young countrywomen now serving Him in different parts of the world whose experiences in Paris have only been known to us. The power of this work is in its silence, no organised effort which had to place its records on books would ever accomplish it. Thank God we have "records" known to Him, and numbers of letters which we hold sacred before Him.

Others who have been led further will plead with us for help, and thankfully accept our offer of returning to England to be placed in a Home. And here arises a great difficulty. We write to various "Homes" and offer payment, and after waiting days (in one case three weeks), after answering a variety of questions, dragging up all the girl's private history, and finally to fill up some "form," we receive in return a polite reply that the case was "not suitable."

Meanwhile what has happened to the girl? All who deal much with human nature must know that the good resolve to do right is too often like a faint flicker which the least unfriendly criticism or delay may extinguish. Is Satan likely to leave one of his straying victims alone? So whilst committees are turning over their rules and considering the suitability of one case, the resolution to do right has waxed too feeble for us to carry it into effect. We receive a letter from the girl, or a telegram, telling us that she has changed her mind, thanking us for all our kindness, knowing the disappointment it will be, and so expressed as to give us fresh pain in the feeling that that girl was worth saving! Perhaps later she turns up again in the ebb and flow of her uncertain resources, but she never comes so near our grasp as she did that first time!

If a great saving work is to be done, we must get out of conventional "ruts." "Suitable" Homes are very proper, and each institution has a right to enforce its own rules of admission; but in our experience they are rarely the first link between the sinner and the Saviour.

Is sin ever deterred because its victim was "not suitable"? And the remedy must go as far as the disease, if the two are to come into saving contact.

The great point is to be able to act immediately upon the girl's desire to be saved. To take her implicitly at her word, and make her conscious that you are acting in good faith upon it, and before she has time to tell you that she has changed her mind! To be able to send her to London by the next train; to telegraph her arrival to some central office, where arrangements would be made to meet her, where she would be taken for neither better nor worse than she is, and dealt with personally by one who, she felt, was her truest friend, and then drafted into the suitable Home, is—to one whose heart has been so often riven with bitter disappointment at having lost one who was all but saved!—a luxurious thought!

We forbear to write more on this subject for the present, the aim of our work being the protection of our respectable young countrywomen abroad; but perhaps there is no city where a girl can be so easily lost as in Paris; and thousands must have slipped but for the mercy which by God's help our Homes have been able to extend. Whatever the dangers of London may be, in Paris they are aggravated. A girl has not only to struggle against her ignorance of the language lest she be caught by expressions which have quite another meaning to what she intends—but public opinion, which could never be moved in Paris as it has been in London—as a doctor of some eminence, who has spent much of his time in French hospitals and Parisian society, remarked, "Here the whole matter is treated as a good joke!" "No; vice is not sin in Paris—it is the only thing which pays, and the way to an easy life." Alas! that the uneven and desultory training of our English homes turns out so many daughters to whom sloth and ease are attractive! So, penniless, friendless, hungry, with all the pulses of life beating fresh and strong, uncontrolled by religious teaching, the difficulty of finding honest employment (and then insufficiently paid), the luxury of vice which runs by her side has its power—there is but a step to take—alone, in a great city, who shall care to know it?—a weak moment sees a girl take it, and dragged not below, but on to the surface of Parisian life.

May I add that our Homes at the present moment are greatly needing help.

Whilst aiming at prevention, I could not pass unheeded the human cry of sin that pleaded for help out of the lowest gutter. Still, however we may save such an one, the wreck of all that was once pure and womanly has been too costly. Surely the greater and more merciful work is that which catches the first cry, "My foot slippeth," without waiting for a fall, and by God's mercy "to hold up," body and soul, our young sisters beset by too well-timed temptations.

The Mission Home, 77, Avenue Watteau, Paris.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SIR,—I should like to say a few words with regard to your query, as to whether it is possible to bring boys and girls together in a proper manner. It is a subject about which I have thought very much, and had some experience in. I think it is not only possible but profitable too. In our parish we have Bible-classes for boys and girls of the ages, from fifteen to twenty-one; so we may call them young men and women, both classes being held at the same time in different rooms.

The first year after they were started each had their own separate summer picnic, and winter tea party. As time went on we noticed our lads and lasses were getting acquainted with one another and asked for a united party. After much thought and consideration we agreed to try how it would answer to bring them together under our own care, and the result has been entirely satisfactory from the first, and it has since been our rule to have several such gatherings during the year.

I am quite sure it has done much good, for whatever we teachers and workers may do we cannot prevent boys and girls getting acquainted, and surely it is much better to bring them together in this way, than if they chose their companions out of the streets or from the different places of amusement.

By acknowledging the acquaintance we gain their confidence, and are able to give them advice and sympathy (which is always much valued and appreciated), and so keep our influence over both.

In cases where the boy does go elsewhere for his companion, we take up the girl and get her to join the girls' class, and so get a new member, and at the same time, keep the young man from being led away from his class.

I may just mention that the boys were quite below the generality of those who attend Sunday-schools, and it has done much to raise the tone of their lives by letting them see they are trusted, and the fact of them both belonging to Christian societies (many of the girls are members of the G.F.S.) gives them a greater respect for each other and more responsibility.

We have, of course, to be careful and know our scholars and see there are no black sheep in the flock.

I think, if teachers were to interest themselves and to sympathise with their young people in these matters, instead of setting their faces against what, as you say, Sir, "is according to nature and Divine order," our boys and girls would get into much less harm than they do now. E. J. W.

Coventry.

TO ENGLAND'S MINISTERS.

"If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand."

YE preachers of England, awaken!
  And speak with a clarion voice,
For the angels in heaven are mourning,
  Whilst the demons in hell rejoice!
There's a cry as of Rachel weeping,
  From mothers' uncomforted,
They weep for their murdered children,
  The dying, the lost, the dead.

There's a bitter cry that is swelling,
  And it pierces the starry sky;
'Tis the cry of the weak and the outraged,
  And it reaches their God on high.
He hears it, and He will avenge it,
  For it sounds from the yawning grave
Of the bodies and souls of the children
  That Jesus has died to save.

Ye preachers of England, awaken!
  The silence of sloth forsake,
For, whilst ye sleep and ye slumber,
  The devil is wide awake.
Through our crowded streets and our alleys
  He walks in a human guise,
And woe to the helpless children,
  That are blasted beneath his eyes.

Ah! woe to our England's children,
  Who are drawn to an endless shame!
Shall they bear ere they reach their girlhood
  The brand of the harlot's name?
Ah! woe to our guilty country,
  If she suffers this evil yet,
For her righteous God doth see it,
  And that God will not forget!

And, alas, for our England's preachers,
  If their voices be hushed and dumb,
If they sound not the trumpet's warning,
  As the hosts of the wicked come;
When the men shall for ever perish,
  Whose lust has defiled our land,
Their blood shall the God of vengeance
  Require from the watchman's hand.

But the blessings of mourning mothers
  In many a childless home
Are his, who will warn the spoiler,
  There's a judgment of sin to come.
And the blessing of God shall compass
  The watchman whose fearless word,
As the army of hell advances,
  Shall flash forth the Spirit's sword.

Ye preachers of England, awaken!
  And speak in the name of your God,
Warn men of their vile transgressions,
  And cleanse your hands from their blood,
Let this awful wrong of the children
  Be echoed from shore to shore,
Till our country too shall awaken,
  And say "It shall be no more."

MISS CLEVELAND, sister of the U.S. President, and a staunch teetotaller, has left the White House for her own home. It is suggested that this is a proof of her devotion to total abstinence principles.

SALFORD BREWSTER SESSIONS.—The Mayor said, leaving out women and children there was a licensed house for each forty or fifty inhabitants. That was more than required, and the Licensing Committee had determined that none but respectable and law-abiding persons should continue license holders.

Letters to the Editor.

PASTORS AND YOUNG MEN.

Sir,—The cause of Purity would undoubtedly be greatly helped if pastors would, now and then, gather together the youths and young men of their churches and schools, and speak to them plainly of the physical, mental, moral, and spiritual disaster that must follow impurity of life; and if, in like manner, pastors' wives, or other qualified ladies, would give fitting counsel to the maidens. The need is urgent.—Yours faithfully, J. O.

"ROOTS AND FRUITS."

Ear Sir,—The article "Roots and Fruits" in The Christian of the 6th inst. touched a subject that will meet the case of thousands who are striving to know whether God has revealed Himself to man.

Seven years ago I was a nominal Christian and a real Deist, and had been for some ten years previously searching for truth. It pleased God to bring me under the roof of a man who showed me these four things:—

(1) That the undoubted doctrine of Scripture is eternal life to all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ;

(2) That the said life is received at the moment of true conversion, and cannot be lost again;

(3) That the evidence of prophecy establishes the authority of the Bible by external means;

(4) That the various books composing the Bible were written at such times, and under such circumstances, as to render collusion impossible, and that there exist between them all such marvellous harmonies, and so numerous, that to the candid spirit it is impossible to reject the conclusion that the whole volume is the work of but One Mind.

Now, some time ago I was on the platform with an experienced and well-known evangelist. We both gave addresses. Meeting him on a later occasion, he complained of my being too deep for my hearers, and explained that he and others who had undergone special training for their work were taught to treat the minds of their hearers "as a blank sheet of paper." I thought to myself, "Then, upon such as you and your trainers devolves the whole responsibility of my years of unbelief, and of the same state now found in thousands who have the misfortune to lack the characteristic of the hearers you gather round you, viz., a blank mind, their fathers having given them what is called an education." When I sat, Sunday after Sunday, side by side with men whose brains were sharpened with the keen edge of competition in trade, hard worked in the intricacies of the law, or exercised over some apparently incurable case of disease, and listened to vapid nothings from the pulpit, called sermons, I thought that every preacher had a blank mind, owing to his abstraction from the world, and that he and his tenets were well represented in the goody-goody little books I saw circulated amongst women and children, food quite unfit for men. I voted Christianity a thing below a man's matured reason.

Now, the Bible tells us we are to be ready to give a reason for the faith that is in us. Why were these men unable to do that for me, when I asked them time after time? The answer is, because they were incompetent to do so, not having mastered their subject in the way a man of the world takes care to do in regard to his mere earthly affairs.

The fact is this. The educated man is not getting his fair chance of believing the Gospel. He is reticent as to his real views regarding Revelation, and often cannot define them himself. As educated men are the leaders of modern thought, the importance of bringing the truth fairly before them is enormous. Further, on conversion they sympathise readily with Paul, the educated Apostle, and through his Epistles they can be promptly and firmly grounded, and become themselves useful and capable teachers.

Education and contact with the world create a demand for evidence, when the mind is asked to give credence to a thing. I find that no adequate effort is being made by evangelisation societies to produce that evidence, and offer it in an acceptable form. And I protest against that state of things. The Christian is quite right in saying that we must not expect the unbeliever to search for that evidence, and that it is our place to bring it to him. Can nothing be done?—Yours in Christian regard,

G. Warrand Houghton.

MEMORIAL TO SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE.

Sir,—It is proposed to raise a tribute to the memory of the late Sir Moses Montefiore, in connection with the Chelsea Hospital for Women. The reasons which have induced the Board of Management to undertake the memorial are:—

(1) That there is no similar hospital where poor Jewish women, suffering from the diseases peculiar to the sex, can secure privacy in companionship with their co-religionists, and be able to observe the cherished rites of their faith. (2) That the late Sir Moses Montefiore was one of the first governors of the hospital, and that no more honoured name could be associated with a first effort to make a proper provision for poor and suffering Jewesses. This object may be attained for £1500—£500 to name a Montefiore ward, and £1000 to endow and name a Montefiore bed. Jews and Christians alike are asked to subscribe to this fund, as an "In Memoriam" offering to the memory of the late patriarchal philanthropist; and those who are kind enough to do so will have the power to recommend the patients for the Montefiore ward.

Cheques payable to James Debac, Esq., Treasurer, and crossed "London and County Bank;" or postal orders and notes, payable at G.P.O., and also crossed, will be promptly acknowledged by

J. S. Wood, Secretary.

CHRISTIANITY IN TASMANIA.

Dear Sir,—In answer to the letter in your issue of April 23, asking for information respecting the Lord's work in Tasmania. I beg to state that there is a fair field for almost all kinds of evangelistic effort. It will give some idea of the state of matters in the country, when I say, that a new comer, who had taken up land at ——, was shocked on his arrival to find that no difference was made by his neighbours between Sunday and other days. On his expostulating with them, they requested him to wait until he also had lived there some time and he would do the same. This is no unusual fact. Tent services held throughout the country would, I think, be a great means of attracting the people, and prove a blessing to many, who are unable to go distances to places of worship, even if they have the opportunity which is not the case in many parts of the island. A craftsman told our Seamen's Missionary that in a certain bay not far from Hobart the people were "wanting religion," but there was no one to supply their need. However, an occasional Sunday visit was afterwards paid by two Christian tradesmen of this town. There have been visits from time to time of evangelists to Hobart and Launceston, the Northern and Southern capitals, which have stirred up the churches into some state of activity, in which, however, the Church of England does not share. In none of the churches is the blessed truth taught of the coming of our Lord; in fact, the influence of the minister has hitherto been against such teachings as dangerous.—Yours, &c., "Tasmania."

FEMALE EMIGRATION.

Dear Sir,—Having, during my voyage to Canada, lost a bag containing letters and papers, I regret my inability to write, as I promised, to several who wished to hear from me. There is a great demand here for servants, and surely in a country of such vast extent and resources there should be scope for the class I am still desirous of helping. They must be practical, able, and willing to undertake manual occupations. The thought of taking up domestic duties may perhaps appear somewhat startling, but the false notion of refinement which has crept into English households is happily giving way, and many struggling fellow sisters in the mother country are beginning to see that educational pursuits have become unremunerative and unobtainable—there being too many teachers in the field—and that household work is no degradation.

I have mentioned the subject whenever opportunity offered. The Government Immigration Secretary replies, "that the scheme proposed might be successful if supported by an influential committee." Success must in great measure depend on the skill of the candidates in their performance of work. Those possessing a thorough knowledge of good useful cookery, combined with domestic economy, will readily find employment in any colony. Sick-nursing, amongst other useful occupations, may also be mentioned. Having promised to do all I can in furtherance of this much-needed object, I anxiously await the result of my efforts, and pray that I may be instrumental in aiding some of the unemployed ladies of Great Britain.

Yours faithfully,

Sophia Strongi'th'arm.

MASTERS AND SERVANTS.

Sir,—It is very common for Christians to employ domestic servants of both sexes. Such servants are obliged to mingle together on a footing of the greatest familiarity at meal times and throughout the day, and it will almost necessarily happen that as there will be facility so there will be considerable temptation to immorality. In my own personal knowledge several such instances have occurred in the houses of Christian masters, while, on the other hand, I know an instance of one high in the social scale, who, knowing the mischief likely to arise from this cause, determined only to have female servants in his establishment. Is it not worth considering whether in this way one occasion might not be removed?—Yours truly, Holme Lea, St. Leonards. R. D. Monro.

THE APPROACHING ELECTION.

Dear Sir,—In prospect of the approaching election there are many people who are Christians before they are politicians, and who would rather vote for the right man than uphold a party. But it is extremely difficult for many obscure voters to know who is the right man. Could not The Christian help them by printing information as to candidates, and the side they mean to take on Bills relating to Sunday Observance, the Criminal Law Amendment, the Parliamentary Oath, the Temperance Movement, and other important questions which are sure to come before Parliament next session in some form or other?

Perhaps some of your readers might send you information, or obtain written pledges in answer to written questions from those who desire to represent them. If the names of intending candidates were published who were pledged to support these Bills, it would guide the working man in using the vote which has been extended to him, in his own interests, and Christian workers would be able to give advice and instruction with certainty that God would be glorified, and "that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, would be established among us."—Yours faithfully,

Court House, North Finchley. F. Wimbush.

THE LANGUAGE IN WHICH JESUS SPOKE.

Dear Sir,—I observed a quotation in your paper a few weeks ago which stated that our Lord when on earth never spoke a word of Greek. It appears to me that great care is required when we make such assertions as this, and I am quite at a loss to find out on what ground such a conclusion can be based. No doubt Syriac was the common language in Palestine at that time, and a few of his expressions are given in that language; at the same time, we know that several other languages, including Greek, were also in current use, and it is not reasonable to suppose that He who knew all things would confine Himself to one language, but rather that He would use that which would be best understood by his hearers, who were of course very varied. It is not certain that all the disciples wrote was in Greek, but they must have understood the language, and the quotations given by them from the Old Testament mostly agree very nearly with the Septuagint, and it is evidently the language in which Christian doctrine was mostly promulgated in the early times.

It may be said that this is not a question of great importance, but anything connected with that wonderful life is too important to be asserted without clear evidence.—Yours truly, C. W.

THE RAILWAY MEN'S BIBLE UNION.—The hon. secretary is very anxious to find some lady who will help her in the work of the Union. It numbers about 1200 this year, and the secretary feels that so much more ought to be done in connection with it than she has strength to do, that she earnestly desires Christian help in its extension, and in the necessary correspondence. Address, Mrs. Probyn, Oakfield, Three Bridges, Sussex.

BURNHAM.—Mr. W. Catlin and his co-worker, Joseph Phillips, of Cow-cross Mission, London, have been conducting open-air services on the sands, in the Town-hall, &c., at this watering-place, assisted by the Male Gospel Choir from the Bridgwater Y.M.C.A., who sing some of their beautiful songs and solos, followed by most stirring Gospel addresses from our brethren. Mr. Catlin exhibited his Gospel banner that he carried through America, &c. In this dark corner of Somerset, very little sympathy is shown to open-air preaching. One has to stand alone, both to speak and sing. Will Christians pray that Burnham may have the Holy Spirit poured out on it? A. C. Trew, Town Missionary.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA is the leading town in the United States for Sunday-school work. In this town there are 555 Sunday-schools, with 155,348 scholars, and 15,363 teachers, in all one-fifth of the entire population.

ICELAND.—It is calculated that there are from 6000 to 8000 Icelanders in America. In Manitoba there are about 2000, forming altogether eleven churches, which have sent twenty-eight delegates to a Convention at Mountain, with the object of creating a synodal organisation.—Le Christianisme

BASLE.—A sect of Sabbatarians who observe the seventh day, Saturday, as their day of rest have just been summoned by the police for working at one of their buildings on the first day of the week. The defence was that the building must be ready by a certain date, and that the head of the sect, an Englishman, did not know it was necessary to obtain permission from the authorities for such work on the Sunday. Under these circumstances the punishment was only a fine of 3 francs.—Wahrheitszeuge.

BRITTANY.—The members of the Evangelical Church at Tremel, met on Sunday week for their half-yearly communion, the annual fête and school examination having taken place on the previous day. A goodly proportion of the little company of believers were present. They adopted an address of thanks to the newly-formed committee in London, by whose timely interposition their religious privileges were secured as well as their two day-schools. It is satisfactory to notice the few signatures by cross among the curious specimens of caligraphy appended to the document. Four old scholars, from over fifty miles distant, were present. Pasteur Lecoat expressed himself profoundly thankful to Almighty God for the signs of spiritual progress on every hand.

THEOPHILANTHROPISTS.—This new sect, first organised in Paris in 1797, was resuscitated in January, 1882, and now counts at least 42,000 adherents. Its dogma may be summed up in two points: the existence of God, and the immortality of the soul. Its morality consists in worshipping God, loving one's neighbour, and being useful to one's country. Prayer is made to God chiefly that He would remove the error of the individual and of the world, for almost all the evils that afflict men arise from their errors. The members are invited to contribute towards the happiness of future generations: for instance, by grafting a good fruit branch on some wild stock in the woods, so that, at some future day, a wandering and weary traveller may appease his hunger or quench his thirst.

SECEDERS FROM ROME.—It is well known that several priests of the Church of Rome in Rome in France are strongly feeling the shackles of the erroneous system in which they have been educated. One of these writes to a Protestant pastor, who knows him well: "I desire as soon as possible to finish with this position, against which my conscience protests. My highest ambition and dearest wish is to preach Christ, the true Christ of the Holy Scriptures." Another, who desires to come out of "Holy Orders," says: "I want faith. I desire to believe, I try to believe; but I do not believe. The evil of scepticism has seized me. . . . I renounce all my ambition. I want nothing but to believe the naked Gospel. Oh, to believe not with the head only. but with the heart! How far I am from the faith which saves!" To help such men to become evangelical pastors, or to gain their daily bread in some other way, a Committee has been formed in Paris, whose presidents are M. Réveilland and Pastor Bastide, 24, Rue de Rivoli, Paris.

AGEN, FRANCE.—M. Halbout, the earnest evangelist colporteur who labours at this priest-ridden place, and on the railway for fifty miles in either direction, writes much discouraged. The Romanists have succeeded in depriving him of the advantages which for years he has been labouring to reach. They have induced the landlord of his house to turn him out, and tried by all the means in their power to prevent his preaching, and distributing of the Scriptures. But he has secured a large house, much larger than he needs for his family. In this he offers to take any English girls, and give them an opportunity of attending the Lycée with his daughters. He needs further supplies of the Scriptures for sale at the fairs which will now be numerous. By the sale of these and help from English friends, he continues to support himself, preaching the word as he journeys from place to place. His address is 16, Rue de l'Ecole Vieille, Agen, Lot et Garonne, France.

HUGUENOTS.—A meeting in remembrance of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes has just been held at Beaumont, in Drôme. Nearly 1500 Protestants were present. M. Arnaud, in a masterly way, retraced the history of the French Reformation and the struggle for religious liberty, referring to the desert preachers, some of whom were hanged and others cruelly persecuted; also to that holy and noble young woman, Marie Moulin, of Beaufort, an adjoining town. Several pastors took part in the day's celebrations, and two English ladies contributed much to the material comfort of the visitors.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing on services conducted by Mr. Thomas Wales at Hazelbury, Plucknett.——For a prayer of five years clearly answered from the Lord.

PRAYER.—For a series of tent meetings being held in a needy district in Surrey, that there may be a great "shaking amongst the dry bones."——That God may greatly bless the Y.M.C.A. in Owen Sound, Canada.——For a great outpouring of the Spirit upon the Churches in Canada, producing a widespread revival among God's children and the conversion of many sinners.——For special services at Tiverton, near Bath, September 5 and 6, by Mr. Opie Rodway. Pray that the Holy Spirit may accompany the word and that many may be saved.—For tent meetings to be conducted by T. Cauker and W. Finch, at Evenwood, near Darlington, commencing Sunday, September 6.——The prayers of God's people are earnestly desired by the parents and family of a young man about to return home from a distant land. That it may please Almighty God to restore him in health and safety to his home.

Y.M.C.A., LIVERPOOL.—Members and friends of this Association have been holding open-air Temperance meetings in front of St. George's Hall. As the result of four weekly meetings 334 have signed the pledge.

GENERAL GRANT AND TEMPERANCE.—It is stated that General Grant never allowed intoxicants in his camp. On one occasion on a march it was clear his men had smuggled some. He ordered a halt as if for rest. He then found the whisky vessels, and quietly emptied the contents of each on the ground.

A GOOD HINT.—Would any reader of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons be willing to give some of their old copies for distribution among sailors on some coasting steamers, who get little spiritual help, and have hardly any opportunities of attending a place of worship? Any copies sent, carriage paid, to Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill, will be gladly received, and forwarded to the sailors.

FOREIGN PRISONS MISSION.—I hope (D.V.) to leave England on Tuesday next, September 8, and trust to visit Austria, Hungary, Turkey, and parts of Asia Minor, returning through Italy. May I ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have followed me with their prayers in Europe, Africa, and America, to again remember me in this journey, that God may grant me good success, and bless the distribution of his Word throughout the countries I may travel through? For economy's sake I am going alone; unless some brother able to pay his own expenses (about £100) should be led to accompany me. I should be very glad if a suitable person should be stirred up to go with me. Absence from England under two months. Brethren pray for us. CHAS. COOK.

Hyde Park Hall, London, W.

EASTBOURNE.—A bazaar was recently held at the rooms of the House of Rest, Burlington-place. Ladies from various parts had contributed articles for the sale, as the House of Rest for Christian workers at Eastbourne is a widely representative institution, and unsectarian in the benefits it affords to ministers and Christian ladies who visit the south coast, and is a branch of the well-known institution at Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, London. The institution was founded in 1866 as a temporary residence for mission workers from London and the provinces, and at the Kilburn centre special arrangements are made for invalids, who have the benefit of free medical attendance. Miss Mason is the founder and the hon. director of the institutions, which are open to all evangelical workers who care to share the benefits, and want of means is no barrier to entrance. Letters from those who had benefited by their stay at the institutions have reached Miss Mason from all parts.—Sussex Daily News.

THE GLEN.

I WALKED beside the sea;
  The waves their volleys poured,
And cannonading leaped
  In angry rage abroad.
The wind came howling by,
  And shrieked within mine ear,
A friend spoke softly at my side;
  I heard not, though so near.

We reached a tranquil glen;
  We turned, the noise was hushed,
For through that peaceful scene
  Calm zephyrs gently brushed.
No sound of falling waves;
  'Twas but a gentle hum,
The sound of many waters, heard
  As heaven's soft echoes come.

No more the barren rocks—
  Sweet flowers were strewn around;
No more the storm's rude screech—
  Dove-notes the only sound.
We rested where the sun
  Dripped glittering through the trees,
And sweetly fell my loved one's voice,
  Amid such scenes as these.

We walk beside the sea,
  The troubled sea of life;
Its waves their volleys pour,
  And burst in noisy strife.
The Heavenly Friend is nigh,
  He walks with us the shore;
He speaks, but when the storms are high,
  We hear not in the roar.

Seek thou Faith's tranquil glen,
  Where inspiration's sun
Shines calmly through Life's tree;
  Where rills of pleasure run.
The rush, the roar, shall cease,
  Thou shalt with Love commune;
Prepared by quiet hours of peace
  Thy journey to resume.

WILLIAM LUFF,
Author of "Wave Whispers."

A PETITION, signed by all the members of the Poole Town Council, has been sent to the Home Secretary, praying for a commutation of the sentence on Williams, the detective.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Sept. 8, Luke viii. 16—25; Sept. 7, viii. 26—40; Sept. 8, viii. 41—56; Sept. 9, ix. 1—11; Sept. 10, ix. 12—22; Sept. 11, ix. 23—36; Sept. 12, ix. 37—48.

LLANDUDNO.—Major Evered Poole delivered two addresses to men only in St. George's Hall upon the subject of "England's Shame." Mrs. Poole was to have held similar gatherings to women, but in her absence through illness her place was filled by Mrs. Stephen Menzies.

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU has been holding a series of meetings in St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, since August 16, which have been well attended, and productive of much blessing. A course of addresses on "The Lord's Second Coming" proved specially interesting and helpful. He has also been speaking at Plympton, Underwood, and Horrabridge, to the village people.

NEBRASKA.—Will the friend who kindly sends THE CHRISTIAN to Rev. J. K. Harris, note the following:—"I have received THE CHRISTIAN for a considerable time, and with my family am glad to read it. I find, scattered over our vast areas here, many English, Irish, and Scotch, and Welsh, who knew this paper at the old home beyond the sea, and they are very glad to see it again. Please change my post-office address to Scotia, Greeley Co., Nebraska, U.S.A."

WHITE CROSS ARMY.—Nearly 3000 men were addressed on Wednesday night on the subject of "Personal and Public Morality" at the Dome, Brighton, at a meeting called to inaugurate a Branch of the White Cross Union, under the auspicies of the Y.M.C.A. Powerful addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Marriage Wallis, J.P., J. B. Wookey, Miss Ellice Hopkins, and Henry Varley. Nearly 300 men came forward at the close of the meeting, and registered their name as members of the White Cross Union.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SEPTEMBER 3.—JAMES I.

v. 1.—"James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ."—On the principle "no man can serve two masters," we have here a direct testimony to the oneness of God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

"To the twelve tribes . . . scattered abroad."—"The Christians to whom he wrote not only had not ceased to be Jews, but it was precisely those Jews who believed in the Messiah promised to them, and manifested in Jesus, who were the true Jews; so that he regarded believing Israel as the true people of God, on whom he could therefore without scruple confer the name of "the twelve tribes."—Huther.

v. 3.—"The trying of your faith worketh patience."—The word "proof" which R.V. substitutes for "trying," is liable to be misunderstood; "testing" would be better. "'Patience' is not merely passive submission: rather, enduring fortitude, the elastic spirit which bears up against trials until it conquers."—Sp. Com.

v. 8.—"A double-minded man" is literally a double-souled man. The soul is that part of the Christian (1 Thess. v. 28, "spirit, soul, and body") which should be ruled by the spirit, and itself rule the body. When, however, the body is allowed to rule the soul, then, so far as the spirit at times asserts its sway, a double soul seems to be the result; one soul ruled by the spirit, the other by the body; and utter confusion and instability are the consequence.

v. 18.—A kind of firstfruits."—"In the new creation the Only-begotten is the Firstfruits; but the adopted children are (as the word is carefully qualified), 'a sort of firstfruits.'"—Sp. Com.

v. 25.—"The perfect law, the law of liberty" (R.V.)—"Not a different and more perfect law (for the law itself is of God), but the law fulfilled in perfection such as Judaism could not reach, and now at one with the springs of action in the Christian's inner man."—Sp. Com.

SEPTEMBER 4.—JAMES II.

v. 1.—"Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, (the Lord) of glory."—The word "glory" should qualify the three titles, and not one only. It is almost equivalent to "our glorified Lord Jesus Christ." "Faith of" is (as in Mark xi. 22, Gal. ii. 16, and Acts iii. 16) "faith in."

v. 14.—"Can faith save him?" There is a definite article before faith which ought to appear. R.V. renders it, "Can that faith save him?" It means such a faith as that described, a saying that one has faith without the evidences of its existence.

v. 18.—"Yea, a man will say," &c.—Greek, "but some one will say."—Sp. Com. takes it as an antithesis to ver. 15; there the mere professor says he has faith, but has not works; here the true believer challenges him to prove his faith, as he by his works can prove his.

v. 20.—"O vain man."—Literally, "O empty man." The empty professor of ver. 15 is still being addressed. It is literally, too, "dost thou wish to know?"

"Faith apart from works is barren" (R.V.), or "idle," as the reading preferred by R.V. literally means.

v. 21.—"Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when," &c.—The space of time—not less than twenty years—which elapsed between Abraham's justification by faith (Gen. xv.) and the event referred to here, shows that there is no contradiction of the great doctrine of justification by faith which is fully recognised in ver. 23. The harmony between James and Paul appears in the words, "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?"

v. 26.—"As the body without the spirit is dead."—Here probably "breath" (as in margin) is meant, breath being the evidence of life, so that a mirror is sometimes put before the mouth of one whose death is doubtful, if so be that the mark of breath on the glass may give evidence of life.

SEPTEMBER 5.—JAMES III.

v. 1.—"Be not many masters" (or teachers, R.V.).—Huther renders this, "Be not in great numbers teachers," referring to "the free teaching in the congregation, which was not yet joined to a particular office, but appertained to everyone who felt himself called to it." But the reason given in the next verse points rather to "a tendency to talk instead of acting, and to the responsibility incurred by those who undertake to teach others their duty."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 2.—"In many things we offend all."—Better in R.V., "in many things we all stumble." This is an important text in the Perfectionist controversy. James was, from all we read of him, an eminently holy man, and yet includes himself in the number of those who "stumble in many things."

v. 5.—"How great a matter a little fire kindleth." "How great a forest is kindled by how small a fire" (R.V., margin).

v. 6.—"Is set on fire of (by, R.V.) hell."—"Not 'whose end is to be burned,' but 'itself kindled at the gehenna of hell, and with that fire kindling all human life."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 13.—"Let him show by his good life his works" (R.V.).—Rather than by his talk. Compare Titus i. 10: "There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped."

v. 14.—"Envy and strife," are better rendered in R.V. "jealousy and faction."—The same words occur again in ver. 16.

v. 15.—"Earthly, sensual, devilish."—An allusion to the trinity of evil, "the world, the flesh, and the devil."

v. 18.—"The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace for (or by) them that make peace" (R.V.).—"By" is to be preferred to "for." The meaning is, "by them that make peace" there is being sown seed (i.e. peace) which will produce fruit consisting of righteousness.

SEPTEMBER 6.—JAMES IV.

v. 2.—"Ye kill, and desire to have."—"Ye kill and covet" (margin, are jealous), R.V. Sp. Com. renders this, "Ye play the murderers and zealots," and explains it thus: "The well-known politico-religious party of the Zealots was probably at first a sincere brotherhood of enthusiasts, not unworthy of the Maccabees, whose era they hoped to revive. . . . But while many became Christians, the Zealots, as a body, became associated and popularly identified with the 'murderers' in the Jewish War. The doings of the Zealots are the crowning horror of the siege of Jerusalem."

v. 4.—"Ye adulteresses" (R.V.)—omitting "adulterers," as not supported by sufficient authority. This makes it probable that the word here is used in its mystical sense, as so often in the Old Testament. "If those who are espoused to the Lord (2 Cor. xi. 2) combine other loves with his, this is precisely the spiritual adultery which the prophets denounce."—Sp. Com.

v. 5.—"Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain?"—As no such passage as that which follows can be found in the Old Testament, it is generally now supposed that this refers to the general testimony of Scripture as to what goes before, and should be translated as in R.V., "Or think ye that the Scripture speaketh in vain?"

"The Spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy."—Better is the rendering of R.V., taking it interrogatively, "Doth the Spirit which He made to dwell in us long unto envying?" There is another rendering (given in margin, R.V.) adopted by many, and advocated in the "Speaker's Commentary": "The Spirit which He made to dwell in us He yearneth for, even unto jealous envying." This latter has in its favour that it is in keeping with the context, and with the reference to the marriage relationship between God and his people, so often spoken of in Scripture.

v. 12.—"There is one Lawgiver."—The best authorities add "and Judge." So R.V.: "One only is the Lawgiver and Judge."

v. 17.—"To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—This strikingly supplements Rom. xiv. 23, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." The one says, "it is sin to do what you may doubt to be right;" the other, "it is sin not to do what you know to be right."

SEPTEMBER 7.—JAMES V.

v. 1.—"Go to now, ye rich men," &c.—Even true Christians might have been in danger of becoming "envious of the prosperity of the wicked," and therefore needed to be taught how little they were to be envied (see Ps. lxxiii. 3, and 18, 19).

v. 12.—"But above all things, my brethren, swear not."—A very distinct reference to Matt. v. 33—37.

v. 13.—"Is any among you suffering? let him pray. Is any cheerful? let him sing praise" (R.V.).—The Sp. Com. points out that these "may be the same persons, first praying to God to remove their burden, and when He has heard their prayers singing to Him with thanksgiving."

v, 13.—"Is any among you sick? let him call for the elders of the Church."—"Doubtless among the body of presbyters were found (but not exclusively) all the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, and especially that of healing. But the words point not to certain gifted individuals as such, but to a solemn visit of the body as the representatives of the Church of which they are the ministers."—Sp. Com.

vv. 14, 15.—"Anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick."—The notion that oil was here used for its healing properties is refuted by the cure being attributed to "the prayer of faith." The anointing was rather an outward symbol of the power by which the cure was to be wrought, viz., that of the Holy Spirit. Compare Acts x. 38: "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing," &c.

v. 20.—"Shall hide a multitude of sins" ("cover," R.V.).—"According to a common Hebrew expression (Ps. xxxii. 1, 2), connected etymologically and symbolically with the cover of the ark, the mercy-seat (see Exod. xxv. 17—22), to 'hide' (or 'cover') them is to pronounce their forgiveness."—Speaker's Commentary. The sins "covered" are those of the "soul saved from death."

SEPTEMBER 8.—I PETER I.

v. 2.—"Unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."—The Rheimish version (1582) reads "unto the obedience," &c., which strangely (considering the source) confirms the view of Beza and others, that the obedience here spoken of is that of "Jesus Christ." The Greek will admit of this, and the plain reference to the work of the three Persons of the Trinity makes it doubtful if the element of human obedience was intended in such a connection.

v. 3.—"A living hope" (R.V.)—As Paul may be called the Apostle of "faith," John of "love," so Peter of "hope," from the prominence given to it in this opening passage. See too verses 13, 21, and iii. 15. "Peter loves the epithet 'living,' and the mention of 'hope.'"—Bengel.

v. 5.—"Kept by the power of God."—"The word for kept here used in the original is a military term, and means such a guard as is maintained by a powerful garrison to protect a fortress from assault or surprise."—Sp. Com.

v. 7.—"Found unto praise and honour and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ."—"Commentators have not been generally careful enough in explaining these words; but 'praise' means the approbation of God; . . . 'honour' refers to the distinction conferred upon the good soldiers of Christ in the Church Militant; 'glory' is already their portion now reserved in heaven, and to be manifested when," &c.—Sp. Com. In other words, "praise" is the judicial (see ii. 14, and Rom. xiii. 3), "honour" the personal, and "glory" the physical, reward of faith, corresponding to justification, sanctification, and redemption of the body: see 1 Cor. i. 30 (R.V.).

v. 13.—"Set your hope perfectly" (R.V.).—Better than "hope to the end."

v. 17.—"If ye call on Him as Father, who without respect of persons judgeth, &c." (R.V.).—If it is your privilege to call the judge Father, don't abuse your privilege, but be afraid of offending Him.

SEPTEMBER 9.—I PETER II.

v. 2.—"As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word"—For "of the word," R.V. substitutes "spiritual," putting in the margin "Greek, reasonable." But this betrays the weakness of the alteration, for if the word means "reasonable," it should not be rendered "spiritual." The word "logos," "word," from which the adjective in question is formed, never means "reason" in the New Testament, but always "the word," and is used generally of the Word of God. Here the old translation was far better.——"Sincere"—"Lit., without guile or deceit; . . . doctrine derived from the word unadulterated by any falsehood."

v. 5.—Ye also as lively stones are built up."—"Rather, as the grammatical structure and the inner sense indicate, 'be ye also as living stones built up.'"—Sp. Com.

v. 7.—"For you, therefore, which believe is the preciousness" (R.V.).—Referring to the word precious in ver. 6.

v. 9.—"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood," &c.—What was offered to Israel at the foot of Sinai (Exod. xix. 5) conditionally on their obedience, is here asserted of "you that believe" unconditionally, for the sake of Him in whom they are accepted, who hath "magnified the law, and made it honourable."

v. 24.—"Who . . . . bare our sins . . . . on (marg. "to") the tree."—"The word 'bare' has a singular fulness of significance: it is a sacrificial term constantly used in the LXX. for offering sacrifice; here it includes two meanings—our Lord took up our sins, and in His own body which He offered on the cross He expiated them."—Sp. Com.

GLEANINGS FROM POPULAR AUTHORS. Part I. 7d. Cassell & Co. This attractive serial gives the cream from a host of standard English writings, both in poetry and prose, accompanied by suitable illustrations. It will meet with warm and universal appreciation in the numerous and varied circles into which it will certainly make its way.

THE OLIVE LEAF. ½d Southey, 14, Cullum-street, E.C. This new monthly is the organ of the Women's Peace Association. Being of humble and unassuming form, it will have hard work to keep itself prominent amongst the multitude of publications each claiming attention. But its object is a laudable one, advocating that the money spent in often useless wars should rather be devoted to providing for the poor at home, and we doubt not that many of our readers who are like minded will extend its usefulness by distribution.

WEST OF IRELAND.—Rev. H. Jones, known to many as Secretary of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society, has undertaken to go to the far west of Ireland and endeavour, as God may enable him, to win the poor priest-ridden people of that dark region to the truth as it "is in Jesus," and to the faith and hope of the Gospel. Mr. Jones has a small but insufficient income of his own. The Earl of Cavan has kindly offered him the use of his furnished house on the Island of Achill; Mr. R. C. L Bevan has promised £10, and to repeat the same next year should it be required. We earnestly commend the cause and our brother, whom we believe well suited for the work, and shall be glad to receive any contributions that may be sent to us for the promotion of this good object, addressed either to ourselves or to the Publishers of THE CHRISTIAN.—CHARLES GRAHAM, minister of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's-bush, London; FRANK H. WHITE, minister of the Talbot Tabernacle, Notting-hill.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

In Memory of

Major-Gen. Sir HERBERT STEWART, K.C.B.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—It is my earnest wish and desire to raise some memorial in the town in which I live in memory of my late brother, Sir Herbert Stewart, and I appeal to your liberality and generous aid. It is proposed to open for soldiers coffee, reading, recreation, and dining-rooms, library, and Bible-class rooms, besides nightly Gospel and Temperance addresses, &c.

All who are interested in the Soldiers' welfare would (if they knew this town) agree with me that this "Home" is urgently needed, and the opportunity of possessing a building, at this particular moment, coupled with my earnest wish to do something in memory of my brother, clearly shows me that it is the Lord's work (before whom I have laid the whole scheme), and I confidently appeal to your Christian sympathy, being assured that, with the blessing of Him "whose are the silver and gold," I shall not make the appeal in vain.

Full particulars and circulars will be forwarded to anyone who will write for them. Collecting cards will be gratefully supplied, and Christian workers are earnestly asked to help in raising the necessary funds.—Believe me, very truly yours, AUGUSTA EVERETT.

Contributions will be most thankfully received by myself, the Rectory, Dorchester, or at Messrs. Williams' Bank, Dorchester, or the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Kind friends are also asked to help by sending for the "Home" any gifts of Furniture, Clocks, Pictures, Books, Games, Screens, Texts for the Walls, &c., in fact anything and everything will be most acceptable.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

DEAR SIR,—I consider it a happy privilege to recommend the proposed scheme for a Soldiers' Home in Dorchester, in memory of the late distinguished soldier, Sir Herbert Stewart, K.C.B. I feel sure that you share the universal sorrow in the loss of this gallant and brave soldier, the youngest General in the British Army, and therefore I, in behalf of his sister, appeal through your paper to the liberality of all sympathisers in this excellent scheme.

The "Home" will greatly benefit our 600 soldiers, as a resort for quiet enjoyment, recreation, and Christian instruction. At present, out of barracks, the public-houses (of which we have a very liberal supply) are the chief places where our soldiers spend their evenings, and consequently, get into endless mischief, as I and other officers can fully testify.

To commence this work about £1000 will be required, of which £380 has already been received. I am sure you will agree that a "Memorial" that will thus benefit the British Soldier, will be a touching tribute to him whose short but brilliant career terminated so gloriously, and whose early death caused such universal sorrow, not only in the Army, but throughout the length and breadth of England.

H. MARSHALL, late 9th Lancers,
Commanding 39th Reg. District, Dorchester.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

Special and Urgent—East-end.

EVANGELISTIC WORK AMONGST THE POOR.

We make a most earnest appeal to every Reader of THE CHRISTIAN on behalf of our work amongst the Poor of the East-end. Our Funds are now entirely exhausted, and we have no funds to meet the rent, and shall be turned out of doors, unless God's stewards come forward and help us (Judges v. 23). There are forty-one different branches of work carried on in the Hall, including Meetings for Railway and Dock Men, Bible Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Destitute "Children's Friend" Mission, &c., &c., &c. If every Reader will send One Shilling and upwards, we shall be able to continue our work amongst the very poor.

SAMUEL MORLEY, Esq., M.P.; Sir ARTHUR COTTON, K.C.S.I.; Miss MACPHERSON; and others would bear testimony to our work.

Contributions would be most thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; and by the Superintendent, Mr. GEO. FULLER, 10, Ida-street, Corner of Follett-street, Poplar, E. (Please note Change of Address.)

Tracts, Sisters' Bags, Clothing for Poor, &c., thankfully received.

LITTLE INNOCENT GIRLS IN ACTUAL DANGER,

Even if NOT Absolutely Destitute, may be brought at any hour by Day or Night, to

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes,"

Where immediate shelter will be afforded.

Application should be made between the hours of 9 a.m. and 7 p.m., to the SECRETARY, at No. 18, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY; at all other times to the MATRON, at No. 10, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

Letters and telegrams addressed to VIGILANCE SECRETARY, care of DR. BARNARDO, 18, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E., will at all hours receive prompt attention.

For Poor Children who have already been injured, a special COUNTRY BRANCH HOME is being formed, and prompt aid of every sort, including Legal Advice, will be afforded.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THE 25th ANNUAL REPORT

Shows that over ONE THOUSAND Meetings have been held in London and the Provinces, attended by over 61,000 Poor Women and Girls.

THOUSANDS HAVE BEEN RESCUED.

DONATIONS are now much needed to carry on this Mission.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing toward the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer) are invited to communicate with Mr. J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

C. WILSON McCREE,
Financial Secretary.

"Moon's" Society for Embossing the Scriptures and other Books for the Blind.

Dr. MOON'S simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 250 languages and dialects. More than 150,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

WORKS BY REV. E. P. HAMMOND, M.A.

(COPYRIGHT.)

"We notice that Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, London, are publishing Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND'S Books for Children. They are of proved excellence; and most of them have gone through several editions in this country. At last advices Mr. HAMMOND was continuing his Meetings with good results."—New York Evangelist.

JESUS, THE LAMB OF GOD:

SHOWING HOW HE DIED ON CROSS FOR CHILDREN; AND HOW LITTLE ONES HAVE LEARNED TO LOVE AND TRUST HIM. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

TELLING HOW JESUS GATHERS THE LAMBS TO HIS FOLD. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal addresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most effective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. The book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

ANECDOTES AND APPEALS: WITH VERY NUMEROUS INSTANCES OF THE EARLY REGENERATION OF THE YOUNG. Sixth Thousand.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Limp cloth, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Many testimonials have been received, speaking of the blessing this book has been to its readers in this and other countries where it has been, or is now being, translated.

"It has been circulated among missionaries in various lands. Many have been taught by it to lead children to the Saviour. Repeatedly we have had occasion to praise God for his seal of acceptance to this book.

"Many a precious work of grace among the children, often extending also to the adults, has been directly traceable to the influence of the truths and facts gathered in these pages."—Preface to English Edition.

THE BETTER LIFE: AND HOW TO FIND IT.

A BOOK INTENDED FOR YOUNG PEOPLE BETWEEN THE AGES OF TWELVE AND TWENTY YEARS; WITH THE HOPE OF LEADING THEM TO THE BETTER LIFE. With Thirteen Illustrations.

"This is a very neat volume, in which the truths of the Gospel are set forth in a simple and attractive form; brief narratives of illustrative cases being introduced which make the work very interesting. The author is the well-known Evangelist."

North British Daily Mail.

THE REAPER AND THE HARVEST.

SCENES AND INCIDENTS, IN CONNECTION WITH THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT, IN THE LIFE AND LABOURS OF REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A. Edited by Rev. P. C. HEADLEY. 550 Pages. With Life-like Portrait of Mr. Hammond. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

Ministers, Evangelists, and Christian Workers, who are looking for illustrations and facts, will discover here a treasury of information. They will at the same time feel their own hearts stimulated to labour more earnestly for the salvation of souls.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"This work consists of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, which are for the most part original. . . . This is really a new Hymn and Tune Book, and one which is sure to become very popular. It is a Gem. The Hymns are suitable for Special Meetings, Family Worship, and Children's Services."—Oldham Chronicle.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath-schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a YOUNG LADY. communicated by Mr. J. E. BUTLER, 2, Albert-villas. St. LEONARD'S.

In a letter dated May 6, this gentleman, a well-known resident of St. Leonard's, writes:—"I have recommended your medicine in many quarters, with good results; one especially,—

"A young lady, who lost a brother in Consumption, and seemed likely to follow him herself. The doctor said nothing but a voyage to Australia could save her. I recommended your medicine, and am very pleased to tell you it was most successful, and her proposed voyage was no longer necessary. She is now quite well and strong.

"You are quite welcome to make any use you please of my letter."

LETTER from Mr. C. DINNES, MIRFIELD,

Whose wife was under my treatment for three months. The case was Chronic Bronchitis, with severe cough, profuse expectoration, hoarseness, dyspnœa, and great weakness.

I had lost sight of this case until recently I received a note applying for a copy of my "question paper," saying, "I have told how you had cured my wife. It is now three years since she was under you, and I am glad to say she continues well yet."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

AFTER YEARS OF AGONY.

REV. F. A. VINCENT, B.D., Rector of Elsted, Trayford, &c., writes:—"Dec. 23, 1884,—I shall be glad to reply at my own expense, to all inquiries as to the effect of the invaluable remedy 'Tikheel.' After taking two bottles I derived benefit I never could have anticipated, after suffering many years of agony. I had in vain tried all specifics known, as well as consulting physicians. I hope this testimonial, if it will not requite you will at least exhibit my gratitude."

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. GRIFFITH, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. GREEN, Esq., L. and C. Bank, 3, Victoria-street, S.W, Next session commences Sept. 17.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, the Rt. Hon. the Lord Mayor, M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P. Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for help in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

GEE STREET Mission and Ragged Schools, Goswell-road, respectfully solicit funds for a Day in the Country to poor, deserving old people.—Hon. Secretary, HENRY RUDGLEY, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside; or ROBERT BAXTER, Esq., Treasurer, 6, Victoria-street, Westminster; or Messrs. BARCLAY, Bankers, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

AN EVANGELICAL VICAR, residing in a beautiful and healthy situation, wishes to receive a little boy to educate with his own. Terms 60 guineas.—J. H., Alithwaite Vicarage, near Grange-over-Sands

BETHANY HOUSE SCHOOL, Goudhurst, Kent, near Tunbridge Wells.—Principal, Rev. J. J. KENDON.—Careful Religious Training, combined with a thoroughly sound Commercial Education. In the last three years 150 of the Pupils were passed in the Public Examinations at the College of Preceptors' and the Local Examination of the University of Cambridge. Terms moderate and inclusive.

PARIS.—Protestant Boarding School for Young Ladies (founded 1866), offering thorough instruction in all branches, music, painting, &c. With a private bed-room, £5 per month. References on application.

Mme. FLAMANT, 43, rue Trézel, Paris.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to DR. THORN, Paddington, London.

BELLE VUE, Ambleside.—Good School for Girls.—Having increased accommodation, Mrs. FLEMING can now receive six additional Pupils. House well and healthily situated, with large rooms, garden, tennis ground. Careful, Christian training, and thorough teaching. Distinguished success in Cambridge Examinations which are optional. Resident foreign and English governesses. Visiting masters. 50 to 60 gui MALVERN HOUSE SCHOOL.—The rapid growth of this School has necessitated enlargement of premises. Two good houses have been made into one large detached house. There is now splendid accommodation for Boarders. Kind and careful training. Good home. Boys prepared for public schools. A kindergarten for the younger children. Orphans, and children of parents living abroad, received. Sisters may accompany brothers. Highest references to parents of pupils. Next term begins September 23, 1885.—Principal, Miss DAVIES, Malvern House, Lewisham-park, Kent.

SELECT SCHOOL.—A Lady of experience receives twelve pupils. Religious teaching the first object. Refined habits and careful training. Advanced music. Foreign governess. House healthful, surrounded by charming scenery. References kindly permitted to Rev. C. Guest, Burton-on-Trent, and others.

The PRINCIPAL, The Ferns, Duffield, Derby.

STAMFORD GROVE, Upper Clapton.—Mrs. MODY, L.L.A. (St. Andrews) receives morning pupils. Preparation for University Examinations. References to Rev. H. C. Squires, C.M.S., Mrs. Grattan Guinness, and others. Prospectus on application.

THE BIBLE INTERPRETER;

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY.

By the Author of "THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER."

This book is specially intended for the use of those who, whilst desiring information on Biblical subjects cannot afford the purchase of large and expensive Bible dictionaries. The present small volume contains explanations of MORE THAN EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture words and subjects, and it is believed that many a painstaking Sabbath School teacher and many a humble Bible student will find "help by the way" from consulting his little manual.

In addition to the ordinary features of a BIBLE DICTIONARY, there will be found in an Appendix details o FULFILLED PROPHECIES, concerning the following peoples, places, and events:—

The Jewish Nation.
The Destruction of Jerusalem.
The Destruction of Samaria.
The Ammonites.
The Arabs.
Babylon.
Edom.
Egypt.
Moab.
Nineveh
Philistia.
Tyre.
The Seven Churches of Asia.
Popery.

The volume also contains a Table, or List, of 361 HISTORICAL EVENTS AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES, b which the Bible reader is enabled to turn at once to the portion of Scripture where any particular event is referre to, or any Biblical character is named or described.

The Book also contains:—

A List of the Prayers Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Miracles Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Parables in the Bible;
A Table of the Reigns of the Kings of Judah and Israel in parallel columns;
A Table of Scripture Proper Names, with their c rec Pronunciation;
A Table of the Order and Dates of the Books of the Bible.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS, AND NUMEROUS SMALLER ENGRAVINGS.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

LARGE AMOUNT OF VALUABLE BIBLICAL INFORMATION.

"It is amazing to find so much information within so small a compass. The book is indeed—in every sense—a comprehensive POCKET COMPANION TO THE BIBLE. By means of the ANALYSIS the chapter and verse of any event in Holy Writ may be found without the least trouble. An invaluable help to every Bible student."
Christian Treasury, August, 1885.

"A very handy pocket volume, with a large amount of tabulated Biblical information. We do not remember having seen so portable and cheap a book of reference."
Christian Chronicle, June 19, 1885.

"Remarkable alike for its comprehensive scope, and for the completeness with which it packs into small compass the salient information on a multiplicity of points. . . . We ought to add that, as a time-saver to THE BIBLE STUDENT, it will be simply invaluable."
Christian Leader, June 18, 1885.

"We do not know a more useful HANDBOOK FO BIBLE READERS AND BIBLE STUDENTS. It seems t embody nearly everything that is necessary in such book; and is withal so conveniently arranged, an compressed into such small compass, that little mor could be expected of such a work. We heartily com mend it."
Christian Commonwealth, June 25, 1885.

"An exceedingly useful and handy little volum containing a large amount of valuable Biblical info mation. There are twelve beautifully coloured ma and frontispiece. There are also compilations o 'Memorable Events,' 'Table of the Patriarchs,' 'Origi of Nations,' 'Ancient Capitals and Renowned Cities 'Rivers and Lakes of the Bible,' 'Sieges of Jerusalem 'Divine Judgments,' 'Prayers of Scripture,' &c., & A more HELPFUL BOOK FOR SABBATH-SCHOOL TEACHE and others we can scarcely think of."

MODERN PAGANISM.

> "Hamlet's ideal of a man was that of one to be taken 'for all in all.' . . . In a striking passage in one of his 'Paradoxes,' Cicero asks: 'Can a man be accounted temperate who checks one inordinate passion and gives a loose to another? Virtue is uniform, conformable to reason, and of unvarying consistency: nothing can be added to it that can make it more than virtue; nothing can be taken from it and the name of virtue be left.'"—St. James's Gazette, Sept. 4.

IN moral as in physical upheavals, opposing elements are flung together, and things generally are turned upside down. We have lately seen Tory papers abusing their own Home Secretary, and comparing his action unfavourably with that of his Liberal predecessor. Radical, Tory, and Liberal papers have been leashed together in denunciation of a fellow-journalist. Notorious libertines have posed as moralists, and have execrated, as abettors of vice and crime, Christian men and women whose private life and public character have run on parallel lines, and against whose consistency no charge has been ever brought. Christian ministers and Social Democrats have been seen on the same platform in conference upon our social wrongs, while other Christian ministers and other Socialists have united in the cry against them.

Nor does this end the confusion of parties and of utterances at the present crisis. Proceedings have been taken against a leading member of the late Government which have given rise to the expression of opinions and of doctrines just as incompatible as those we have before enumerated. The issue has been distinctly raised whether private character is to be taken into account in our estimation of public men; whether constituencies have any responsibility, or even any right, to inquire into the character of those who desire or whom they elect to be their representatives.

We should forbear to name Sir Charles Dilke in this connection, but that the case has been made the text of a discussion which is of the utmost importance to us and to our children. Sir Charles has asserted his entire innocence, and declared his determination to prove it beyond question. The Spectator very rightly comments thus :—

> "No good Liberal or Conservative can feel anything but pain that such charges should even be brought against any prominent statesman, and much deeper pain if they were to be made good. We trust that the high political credit of Sir Charles Dilke may not be undermined by the substantiation of accusations which, if sustained, are infinitely more discreditable than the worst of all political creeds."

Other papers take a less decided view, and with more or less clearness say that if a man fulfils his public obligations he must not be subjected to any inquiry as to his personal character. We should have thought it went without saying that a man's actions are the necessary outcome of what he is.

The Times says :—

> "Even if Sir Charles had been unable entirely to gainsay that accusation, the public and the private life of politicians ought still to be kept apart, up to certain well-defined limits."

But The World, one of the oldest and most largely circulated of the "Society" papers, has distinguished itself by very extreme utterances on this subject, to which we feel obliged to direct attention, because its influence must be considerable in forming opinion in the circle in which it is read. It recalls the old maxim "Pecca fortiter," "Sin boldly," and says that Lords Palmerston, Melbourne, Clanricarde, and Normanby were "the representatives of an age which may have reprobated, but did not go into paroxysms of indignation over, the ethical eccentricities [!] of the Marquis of Steyne, otherwise Lord Hertford." "The art of sinning jauntily was an essential portion of the wisdom of our ancestors. They went astray, and they were not ashamed."

> "The view which these statesmen took of life was that human nature was fallible at the best, and that though ideals were very good for the visionaries of the cloister, they were not meant for men of the world. . . . It must not be thought that Palmerston or Melbourne, the Great Duke himself, or any other of the cheery pagans of the past generation, are held up here as models of imitation. But they certainly supply to gentlemen who get into difficulties to-day an example by which they might, without any aggravation of the original offence, attempt advantageously to extricate themselves from embarrassment. The aristocratic period of English society may have been abominably corrupt. The present democratic and plutocratic period is not, however, immaculate. It is either too cautious, or not cautious enough; too little alive to consequences, or else too terror-stricken by them. It has still to realise the fact that it cannot combine the 'roses and raptures of vice' with the unassailable calm of respectability. . . . The new democratic libertine may be the superior in political enlightenment and encyclopædic knowledge to the Whig fossils of an extinct epoch. But there is one thing which he is not and they were; there is another thing which they understood and he does not. The violators of the Decalogue in the Palmerstonian era had none of the smug graces of Radicalism about them, but when they went wrong they conducted themselves as men, and not as raw boys."

The World is one of the papers which not only deprecates but rages at the so-called "revelations" on account of which it admits that "a number of gentlemen are trembling and quaking in their shoes" lest they should be implicated in them. We cannot conceive of anything more demoralising than these teachings of this "Society paper"—a thousand times more demoralising than the revelation of the horrors which has recently been made—more actually and practically mischievous than the scurrilities and blasphemies which were some time ago very properly punished by imprisonment.

In a later issue it returns to the subject, and says :—

> "Had the aspersion upon Sir Charles Dilke's character involved any public offence—had he, in other words, been charged with some specific act of political malfaisance, with breach of Parliamentary faith or of official honour—he might have been fairly called on for an explanation. But the indictment levelled against him is of a purely private nature. Moreover, it is one that, even on the assumption that it could be proved, would not, if the plain truth is to be spoken, show him to have fallen grievously below the moral standard of his time. . . . And who is the man among his Parliamentary compeers who will presume to throw the first stone at him?"

We confess that this is a bold and unblushing apology for vice for which we were not prepared. The aspersion referred to was a flagrant breach of the seventh commandment. Is it really true that this is "not grievously below the moral standard of the time"? Have the great men of this nation, like those of Jerusalem, "altogether broken the yoke and burst the bonds"? Are they "as fed horses in the morning, everyone neighing after his neighbour's wife"? (Jer. v.) Is this true, or is The World foully slandering the upper ten thousand, whom it affects to represent?

The writer of this depraved article express his opinion that Sir Charles Dilke,

> "As a man of fashion and society, ought to be superio to emotional weakness. From the ideals of private conduct which, as one might imagine, he proposes to himself, effusiveness or gush should be absent; while the pursuit of pleasure should be tempered by a discretion and astuteness which throw the glamour of an intellectual ingenuity over the grossness of vice."

Could Satan himself suggest anything more diabolical than these Mephistophelian counsels? Could anything be more atrocious than the conception that one, of whom "there is no constituency in the United Kingdom which would not be proud," and who is described as "so considerable a man, so great, and deservedly so great, a power in the realm," should at the same time be, not only a man pursuing vicious pleasure, but tempering that pursuit "with a discretion [what a prostitution of the word!] and astuteness which throw the glamour of an intellectual ingenuity over the grossness of vice"!! The horror of this immoral counsel takes one's breath away. It has to be read again and again, to convince one that it is possible it should mean what it says. Only one feature is needed to complete the picture of "a man of fashion and society," as conceived and desiderated by The World—that he should be an accomplished and consummate hypocrite; then he would have dismissed the scandal "with a contempt that would have communicated to the rest of the world a sense of righteous disgust"!—not righteous disgust at the grossness of vice, but at being found out.

To the law and to the testimony. We need to strengthen our souls with the mighty word of truth; and to warn men of the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his deeds: indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good.

Character is everything. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." What a man is, he is in public and in private. And good public men are men whose private life is good.

> "Nor florid prose, nor honeyed lies of rhyme, > Can hallow evil deeds or consecrate a crime."
>
> "An evil soul producing holy writ,
> Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
> A goodly apple rotten at the core."

We do not want men of that sort as our representatives in Parliament or anywhere else.

THE CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.

"Suffer hardship with me as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life; that he may please Him who enrolled as a soldier."
—2 Tim. ii. 3, 4 (R.V.)

THERE are three features of a good soldier —(1) Enrolled. (2) Disentangled. (3) On service.

Enrolled.—The enrolment of a soldier in the army of Israel depended, in olden times, on his payment of the ransom or atonement money—namely the half shekel of silver (Exodus xxx. 12—15). The atonement money had to be of the standard of the sanctuary, and duly presented on behalf of the man in the presence of God. Before any name can now be inserted on the muster-roll of the armies of heaven, the name of Jesus must be presented in faith to God as the Lord's ransom. His name alone is "the standard of the sanctuary," and none that fail to recognise Him can be recognised by Him. The payment of the atonement money was a levelling process, placing rich and poor on the same basis. "There is no difference, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 22, 23).

Disentangled.—In 1 Samuel xxii. 2, we have a description of the kind of men who came around David when he was a fugitive from King Saul. They were all "entangled," and are spoken of as being in distress, or in debt, or discontented. From these things he first set them free, paying their debts, satisfying their discontent, and relieving their distress. Such gracious treatment won their hearts, and, under his training and discipline, they became men of renown, men of war, mighty men. Their very difficulties had driven them to one who knew what difficulty was, and they abode with him and fought for him. Such are those who now come to Jesus, the Son of David, delight in Him, abide in Him, and fight for Him. Not until their minds are set free from all anxiety as regards the past can they undertake to share the fortunes of the despised and rejected One; but, knowing how God has anointed Him and promised Him the kingdom, they seek to be always freed from the entanglements of the world and of sin, that they may please Him who has enrolled them to be His soldiers.

On Service.—In 1 Chron. xii. we find a record of these men when on service—how they acquitted themselves:—

Ver. 1, 2.—One company "could use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones and shooting arrows." These men were successful in aggressive warfare. How few Christians are left-handed as well as right-handed. It is in the home and business circle that we need precision and power to attack the enemy of our souls just as much as in the public work of the Sunday-school, the pulpit, the mission service, or the tract distribution. The left-handed soldier will be doing faithful work with the foes of selfishness, covetousness, quick temper, and the like—and such will be "helpers of the war."

Ver. 8.—Another company could "handle shield and buckler." Defensive warfare is as essential to success as offensive warfare. Able to protect themselves under the fiercest assaults, "their faces were like the faces of lions," full of calm and invincible courage; and "were as swift as the roes upon the mountains," ready for rapid movement. In these days the skilful handling of the Shield of Faith is as essential as that of the Sword of the Spirit. The enemy is throwing doubt on all the fundamental doctrines of the Bible, and, alas! how many of the poisoned shafts are hitting the servants of Christ, hence the lack of courage to stand up for the whole Bible, and to go forward wherever the Captain orders.

Ver. 15.—Another company "went over Jordan in the first month, when it had overflown all his banks." The current was strong and swollen, but these disentangled men had powers of endurance; though weighted down with their armour, they made light of their difficulties, and after crossing the river were fit for the attack on the enemy. The current of the world runs deep and broad, unbelief, ungodliness, carelessness swell the tide, and these things are the barrier to the full possession of all God has promised to the believing heart. We often hear the expression "the swelling of Jordan" used as emblematical of death. It is found in Jer. xii. 5, and apparently has no allusion figuratively to death. The force of the passage seems to be. If you get tired and weary of following the Lord in the ordinary quiet times of life, how will you act in an emergency, how be trusted with an undertaking that requires endurance, as well as courage and strength (Is. xl. 31).

Ver. 18.—Another company gave testimony, "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse." These men were whole hearted and surrendered. No other interests but David's occupied their hearts, the extension of his kingdom was as dear to them as to him, and, for the fulfilment of his purposes, they were absolutely at his disposal. How far can this be said of the people of God? As with David's men so with the followers of Christ. Peace will be on their lips and perfect peace will fill their hearts, no antagonism to the will of the King.

Ver. 38.—"All these men of war that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king." Unity of purpose, and unity of action characterised the disentangled men. All minor differences were sunk in the great purpose to make David king. The great purpose set before the soldiers of the Cross now is "The exaltation of Jesus." How slow they are to put all personal matters aside in order to unite for this grand object. Let but the various companies of the Church militant unite in their various equipments and acquirements, and raise the shout, "Let the King live for ever!" and there will be a trembling in the hosts of Philistine Agnosticism and Amalekite worldliness. The despised and rejected One must be proclaimed king, for God has promised Him the kingdom, and anointed Him for the throne.

The first great public work that David summoned the army to undertake was to bring up the ark from Kirjath-jearim (1 Chron. xiii.). He called a conference of all his officers and captains to propose this, and an eager assent was given. Once more, after a long lapse of years, during the reign of ungodly Saul, the ark, which denoted the presence of God, was in its place in the midst of the chosen people. How little is now known or seen of the presence of God amid His people to-day, how little is it desired, because so many are occupied with business that will not bear the light of His countenance. But the time is fast approaching when Jesus will summon His faithful ones, and muster the armies of heaven in their full panoply of glory, to manifest and bring back to earth the presence of God in all its fulness of blessing and joy. Let the people of God then "endure hardness," and please Him who hath enrolled them.

AN EVANGELIST TO EVANGELISTS.

EVANGELISTS and young workers in the Lord's vineyard (who are readers of The Christian) must have been much interested in reading "Roots and Fruits," by Brother Gordon Forlong (in number for Aug. 6). I cannot see how evangelists can do business for God unless they are rooted and grounded in the Word of God. This is not the time for playing at preaching. We must remember that men without Christ are dead—dead in trespasses and sins, and no nice skeleton of a sermon will arouse them. Many of our preachers and evangelists are ruined by these skeletons. They make them like the things they recite. They destroy their individuality. No, no, this will not do; we must turn away from idols to the living Word, to the living Holy Ghost, to the living Christ, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. His Word is spirit and life. Hundreds are dying of spiritual hunger; let us carry into their midst the Lamb newly slain. Hundreds are dying of thirst; let us smite the Rock of God's truth, let us lead them to the fountain opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness. Not to broken cisterns, not to dry wells, but to the living water, which, if they drink of it, shall be in them a well of water, springing up into everlasting life. Fellow evangelists, don't preach your old sermons over and over again, until they become like an idle tale, until they lose their grip upon yourself. I have heard evangelists recite sermons. They have run through them at Flying Scotchman speed—sixty miles an hour. They did make the dust fly! They kept going at full speed till they got to the end of their journey, and when an address had to be given to anxious ones at the prayer-meeting, it seemed as if they had blown off all their steam in the pulpit. My brother, keep back a little steam for the prayer-meeting.

If we wish to interest others we must interest ourselves. By making new sermons or addresses, we increase our spiritual life, and add to our knowledge. Let us go to the Word of God, let us hide it in our hearts; let us search the Scriptures, for in them there is life, and they testify of God.

In speaking to anxious souls, don't let us be in a hurry. Let us look after quality, not quantity; let us see they realise their lost condition, before we seek to lead them into peace; let us see that they are convicted before we seek their conversion.

And, above all, brethren, let us see that we are fully saved ourselves, and we will know better how to deal with lost souls; let us see that we have life, and we will be better able to deal with dead souls. Gehazi's dead staff is powerless upon the dead son of the Shunammite; Elisha, who has God in him, must come and stretch himself upon the child, and the blessed result is life! life! life! We must have God in us before we can raise dead souls.

J. L. Tyson.

HAMMERSMITH.—One of the Evangelistic Mission tents is pitched at the corner of Adie and Oxford roads. During the past two months Gospel meetings have been held on Sundays and week-nights, in which Dr. and Mrs. Popham, the Converted Gipsies, Messrs. Matthews and Osborn, and others have taken part. The interest of the people has been awakened, and souls have been saved. Will friends join the workers in prayer that increased blessing may be witnessed during the continuance of the meetings by Mr. Wm. Harper.

"SOMETHING ACCOMPLISHED."

SIR,—I have noticed in your columns many earnest appeals to the men and women of England, especially God's people, to be up and doing to stem the tide of iniquity, the knowledge of which has stirred with shame the heart of every manly man in this our beloved country. Amongst others, several ladies and gentlemen who work in the dark portion of Kensal Town and Westbourne Park were moved to see what could be done for the hundreds of young women who live in that neighbourhood. We were amazed at what we saw; we found many of our young sisters so living that the only wonder was there was not more sin.

In one case, two young women, one of whom was a widow with a little boy, were living in one very small room, in which they slept, did needlework, cooked and ate. These two sisters considered themselves rather better off than the majority of the large numbers just about there.

Another visit was made to a room where we found a nice-looking young woman, who told us a pitiful story. She had apparently no friends, she worked hard all day in this little room, there also she slept and ate. We asked her, "When night comes what do you do?" "Well, when I can, I am glad to get out, for you can imagine I see enough of my little place." "Where do you go?" we asked. "Oh, for a walk somewhere, sometimes one place and sometimes another." "Do you go to the ——?" mentioning a place near, to which we regret to say many go. "Well, sometimes," she said, with a blush; "you see, it's lively there." We asked, "If we opened a house with nice clean rooms and good homely food, with a large sitting-room, would you go there and live?" "Would I not!" she said, and her black eyes sparkled, as the thought of some comfort once more flashed across her mind.

This is but a type of many others we found, so we determined, with God's help, to see what could be done, especially as we were told that this neighbourhood, and we would quite believe it, was one of the great recruiting grounds for the mass of lives that were yearly being lost through this great sin in the city of London.

"PREVENTION IS BETTER THAN CURE."

So we have taken a large house and shop, No. 1, Britannia-terrace, Kensal-road, which we are going to turn into a Young Women's Institute and Home. The shop to be used for services, night schools, singing classes, &c., and at the back a reading-room, &c., open free, night and day; up stairs are a number of bedrooms, a bathroom, and a sitting-room. The bedrooms are already all bespoken by just the right kind of young women, and over eighty have given in their names as anxious to join the Y.W.C.A. in connection with the work.

We have got the rent for one year already, also the money for a woman who will be in charge. What we now want is furniture for the bedrooms, kitchen, sitting-room, dining-room, &c. There are many who could give a few chairs, others a dressing-table, or a little of the necessary bedding; others, again, a table, some china, or the many things that will at once be suggested to the minds of your readers as being necessary for furnishing such a house. We, on our part, will send a horse and cart to fetch the articles given, if not too far, any day during next week. or they could be sent direct to the Railway Mission Hall, Kensal-road, Westbourne Park, which is near the house we have taken.—Yours very truly, George Clarke.

SINGAPORE.—Every spring I send a box of work to Miss Cooke's school at Singapore, the sale of which Miss Cooke finds very helpful. I should be glad to receive any work for this purpose, and will gladly send a list of suitable articles to anyone interested. Address, Miss Borthwick, Aberanterutb, Loch Earn Head, Perthshire

"BE NOT WEARY."

THE following is a letter which has been received by Mr. George Hatton: "For your encouragement in the Lord's work, I feel it my duty to inform you that your labours, so far as I am concerned, have not been in vain. A few Sundays ago I was walking along Holborn on my way to the City Temple when, seeing you holding your meeting at the top of Brooke-street, I felt induced to cross the road and stand for a few seconds. While so doing, a little boy handed me a leaflet; crushing it in my hand I threw it on the pavement, thinking it was only a text. But something induced me to pick it up again, and I read the words, 'Good news from God to you. He will—

Forgive the past;
Enable you to do better;
Bless you every day;
Take you to heaven at last.'

I felt them to be God's truth, and I believed, and went on my way rejoicing. I have been a professing Christian and a supposed preacher of the Gospel for twenty years without experiencing much, if any, of its blessedness and power. Whether what I experienced that Sunday was conversion or not, I do not know, but this I know, that once I was blind, but now I see."

Another friend writes:—"Having received some tracts, I went forth asking the Lord to keep me from distributing them indiscriminately. Shortly afterwards I handed a leaflet to a young man, who stopped me, and said, 'You are the person who gave me one the other day. I have had no peace since, and am so troubled, and have longed to speak with you.' I trust that what passed between us may lead to his conversion."

FRANCE: GOOD NEWS, AND SAD.

WE have been absent on various short excursions among the villages, which has delayed our correspondence. We are seeing the answer to many prayers now in the attention which has been drawn to this part of the country. M. Houter, of the Mission Intérieure, takes now a deep interest in some of the most secluded villages where previously the Gospel was rarely preached. The deep hungry listening to him and to M. Sainton was most touching. Men who had been at work from four in the morning till eight at night found the hour from eight to nine too short for his meetings. Both sing the Gospel as well as preach it. Yesterday we were at Crest for the fête of the Protestant Orphanage, and were cheered not only by the kindness of the pasteurs but by their promise, and that of two evangelists, to come again among the villages of the Gerrane. God bless and multiply those who can announce in their own tongue the wonderful works of God. Of course we would have liked to accomplish more ourselves; but, if it please the Lord to use us to attract others to the fields where we have tried at least to sow, we can only thank Him for that and pray Him to bless abundantly the seed sown.

I have often wished to tell you how we honour you and other brave men who have dared to bring to light the hidden things of darkness. God knows what it has cost you and them. God help the poor children, when their own parents are sometimes the enemies most to be dreaded, I have known sad instances where children whom we had rescued were dragged back to misery and sin by their own mothers and fathers, against whom we were powerless. One woman, sent by a father to re-claim his daughter, actually sat down and cried while the child put on her hat, saying, "If you knew what I am taking her to, you would never let her go."

The Lord forgive all past cowardice, and abundantly bless those who have dared to do what we dare not. Excuse me writing this—if many miss the old, highly respectable, unobjectionable Christian, many warm prayers go up for the present one and its Editor.—Yours very sincerely, S. R. Geldard.

A DANGEROUS PRACTICE.—At the Inventions Exhibition, last week, a lady's dress was ignited by a match thrown down by a smoker. She was conveyed to St. George's Hospital severely burnt, and is no texpected to recover.

CONTINUOUS INTERCESSION.

"Abraham stood yet before the Lord."—Gen. xviii. 32.

AFTER holy separation,
At the call of God alone:
After intimate communion
Such as mortal ne'er had known:
After personal benediction,
After promises outpoured,
See "the Father of the faithful"
Standing "yet before the Lord!"

"Yet" before the Lord Jehovah,
For a "righteous few" to plead;
For a doomed and guilty city
Daring still to intercede.
"Yet before the Lord" he standeth,
Faith enlarging its behest;
"Yet before the Lord" he winneth
Swift "Amen" to each request.

Such the attitude victorious
Every child of God may claim;
"Whatsoever" all the limit,
When we ask in Jesu's name!
In the power of glad communion,
Separated unto Him,
Filling up with intercession
All life's narrow interim.

Is it thus that we are bringing
All we love for Him to bless?
And for sinners interceding
With an eager tenderness?
After seasons of refreshing,
Not content with parting word,
But in humble expectation
Standing "yet before the Lord"?

Is it thus that we are pleading
Needs of others, and our own,
In continuous supplication
Waiting still before the Throne?
So to us the way is open,
Jesus bids us welcome there;
Is it thus that we are living
In the atmosphere of prayer?

O how varied are the blessings
Which believing prayer hath wrought!
O how manifold the treasures
Which the Church has left unsought!
Who can estimate the riches
Which in Jesus Christ are stored
For the suppliants who tarry—
Standing "yet before the Lord."

Saviour, we with shame and sorrow,
Would our faithlessness deplore,
While for thy sweet intercession
We would praise Thee more and more.
Yea, we yield Thee thanks unfeigned,
That, in Zion's holy hill,
"Intercession for transgressors," Thou, unwearied, makest still.

As on earth thy lonely vigil
Keeping in the midnight air,
As, for thy beloved disciples,
Breathing thine high-priestly prayer;
As for Peter, in his danger,
That his faith might stand the test:
As for those who pierced and mocked Thee,
Making, even then, request.

So "within the veil" Thou livest,
Evermore to intercede,
Bearing on thy heart the burden
Of thy people's every need.
"Crowned with glory" now, and "honour,"
Thou dost still thy manhood wear,
And in our Divine "Forerunner"
We are represented there.

Blessed, kingly Intercessor!
Thou for ever shalt prevail;
Thousand thousands through the ages
Trusted Thee, nor found Thee fail.
And for us, for us Thou pleadest;
Ever be thy Name adored!
In thy great unchanging Priesthood
Standing "yet before the Lord."

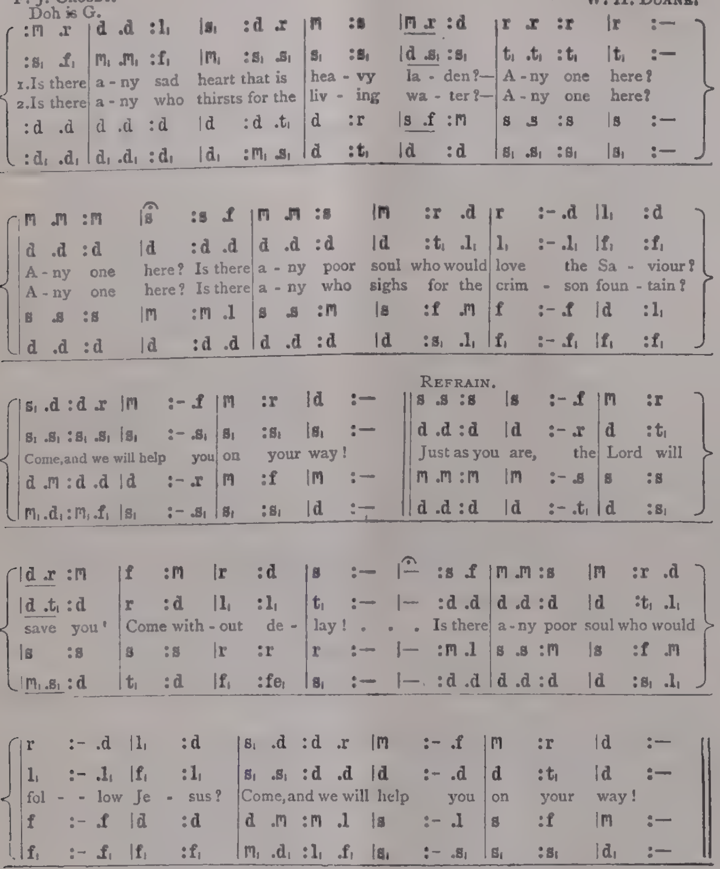
Any One Here?

"Whosoever will, let him take!"—Rev. xxii. 17.

F. J. Crosby. W. H. Doane.



Doh is G.
1. Is there any sad heart that is heavy laden?—Any one here?
2. Is there any who thirsts for the living water?—Any one here?
Any one here? Is there any poor soul who would love the Saviour?
Any one here? Is there any who sighs for the crimson fountain?
Refrain.
Come, and we will help you on your way! Just as you are, the Lord will save you! Come without delay! . . . Is there any poor soul who would follow Jesus? Come, and we will help you on your way!

3. Is there any would ask for a word of comfort?—
Any one here? Any one here?
Is there any who feels that our prayers would cheer you?
Come, and we will help you on your way!

4. Is there any who longs to be owned by Jesus?—
Any one here? Any one here?
Is there any will say, "I believe this moment"?
Come, and we will help you on your way!

TO YOUNG MEN.

PERHAPS there has never been since the days of the Apostles such a stir to duty in reference to Foreign Missions as there is now, and perhaps there never was so great a need of sound judgment being exercised as now as to individual work in them. To-day there are many young men who are not glorifying God by diligence in their present position, but yet who think they have a call to some foreign field of Mission work. God will not, however, transfer them to another field of labour until they are faithful, diligent stewards in their present position, to the utmost of their ability. God wants able, diligent men in this direct service. Take care that you are not of those who have gone, but God did not send them. A man cannot do everything and succeed. He cannot attain to signal success in more than one pursuit. There are ten thousand ways by which to glorify our Redeemer, yet to attempt all would be to fail in all.

To decide upon any particular course regard must be paid to two things:—(1) You must consider the nature of the talents which God has committed to your trust. God has given you some powers, jewels which may be devoted to his praise. In order that there might be specialty of purpose in glorifying God, "ascertain the number and order of your gifts, and cultivate those more especially which are superior to the rest."

(2) In marking out a definite career, regard should likewise be paid to the leadings of Providence. Be fully assured, that if you seek his help, the Holy Spirit will not only lead you into all truth, but also into and in the path of duty. If you are to glorify God in any particular sphere, the way thither will be opened up. Do not run before Providence, nor lag behind when Providence directs. The possession of powers, physical and mental, fitting you for a given work; the concurrent counsels of your Christian friends; the blessing of God upon your occasional endeavours; your own deep convictions after serious meditation and prayer, must all be regarded. Enthusiastic desire for direct service for God is often created by novelty. Your safest way is to ask your heavenly Father if you are "now" in his desired place for you; and if you are not, that He will lead you into the right one. If, however, no other way opens, take your present path, if it be a lawful one, as God's path for you; and, remembering the words of Jesus, "No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God," imitate him who said, "This one thing I do."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Thirty-eight barmaids have joined the Temperance branch of the Young Women's Christian Association, London.

Mr. Herbert Herkomer, Mr. Ruskin's successor as Slade Professor, Art, Oxford University, is an earnest total abstainer.

Dr. Joseph Burroughs, of Manchester, N.Y., claims to have discovered that nitro-glycerine is a safe and effective substitute for alcohol.

Mr. Forster, M.P., within wide limits, would give local communities control of the liquor traffic, but is not as yet in favour of a direct popular veto.

At Devonport Royal Dockyard, a Band of Hope is being formed. Rear-Admiral Grant, C.B., Admiral Superintendent, has taken the lead in the movement.

Mr. G. W. E. Russell, M.P., formerly against, has now declared in favour of, local option, and holds it should be the foremost issue at the election.

The British Women's Temperance Association reports an increase of 35 new branches, and a general increase of members in the 229 societies affiliated.

On Sunday, August 30, Dr. Talmage addressed about 15,000 persons in the open air, Carlisle Circus. His deliverances on Temperance were outspoken and uncompromising.

Lord Bramwell's pamphlet on "Drink" has reached its seventieth thousand. How many of its readers will ever see the replies by Canon Farrar, Dr. Lees, and Dr. Burns?

In "Our Navvies," by Mrs. Garnett, are touching instances of drink degradation, one, a Cambridge man, another, an Oxford double-first, both working as common navvies.

It is thought the cholera may visit England in the autumn. There is universal evidence that Total Abstinence is one of the best safeguards, and that the intemperate are ready victims.

Mr. Reginald Wilberforce, eldest brother of Bishop and Canon Wilberforce, is a candidate for the representation of South Hants, and is in favour of the direct veto on the drink traffic.

White men have not a monopoly of wisdom. In a church of the Zulus a regulation is that no member "shall drink the white man's grog nor native beer, nor even touch them with his lips."

General Middleton, who commanded the Canadian expedition against Riel, attributes the cheerfulness of his men and "the total absence of crime" to the total absence of stimulating liquors.

The number of drink licenses in the United Kingdom on March 31, 1883, was 168,538, and on the same date this year 164,958, a decrease in two years of 3580. The reduction is mostly in beerhouses.

Dr. Birdwood, Metropolitan Asylum Boards' Hospital Ships, reports that at first he was in favour of a free use of alcohol in small-pox cases. He has found he was wrong, and the amount he now prescribes is almost nil.

Canon Wilberforce, in a letter to his parishioners, says that in the reflections forced upon him during his late dangerous illness, "of no one thing was he more certain than of the soundness of the Total Abstinence crusade."

A military correspondent of The Daily News writes:—"The law in the Soudan, under the Dervishes, now is, that any man who touches spirituous liquors is to receive fifty strokes of the kourbash every morning for a month."

Another cry from Africa against the drink! "Oh! cannot England save the poor people from those unprincipled men who are doing their utmost to destroy the good which the Gospel has done to the Basutos?" Adele Mabile.

Wanbuno, an American Indian chief, in his seventieth year, lately delivered an address on Christian civilisation, in Surrey Chapel. He strongly, though in broken English, condemned the use of alcoholic liquors, the evils of which had sorely affected his own people.

The legislature of Missouri has just passed a law forbidding the sale of all alcoholic beverages to minors, and their employment or sojourn in places where such are sold, without a written authorisation from their parents or guardians.—Le Christianisme.

A Temperance veteran, John Sands, for forty-seven years a Temperance worker, was interred at Peckham, August 23, aged 92. On Joseph Livesey's birthday, last year, he walked four miles to speak at a Good Templar's meeting. If his children tread in his steps Temperance work should not soon die, for he leaves 105 descendants.

FELLOWSHIP IN CHRIST;

OR, THE UNITING POWER OF THE WORK OF THE LORD JESUS.

An address at Perth Conference, Sept. 9.

BY DR. CLEMENT CLEMANCE.

THERE is a verse in the Epistle to the Ephesians which has for us an indescribable charm. It is the fifteenth verse of the second chapter: "To make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." A little before this the Apostle had written: "Ye who once were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ." Once far off from God, and from one another, they are now made nigh to God and to one another. How nigh, faith and experience alone can tell. And here we have both the primary and the secondary purport of our Lord's work: the one effected with a view to the other: the one having an immediate issue, the other having an issue which is working out through the ages, and changing the face of the world. Dear brethren, do not suppose us to ignore the first because we dwell for a little only on the second. On the contrary, we assume the first to be the one and only foundation on which the second can stand.

The sublime conception indicated in the words "one new man" requires some time to work it out and to realise it in thought. Beyond all question, the aim which these words disclose shoots far, far ahead of the age in which they were written. To show how far they are ahead of that age would require a whole treatise. Two or three touches are all to which we can now pretend. At that time there was a standing animosity between Jew and Greek. The ordinances observed by the Jew were hateful to the Greek. The lack of them by the Gentile was the object of scornful reproach by the Jew. In Ephesus itself the great Diana of the Ephesians was the object of veneration. Superstitious rites marked the worship, and the foulness of impurity mingled with the services. The Pagan religions had no morally elevating power over the heart and life. Men were "past feeling," and had given themselves over to lasciviousness to work at uncleanness as a gainful trade. And in this low realm the notion of any common sympathy between nation and nation had no existence; the brotherhood of man by virtue of a relationship to one common God and Father, had not yet dawned upon the world. Slavery was rife. Men and women were as goods and chattels. And in the whole Pagan world, there was none that understood the dignity of man as man, none that stood up for the rights of the slave; none that ever thought of welding the diverse ranks, tongues, and tribes of men into a solidarity expressed by the words, "one new man." At that time the world was emphatically as Uhlhorn calls it, "a world without love." Whence then could come the force, who could devise a way, whereby mankind could be banded together in a bond of brotherhood? To such a task none was equal, till One came, over the race, yet in it. For there were two conditions requiring to be met ere such a result could be secured.

The two conditions are:—

The removal of every cause of enmity and disunion which kept man from man; and the creation of a new cementing force which should unite man to man.

As the conception of making "the twain" one new man belongs to our Lord Jesus Christ alone, we are drawn to enquire how He has laid a basis for its realisation in his work for man; and how He is bringing about the reality by a work in man and on him.

(1) First of all, in his great mediatorial work, which He undertook for the honour of God and the redemption of men, He recognised the truth that what kept men apart from each other was at its root the same as that which kept men apart from God. And this was—sin. Consequently He deals fully and completely with this. It became not the Holy God to commune with guilty man, save on a basis of sin's condemnation. Man dares not, or if he dare, he desires not, to commune with a Holy God, till he hears a Redeemer's voice saying, "Son, thy sins are forgiven thee." Hence, both God-ward and man-ward, sin has to be grappled with, atoned, and put away. This atoning process was threefold. "There are three that bear witness—the Spirit, the water, and the blood." In Christ's baptism sin was acknowledged, and the sinner's guilt declaratively taken on Himself. In the blood sin was atoned, and by the Spirit sin is destroyed. "Behold the Lamb of God that beareth away the sin of the world!" Thus man's greatest curse was dealt with—dealt with adequately, as it could be only by One who was alike the Son of God and the Son of man.

(2) By his own offering of Himself He so condemned sin, and demonstrated the Divine righteousness once for all, that no more sacrifices and offerings for that purpose would evermore be required of anyone on the face of the earth. His one offering is enough. Enough for ever! But, see! by that very fact the obnoxious wall of separation between Jew and Gentile is levelled at a stroke. "The law of commandments contained in ordinances" ceases forthwith. Now, in all religious worship the wide world over there is not one single feature remaining to mark one nation from another. All may meet on the ground of the one offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. Not one distinctive mark of nationality is needed now! Not needed? It is a sinful intrusion. In Christ all nations are equal; and not a single mark of pre-eminence may now legitimately remain. There is neither Greek nor Jew, barbarian, Scythian, bond, free; but Christ—all, and in all!

(3) And not only so. But the Christ having died to put away a barrier between men, now lives to be the central magnet to draw them together; to make, "in Himself," of the twain one new man. He is the rallying point, the ensign, the standard for the people. "To Him shall the gathering of the people be." We have (at least in England) what are called two schools of theologians. One fastening their attention rather on what Christ did; another, on what He is. With one, the centre point of Christian thought is a dying Saviour; with the other it is a living One. One starts from the Incarnation, the other from the Atonement. Why cannot we luxuriate equally in both? Were He not what He is, He could not have done what He did. Had He not done what He did, He could not be to us what He is. But now, the faith and hope and love of believers in every realm gather round Him as the centre of light and power, from whom there thrills into each a common life; so that He who gave Himself the One for us all, now lives to unite us all in One!

(4) Nor is there aught, even in his church-laws, to create any unequal distinctions between believers. There are no distinctions of order under the sway of Christ. There is no priestly order now. All Christian people are "Kings and Priests unto God." Nor know we at which to wonder most, whether at the superb dignity He assigns to his own, or at the fact, that in sharing it they are all on a footing of equal privilege. What means, brethren, our kingly, our priestly fellowship? Every Christian a King unto God! Every Christian a Priest unto God! Have we all awaked to the meaning of the names we bear? Kings? How? A king is never for himself, but for others. Kings unto God? Yea! to sway the world for God; by the power of truth to sway its intellect; by the demand for righteousness to touch its conscience; by the philanthropies of love to win its heart. Priests unto God? Yea. We, who know the living God, are to stand between Him and the world which knows Him not: with one hand lifted up to heaven, pleading for man with God; with another hand stretched out towards earth, pleading for God with man! Here, in this "royal priesthood" we are as "one new man;" in the kingdom of Christ, save his own unique priesthood and royalty, there is only the royal priesthood, of sanctified hearts, fruitful lives, and holy deeds!

(5) Nor, under Christ, is there any exclusiveness whatever in Church rights and privileges. There is nothing warranted by Him which can create the feeling of a prestige belonging to one Church that another does not share. Whatever seems to do this is something which will be burnt up in the fire of that judgment which "must begin at the house of God." All such expressions as "the Church and the sects" are utterly unscriptural. The Master's word is "where two or three, &c." Nor dare we clog that Divine simplicity by one single separating word. Our church buildings are of great service, and no wise man will underrate their worth. But, supposing a man far off from any of them. He has no place of worship nigh. But he has a home, he has his Bible. He is a praying man. He gathers his family around him, and, fast locked in each other's love, they bend the knee in praying for one another and for "all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity"—there, there is "a Church in the house;" and the humblest worship-room is as truly a house of prayer as any cathedral in the world! This is a real Church-life. Spirit, not form. Here, here at the throne of grace, all believers may unite as "one new man"—

> "Prayer doth a vast triangle form,
> At whose wide base they still can meet,
> Whose lofty top surmounts each storm,
> And joins them at our Saviour's feet."

(6) Still further does this fellowship work. The same Spirit working in all believers creates a new spirit of loving care for each other. The same mind that was in Christ Jesus is created in them. Love rules in the Christian family of God, and when love reigns, there is the germ of a new and of a perfect social life. In such a case none will "seek his own, but everyone another's wealth." Where the Spirit of Christ reigns, speaking will be always with grace, without a rotten word. The fellowship of heart with heart will be close, deep, true, and warm. Difference of office and position will bring no collision of interests. With the golden band of love encircling all there will be peace in the heart, light in the dwelling, kindness in the home, righteousness in the market, purity and goodwill in the social circle and in the life of our cities and towns. Yea, the true, pure life received from Jesus will be a healing and cementing force, uniting all who receive it into a grand unity as "one new man."

(7) But we cannot forbear also noting, as the perfection of Christian fellowship, that it is not only rooted in fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, but that being so rooted it has also an outlook which can belong to no other fellowship whatever; for it will attain its perfection when other bonds of union are snapped asunder; and it is destined to be renewed in a land where "they cannot die any more." He who unites us round Himself to-day, will gather us to Himself by and by! Then all jarring shall cease. Then the voice of the great Peacemaker shall have been heard: "Peace, be still"—and lo! He shall have ushered in heaven's eternal calm!

Then from the ransomed hosts shall songs of praise arise to Him who of the scattered sons of the human race has formed in Himself one indissoluble band—as "one new man."

What shall we then say to these things? We see how, in the redeeming work of our Lord Jesus Christ, the root-ill of human woes is attacked and destroyed. We see that, by Him, what keeps man apart from man is removed; that what unites man to man is supplied.

And as we look around us, we see also how many schemes have been and still are being planned with a view of realising a new commonwealth of prosperity, happiness, and concord. In so far as any of them are in harmony with Christ's plan for creating a commonwealth of Israel, we make no remark upon them. In so far as they would set it aside, we see in the light of the Cross that "sure and certain failure" is already written on them all. Why? Because (1) they are all of the earth, earthy; (2) they all fail at the outset by ignoring man's greatest need—to be set right with God; (3) they fail to strike at the root of evil, and to find a remedy for sin; (4) they fail to show any centre-point around which men can rally: (5) they commit the error of seeking to reform men's surroundings without reforming them; (6) they aim at securing, by mechanical or legislative means, what can only be secured by a personal and social regeneration; (7) they have no specific whatever for the creation of that spirit of love without which the unity of the human race is absolutely impossible; (8) they cannot possibly succeed till they see, in the Lord Jesus Christ, the true magnet of souls, the destroyer of sin, the leader of righteousness, and the inspirer of love.

Never, never, will men be able to realise this grand ideal—"one new man"—until they see the glory of the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ: a glory absolutely unique; it alone levels all party walls that keep men asunder; it alone creates the force that shall bind all in one.

And if we ask, whereunto is this fellowship? Is it simply a fellowship in which we luxuriate, or is it something more? We reply, both.

It is a fellowship in which we luxuriate, for of all the rapturous delights in our Christian experience, this is certainly one of the greatest, when gathering together from east and west, and north and south, we can forget all that keeps us asunder, and clasp hand in hand, and join heart to heart, exulting in that which makes us one in Him, "Whom having not seen, we love." Here we are, brethren, this day, unknown to each other in the flesh, yet in one common Lord we are as "one new man!" Surely there is no luxury to surpass this. Heaven itself will be but its consummation and its outgrowth.

But it is more. It is a fellowship of testimony. We testify to one another and the world that a true commonweal is secured when all are one in heart, however adverse outside circumstances may be. All genuine oneness must begin from within and work outward, and must be rooted in Him who is "the head of every man." Man's schemes of fellowship aim, by levelling outside distinction, to create oneness of heart and soul. Christ's plan is, by creating oneness of heart and aim, to lead his followers to unite as one new man, let outside distinctions be what they may. And it was never more important than it is now for us to bear that testimony to the honour of Him in whom human oneness has already begun, by whom alone its completion can be ensured.

Hence, ours is, finally, a fellowship for service. We are in Him that we may be for Him. We are one, that in our unity may be our strength. And as we get older we avow that we have less and less inclination to move along the lines of party, and a far greater yearning to move along the line of unity. Oh! be it ours brethren, while man is seeking by carnal means to form an artificial commonweal, that Christ, by his blood and Spirit, has already formed a commonweal, rooting it so firmly in Himself it can never be torn up, and cementing it so strongly it can never be shaken. To perfect this shall, God helping us, be henceforth our aim, that by the exhibition thereof we may win the alien to his Lord and ours. Thus, in his strength, may we hasten on the fulfilment of His own prayer, "That they all may be one." Amen.

FATHER, SON, AND HOLY SPIRIT.

GRACIOUS Father, by whose Will
Eternal life to us is given,
We boldly come before thy Throne
Mark'd with the blood of thy dear Son.

Precious Jesus, from whose Work
Our pardon, life, and glory flow,
We boldly stand before the Throne
Pleading no merits but thine own.

Loving Spirit, by whose Witness
All blessings are to us assured,
Within the Veil for evermore,
We worship, wonder, and adore.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Dear Sir,—May I once more thank my friends in the good old land who send me papers, especially the one who for so many years has sent me The Christian. Owing to ill-health I decided to try the Pacific Coast, and, being now settled there, I shall be glad if it is sent to New Westminster, British Columbia.

THE McALL MISSION IN PARIS.

By E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

THE story of the McAll Mission in Paris has been often told, yet I venture to give my own impression, and a few facts concerning it.

Last winter, while in Leicester, I often passed the church of which Mr. McAll had been the beloved pastor. Yesterday, at the American chapel, I met Mr. Donaldson, whom I had known in the North of Scotland, where vast audiences of eight and ten thousand sometimes assembled to hear the Gospel. He has now, for a number of years, been intimately associated with Mr. McAll. He told me many facts of the progress of the work that deeply interested me.

In 1870, while on a vacation visit to the Continent, Mr. McAll, in passing through Belleville, the most depraved part of the city, and the very seat of Communism, was told in broken English by a working man, to whom he gave a tract, that the people were weary of an imposed religion, and longed for something better. The conversation made a deep impression on Mr. McAll.

With no encouragement for support, he resigned his position as pastor, and came over to Paris with his devoted wife, took a house in the very heart of Communism, rented a little room on the level with the street, and put a notice over the door of Gospel meetings. Just a few passing looked in, and fewer still came in. The next night a few more came. The interest increased, till the room was too small to hold the people.

Other rooms were opened in different parts of the city, till now there are thirty-four centres in Paris where earnest Gospel services are held and sinners led to Christ.

Yesterday we attended the service in French. It was in the better part of the city. Most of those present were respectable-looking people. I was told that all had been, or were, Roman Catholics or infidels. An earnest Gospel sermon was given. A Scotch lady was the polite doorkeeper, and handed to all a hymn-book as they came in, or took it from them with a smile as they passed out, as much as to say, "Come again, and you may be willing to stay through the service next time." At the same time my old friend Mr. Donaldson was outside handing to passers-by an invitation to enter; thus the room was kept full.

I was sorry that in a meeting of that character no inquiry meeting was held, for I believe that when fishermen draw the Gospel seine, at least in such waters, they should look in the net and take care of the fish caught; for it is in inquiry meetings following such services that the largest numbers are brought to decision for Christ.

At the invitation of Mr. Newell, with whom I laboured four weeks in Newbury Port in 1876, I went in the evening to quite a different part of the city. When I told the hotel proprietor where I was going, he said, "You will never come back alive." I was there at an early hour. I found Mr. Newell's son, who was a little fellow of four years when I first saw him, the doorkeeper, also a few Christian women, English and French, ready to take all by the hand as they came in, and what is more, to give many of them a French kiss—a kiss on each cheek. This was to me a new, and I must say a pleasing sight. Those who came early were evidently nearly all Christians. The women, elderly and middle-aged, mostly wore caps, very clean and nice, and to see them kiss both cheeks of the Christian ladies, who returned them so warmly, made me think of Paul's words, "Greet one another with a holy kiss." Meantime my interpreter, who sat by my side, was telling me what he knew of each as they came in. He knew all who had professed conversion, and those who were there for the first time. I was surprised to find this included more than half the audience.

A row of bright girls and boys sat in front of us. I asked, "Are they Christians?" "No, I fear not." I then called one of them to me on the platform and asked her questions. All listened. I told her of some I had known about her age, whom I had seen led, by God's Spirit, to see their lost condition and to trust in Christ. Everyone who had come into the room listened intently, and seemed to drink in every word that was said. I began to think even then that God had a blessing in store for us in that meeting. After singing several hymns the room gradually filled. After prayer by the interpreter, he read the story of the death and sufferings of Christ. Those interested did not seem to mind much the coming and going of others who, in passing, had just stepped in to see what was going on. Protestants sometimes look in upon Catholic services on week days, very much in the same way, and soon pass out.

During my address I noticed a group of big boys who became quite obstreperous. I was speaking of the judgment day, and the final separation of the righteous and the wicked, when they rose and left in a not very becoming manner; as they went out of the door they flew at the kind Christian man who had been standing there through the service inviting passers-by to come in. They apparently seemed angry with him, because their consciences had been pricked and aroused; they not only knocked him down, but flew upon him and pounded him severely. When I afterwards saw him I noticed his clothes were covered with dirt, showing how they had rolled him over on the sidewalk. I ought not to have been surprised at this, for Mrs. Newell had told me in the afternoon what I might expect, and that sometimes they had to call in the police to preserve order.

They let out with their fists what others might have expressed with their tongues. I thought of Paul's words to the Galatians. "Am I, therefore, become your enemy because I tell you the truth?" My heart went out anew in love to these self-sacrificing men and women who are doing so much to save these degraded people. They surely need our prayers and sympathies. I asked why they did not keep the door open that those going by might be attracted in. "That is against the law, for then a crowd would collect." "Why do you keep the windows dark and boarded up?" "To prevent them breaking all the glass."

In my address I spoke to them in the simplest manner possible, showing that we were all sinners under condemnation, and then showed how Christ had suffered a cruel death on the cross for us. At the close I attempted an inquiry meeting. I urged all Christians to speak to those around them. With good Mr. Clouet, my interpreter, by my side, I went to work at once. I asked each one in French, "Aimez vous Jésus?" "Do you love Jesus?" Numbers with beaming countenances said, "Yes—yes—yes." A nice-looking young woman burst into tears and said, "No, no, I am not a Christian." She wept most bitterly. Two of her friends by her side only laughed at her; but ere long, they too, to my surprise began to weep. I could but feel that the Spirit of God was at work.

I cannot describe the scene which followed. Nearly all that were in the room gathered around us. Some looked on with wonder and astonishment, others with the deepest sympathy as if they had passed through a similar experience. Before I left these three said they would trust in Jesus. One of them promised to write to me.

Let all Christians pray earnestly for this work going on in Paris. Much regret was expressed that Mr. Newell is so soon to leave for America.

A QUIET RETREAT.—The Ryde Seaside Home has been blessed to young women from all parts of the country. There are now thirty-four in the Home, of whom twelve are Board-school mistresses spending their holidays. Everything is provided in a liberal way for their comfort and restoration of health, at 14s. a week. A library, piano, and Bible readings in the evening add to the enjoyment of the young women, who come in search of health and rest, at the same time receiving Christian protection from the temptation of these awful times of wickedness.

WHAT I WOULD DO.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I THINK if I were Mabel,
And couldn't go out to play,
I'd find some pleasant thing to do.
Not fret and sulk all day,
Till everybody wished me gone
At least a mile away.

I think if I were Lucy,
And my lesson was hard to learn,
I'd do the very best I could
The highest mark to earn,
Not throw the "hateful" book aside,
And to my dollies turn.

I think if I were Harry,
And playing a game of ball,
I'd drop the bat at once and run,
Should mother gently call.
The boy who answers to his name
Is manliest of all.

I think if I were Johnny,
With errands that must be done,
I'd finish every one of them
Before the set of sun;
I'd be a little business man,
And brighten work with fun.

I think if I were Florrie,
With a tiny sister Sue,
I'd let her go to walk with me,
I'd pet her; wouldn't you?
I'd never say she "tagged along,"
As many sisters do.

I think if I were seven,
And had merry, dancing feet,
And cheeks like summer roses,
I think I would be sweet—
I'd scatter happiness around
On all I chanced to meet.

I think—just listen, children—
If I were a child to-day,
I would begin with earnestness
To step upon life's way.
I'd give my heart to Jesus now,
Repent, believe, obey.

OBITUARY.

MISS MARY REES.

ON the 2nd inst., Mary, the third daughter of the late Rev. A. A. Rees, of Sunderland, fell asleep in Jesus whilst visiting at Barnstaple. The interment took place on Saturday last, and was conducted by Mr. Bergin, of Bristol, who was much blessed in his recent ministry at Brother Rees's chapel in Sunderland.

MR. ELISHA SMITH ROBINSON, OF BRISTOL.—MR. JOSHUA NICHOLSON, OF LEEK.

Within little more than a week's interval have been called to their rest two gentlemen whom the Christian Church and the localities where they dwelt could ill spare. They had much in common. Each began life in the humblest fashion; each was the architect of his own fortune; each had the same intensity of purpose. The deceased philanthropists are the type of a noble class of men—and we profoundly regret it is so limited—who do more by their lives even than by their munificence. In both cases rare business sagacity would hardly have led the way to eminence and affluence without the possession of those commoner qualities—integrity, industry, and perseverance—which are within the reach of all.—Nonconformist and Independent.

MISS LUCY J. PAPILLON.

This noble lady, who founded the first Soldiers' Home in the United Kingdom, was called home on August 24, aged 77, after a week's suffering from the effect of the stroke, at her residence in Sandgate. In 1858 she opened a small room for the soldiers quartered at Shorncliffe Camp. This effort grew by degrees into the present Home, containing five rooms and a mission hall. A large number of residents in the neighbourhood were present in the Cheriton Churchyard, where her remains were laid to rest on the 28th. Conspicuous among the beautiful wreaths which covered the coffin was one bearing on a silver card the inscription: "From members and friends of Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Home. In loving memory." As the assembly dispersed, one present was heard to say: "Dear old lady! If she had never built that Home, me and my husband might never have been saved, nor my two sisters, for we were all born again there."

DR. MULOCK.

On August 23, Dr. Mulock succumbed to an operation, which he came to London to have performed by Sir Henry Thompson. He was the son of an Irish proprietor at Queen's county (who is still living at the age of ninety), and the eldest of sixteen children. He pursued his studies for the medical profession with considerable success, being a gold medallist, and he obtained a doctor's diploma. He went to Australia, and joined the Mounted Police at the gold diggings, in which perilous position he was distinguished for his courage and energy. He returned to this country with his health shattered, and, being converted in London at a watch-night service, he entirely surrendered himself to the Lord, giving up his position and all his worldly prospects. He at first chiefly devoted himself to children's services, following up the labours of Rev. Payson Hammond. Subsequently he gave himself to the work of the Lord as a teacher and evangelist among the "Open Brethren." He lived a most self-denying life, and may truly be said to have walked with God in separation from the world ripening for judgment.

THANKS FROM AFAR.

DEAR SIR,—I have received the following letter, which I send you, that the rightful owner may receive the grateful thanks of the sender, and know how much the kind and regularly-sent gifts of books, &c., are appreciated, and also hear what means of true blessing they have been.—Faithfully yours,
SARAH HEWARD.

Keppel Island, Falkland Is.

DEAR MADAM,—For some years past I have received regularly each mail copies of The Christian, Word and Work, &c. I have never known to whom I have been indebted for these until now, when an accident reveals to me yourself as the thoughtful donor. The books and sermons which they have contained I have sent (after reading them) to the shepherds on the adjacent islands, and also given to the sailors on board of our colonial vessels. All receive them gratefully, and more than one instance is known to me in which they have done good.

It may interest you to hear of one. About four years ago there lived on the West Falklands a man who was notorious for bad character and profane talk, cruel to his wife and family, and altogether a person to be feared and avoided.

Some time ago we received a visit from a lady friend, who told us that in passing through the part in which he lived, she went into his house, and to her great surprise found the poor fellow reading to his children who were gathered round him some of the papers and tracts which had been sent from Keppel Island, and that upon inquiry she was told that a great change had come over him, that he no longer swore or got drunk, but was steady, sober, and respectable, and evidently endeavouring to lead a better life.

Please receive the best thanks of many who have read and benefited by your kind gift, and rest assured that your "labour of love is not in vain in the Lord."—Yours most truly,

L. HY. BURLEIGH.

BIBLE WORK IN PORT SAID.

THE British and Foreign Bible Society has now an agency established here. For three years a colporteur has been at work, and Messrs. Wemstein and Lethaby have laboured successfully, as has also Rev. F. W. Strange, the Church of England chaplain.

In February Mr. W. H. Taylor obtained his discharge from Her Majesty's Navy, after ten years' service, the latter part of the time in active employment, from the bombardment of Alexandria to Tel-el-Kebir. He is exceptionally qualified to work on the ships which pass in a continuous procession through the canal. In four months he visited 236 vessels, of twelve different nationalities, selling 1405 copies of the Scriptures, which realised £43 5s. 2d. This represents an amount of mental and physical exertion which only those who know the peculiarities of the station and the character of the climate can appreciate. Even Mr. Taylor's well-seasoned physique was perceptibly affected by the end of the four months' toil. After visiting the passengers and officers of a ship he frequently spends hours among the crews, earnestly endeavouring to bring hardened or indifferent men face to face with their Saviour in his Word, and with remarkable success.

He is now absent on leave to fetch his wife from England. Mrs. Taylor will receive visitors on shore, while her husband visits the ships in the boat belonging to the Society.

Nearly every missionary enterprise in Syria and Palestine is largely helped by this Society. The whole of Western Palestine is systematically visited by colporteurs under local superintendence, and the crowds of pilgrims who visit the holy places in the early part of the year are methodically and carefully looked after by a special agent, who has liberty to distribute among them, with care and discrimination, single Gospels without limit in their many tongues.

Yours faithfully, ROBT. H. WEAKLEY.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will be a Double Number, price 2d., containing further reports of the Northfield Convention, with addresses by Dr. Gordon, Dr. Pierson, &c.; an article by Mrs. Bayly, author of "Ragged Homes, and How to Mend them," and other important matter.

A Conference for the Deepening of Spiritual Life will (D.V.) be held at Glasgow from Sept. 29 to Oct. 2 inclusive.

Our dear friend, Pastor Frank H. White, sailed on Tuesday, in the City of Chester, for the United States and Canada, hoping to return in about three months. We doubt not that many of our readers will remember him in prayer, that he may, while taking rest, be strengthened to serve the truth of Christ, in that large land, during his brief visit.

We commend to our readers a pamphlet published by the Victoria-street Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection, entitled, "An American Medical Man on Vivisection" (2d.) It is a reprint from Lippincott's Magazine, and shows the discord in the opinions of vivisectors, and the uselessness of vivisection.

The opposition to vivisection does not appear to have been without good effect, and it is satisfactory to note from a report sent out from the Home Office that fifteen of the forty-nine persons who held licenses in Great Britain during the past year did not use them. About four hundred and fifty experiments were performed by the thirty-four persons, chiefly upon frogs and mice and fish. In Ireland no experiments of a painful kind were performed, and the Home Secretary states that the pain inflicted in the experiments in England was "insignificant." This is very satisfactory as compared with the state of things which existed a few years ago, but it is quite possible that if the frogs and mice, and fishes could express an opinion it would be adverse to that of the Home Office.

As a rule, great nations are in a position of the greatest danger when they seem to have reached the very pinnacle of prosperity. Greece and Rome, fearless before a world in arms, fell undermined by their own luxury and vice, and it would seem that England will not be an exception. With, on the one hand, legions of men revelling in untold wealth, and scandalously abusing the power which the possession of wealth gives, and upon the other, masses of starved people dying like flies, and as little regarded, both being alike dangerous to all healthy national life, there is room for grave fear that the end is approaching, and that in revolution or conquest by invaders, righteous retribution will overtake us.

A writer, who, by virtue of his great experience as a clergyman in a very large London parish, speaks with authority, has recently asserted that "it is women's own acceptance of impurity among men that lowers men's own sense of right, and makes them capable of wrong against which both chivalry and pity protest." These are wise words. If only part of the social disabilities which fall upon a sinning woman could be laid upon her male tempter, the utter selfishness of evil men would keep them from many sins of immorality; but whilst the woman is driven into the streets and to the river, and the man is courted and caressed in society, it is hopeless to expect any reform beyond that which follows the application of repressive laws.

It is by no means certain that many preachers do not do more harm than good when they attempt to grapple with sceptical objections to revealed truth, and only deal superficially with questions which are as deep as they are vital. But few men are competent to deal thoroughly with certain phases of modern doubt, and those who are not qualified, however earnest, and valiant they may be, had better leave such questions alone, lest they should simply scatter that which they think they have destroyed. Oftentimes it is better to proclaim the truth than to defend it, to sow the seed and leave it to the rain and wind of heaven. "I will listen to any man's convictions," Goethe said; "you may keep your doubts, your negations to yourself, I have plenty of my own."

Some idea of the terrible condition of things in Russia may be formed from some figures recently given by the greatest living authority, M. Semenoff, from which it appears that the peasantry pay more than three-fourths of the taxation of the country. At the same time, in many provinces, the whole yearly income of a peasant family, after paying rent and the excessive taxes, is only from three to five pounds, just sufficient to buy a few pounds of black bread daily. The death-rate, therefore, is excessive, famine being always at the door, and typhus and diphtheria hard by.

Who can wonder that Communism is rapidly spreading in Russia under such circumstances, and that there are signs of a fast-coming political revolution? If rulers sow the wind, they must expect to reap the whirlwind.

Amongst the very few remaining countries where the Gospel has not yet been preached as a witness, Thibet stands foremost in interest and importance. For years missionary societies have been waiting and watching to penetrate into its unknown interior. An interesting paper on this country appears in the September number of The Nineteenth Century, and contains the following allusions to the religious superstitions of the people. The writer says there are four prophecies among the Thibetans: (1) That the Thibetan religion will be replaced by another from the East. (2) That after the 13th Ta lei lama (or spiritual ruler) there would never be another. The present Ta lei lama is the 13th (some say he is the 12th), and at his selection there was a strong party against raising another. (3) There is a prophecy among Buddhists, extracted from their Scriptures, and much talked about by the Thibetan people, which assigns dates or terms for the duration of several Buddhist sects. According to these dates the Buddhist religion itself should pass away about this time; and it is also said that it will be replaced by a religion coming from the South, not East, as in prophecy No. 1. (4) When a certain lake's water, probably the Tangri Nor, or Nuam Tso, runs low and becomes salt, then the Lama power will come to an end. This, in the matter of the water, is said to have already occurred. It may be that the day is not far distant when the messengers of the Gospel will find an entrance into the country, and the first-fruits of the harvest there shall be gathered in.

An Irish newspaper, a few days ago, had about a dozen columns filled with reports of speeches delivered by Irish Members of Parliament, and others, at National League meetings, held on the preceding Sabbath Day. At most of the meetings Roman Catholic priests presided, and much of the oratory was of a very objectionable and inflammatory kind.

Alluding to Mr. Parnell, one M.P. said, "If they do not want peace, he will give them war. (Great cheering.) He will give them such a war as eighty Irish members can carry on in the heart of the English Parliament, and such war as the Irish people are able to carry on outside of Parliament—with the weapon of the franchise, and the weapon of the boycotting pike, or any other weapons that the time or opportunity may offer us." (Great cheering.)

Apparently the Pope has given his sanction to the position now taken by the Irish priests with regard to the National League, and one would like to know how he is able to reconcile that action with his course as to Italian Unity.

The Assistant Solicitor to the Inland Revenue, in a recently published "History of Taxation and Taxes in England." furnishes a statement of the cost of each of our wars from 1870 to the reign of William III., and one cannot be surprised that a critic has designated it "a horrible document."

Mr. Dowell has not written with the idea of advancing the objects of the Peace Party, but it is nevertheless true that few readers will rise from the perusal of the statement in question without a deep and lasting impression of the far-reaching evils of war. If the £831,000,000 expended in the last war with France, or the £97,000,000 spent in that with the American Colonies, had been distributed in "fruitful strifes and rivalries of peace," how different to-day might have been the lot of our toilers and our poor. Those two wars bequeathed a heritage of suffering which still passes from father to son, and the payment of the costs will affect the working man's breakfast table for years to come.

The leading organ of the Ritualist party in the Church of England, in commenting upon the third recommendation in the Bishop of London's pastoral, read at the Conference on the Criminal Law Amendment Act, admits the importance of the Bishop's advice to use the time of preparation for Confirmation "for giving definite teaching in purity," but the writer urges that, "if through this teaching the conscience of some young offender should be aroused, there ought to be an opportunity for Confession."

"Experienced and qualified confessors are needed," says this Mr. Romewards, and one may ask at what cost is the confessor's experience gained. Michelet, no mean authority, has asserted that "the studies with which they prepare for it in the seminaries are such as entirely ruin the disposition, weaken the body, and enervate and defile the soul," and he has recorded that he dared not quote what had been revealed to him about that "idiotic education," by those who had "been its martyrs, and narrowly escaped destruction from it."

"Experience teaches a priest something of the phenomena of sin," says the journal we have referred to, and we are not inclined to dissent from the statement; but if the confessor learns so much, what does the penitent learn? The confessor's manuals contain, as Michelet asserted, and as many of us know, references to "crimes that perhaps never were perpetrated," and to a "mass iniquity which would have been abhorred y ancient Sodom.”

And this Protestant clergyman, experienced the phenomena of sin, and armed with hat the great French writer has designated all this villanous science,” in the endea- ur to entrap a boy or girl of tender years to an admission of sin, has to suggest in the anner Liguori has pointed out, offences too rrible to be thought of! What must the sult be?

A late Birmingham Daily Mail has what terms a “threnody over the departed glory the Church of the Saviour.” This was e Church built for Mr. George Dawson hen he “seceded from the Baptist body in der to have a wider field for his latitudi- rianism.” Since his death it has, we are ld, “shrunk into something hardly distin- uishable from obscurity,” and is in danger being closed, as the income of the church o longer warrants the continuance of his ccessor. The satire is striking, though nintentional, when it is set forth in the ove influential journal that the building alled by its founder “The Church of the aviour” has been trading for the last ten ears on its connection with George Dawson. his has now collapsed, and the fact is xceedingly suggestive.

The exodus of Israel from Egypt is thus oken of by the Rev. H. R. Haweis in this onth's Good Words:—

> “Although Pharaoh's armies are said to have een overthrown in the Red Sea, and his land vaged by plagues, there are faint traces of either tastrophe in the monuments of the period; and is probable that, from the Israelitish standpoint, e escape of a body of foreign slaves, and the nsequent annoyance and defeat of the local police militia, assumed an importance more imposing in e eyes of Hebrew writers than in those of haraoh's annalists.”

The Bible narrative means more than this. he subsequent references in the later books f Scripture to Egypt and Pharaoh demand ore. Such flippant depreciation of the bvious language of the sacred records goes r to make sceptics, and when Egyptologists re finding proofs innumerable of the accu- acy of the Old Testament, is it not proper —should there be a difficulty—to wait?

In the above monthly there is a most im- ortant and valuable paper on “Pantomime Children.” Since the Scotch Education Act ives the right to School Boards to exempt hildren for employment at pantomimes, the ice-Chairman of the Glasgow Board made personal investigation as to the influence f the exemption. He visited theatres during he rehearsals and went behind the scenes uring the performances. He has come to he conclusion that School Boards should no onger grant such exemption. He sets forth trong facts to show that the immodest resses, the dances, the language heard, the hole environment, are unfavourable to orality, and peculiarly hazardous in the ase of young girls. This serious testimony ught to be pondered.

The trial of all reformers is a lawless spirit f imitation. Their work is brought into isrepute by men who rush in to make gain f it. German fanatical imitators almost roke the heart of Martin Luther. These asts and counterparts, to cover a necessary eformation with disgrace, are the stratagems f the arch-enemy. While good men mourn ver this, it becomes them neither to be aunted nor surprised. We shall see these ounterfeits in every direction.

We desire to call the attention of all interested in the young to a special meeting for conference and prayer, on Monday, September 14, at 7 p.m., at Exeter Hall. The invitation emanates from a few earnest workers who conferred and prayed together a few days since, and who, in view of the terribly fascinating and corrupting allurements now, and to be, offered to our boys and girls, of both Sunday and Board schools, desire to know God's will as to the wisest steps to take. Fathers, mothers, school superintendents and teachers, and all interested in the matter, are earnestly invited to attend. Mr. Henry Varley and others will give information.

We have been pressed by friends to name a day for united humiliation on account of our social, national, and individual sins; thanksgiving to God for his long-suffering, and for having awaked the conscience of the nation; prayer that He may purge us from our iniquities, endue us with the righteousness that exalteth a nation, and purge us from sin, which is a reproach to any people. In order to give sufficient notice, it has been thought desirable to name Tuesday, September 15, as a day on which all into whose hands this may come are invited to unite in spirit and to spend as much of the day as possible in waiting upon God.

We are glad to find that Rev. E. Payson Hammond is engaged to commence a Mission for young people at the Mildmay Conference Hall on the 20th inst. Friends residing in the neighbourhood should not miss this opportunity of bringing their children under the influence of this good man, whose London meetings some years ago were so signally blessed.

A meeting of Ultramontanes is to be held this month at Münster. A distinguished and ambitious leader is to bring forward a proposal, which finds influential favour, to establish an international league, which shall be world-wide, in defence of the Roman Catholic Church. It will be a union throughout the world in the interests of the Roman priesthood, and will everywhere bring into violent antagonism two of the most hostile tendencies of modern times. Who can foretell whereunto this may grow?

Few things have given us more satisfaction than the revised programme now published of the Church Congress to be held at Portsmouth next month. Such subjects as Our Young Men and Marriage, Rescue Work, Girls' Friendly Societies, Evangelising Agencies, Emigration—attitude of the Church as to this and to War—the Welfare of Soldiers and Sailors, Social Economies, Intemperance, the Spiritual Life and Religious Ethics, promise discussions eminently timely and urgent above all merely ecclesiastical ones.

MORE CHINA MISSIONARIES.—Another contingent of Christian soldiers met friends of missions at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., one evening last week, previous to their departure for China. They were Messrs. Terry, Botham and Walker. Mr. H. D. Brown presided, and each of the brethren gave some details of how they were led to the Lord and to devote themselves to his service in connection with the China Inland Mission. One of these was first led to think of the foreign field through his brother, who had attended a missionary meeting, and related the substance of what was said to his brother. This may be a hint to others to do likewise. The meeting was convened by the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, which has already been instrumental in sending men and women to distant lands. It is thus a real outlet for British Y.M.C.A. members, and deserves support.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S WORK.

MR. HENRY VARLEY writes: “It was my privilege to preach Christ at The Foresters' Hall, Mile End-road, on Sunday evening last. The large house was packed with a deeply interested audience, a goodly number of whom confessed their reception of the word of life. After the service was over I went to the Assembly Hall, the head-quarters of the remarkable work over which Mr. Charrington presides. There the smaller hall was crowded out, another large open-air meeting being held immediately in front; I must add, my joy was unbounded to see the great hold of the people which God has given our beloved brother in this important centre of work.

“A few days since I visited the new hall which is in course of erection. Its walls have almost reached their highest point, and a few weeks will see the completion of this great building, with its capacity for well nigh 5000 hearers. What a scene was presented last night! The great tides of human life surging to and fro. What a grand sphere for work! I rejoice to know that many have helped our brother in his remarkable undertaking, but if my words shall stimulate others to assist of their substance, sympathy, and prayer in this noble work, I shall rejoice.”

AGRA MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

ON a recent Sabbath evening Rev. Dr. Valentine, Principal of this Medical College, who is now in Scotland, delivered an address on “Medical Mission Work in India.” Glancing at the manners and customs of the people that opposed themselves to mission work, he described the Zenana system, in which were immured forty millions of poor women, to whom the words “love,” “husband,” and “home” had no meaning. Their condition is pitiable even in health. When disease attacks them their prison-houses are converted into chambers of horror, into which no ray of hope beyond death ever enters. When our dear ones are taken from us, we still look up and think of them before the throne of God. Not so with the Hindoo mother. When her child is taken she can only think of it as passing through the bodies of 8,500,000 animals —in one of its transmigrations perhaps entering the body of a dog, and with all the intelligence of a child coming back to the door of the old home, wishing again to enter and take up its old place in the family; but, unable to express its wishes, sorrowfully wanders through the city. Many and beautiful are the songs sung by the simple-hearted people of India, in praise of their beautiful land; but that idea of the future in which the highest Christian truth has been wedded to poetry of exquisite sweetness—

“There's nae sorrow there, Jean,
There's neither cauld nor care, Jean,
The day's aye fair, Jean,
In the land o' the leal—” has never been sung by any sad heart in India. The work of the College was next reviewed, from which we learn that a native medical student can be boarded, educated, and supplied with books for £16 a-year. For the sum of £80 he is turned out a fully qualified medical missionary, with the diploma of the Agra Government College. Several friends, both in this country and in India, have undertaken to educate one or more students, and it is difficult to conceive a more useful way of spending £16 a-year than this. We are also glad to know that the College has been affiliated with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. Dr. Valentine returns to India in November, and hopes soon to open the female classes.

SOLDIERS' HOME, SANDGATE.—In consequence of the death of Miss L. J. Papillon, as notified in another column, this institution is now in the hands of five trustees and managed by a committee of three gentlemen residing in the neighbourhood. May He who has seen fit to call away the chief supporter of the Home still continue to supply all its need. F. P. M.

Mr. MOODY'S NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

[FROM OUR OWN REPORTER.]

A KALEIDOSCOPIC SESSION.

THE SERVICE OF SONG.

AT the closing session of the week, we had an ample variety of topics brought before us—a kind of omnium gatherum. Mr. Moody began by giving some of the latest details about the progress of the Glasgow Mizpah Band, the parent of all the Bands of that ilk in this country. A letter just received had furnished the pleasing information that the muster-roll of these reformed men had now reached 1100. The labours of the male choir in Gospel song and in preaching are being greatly blessed to the refreshment of the Churches and the awakening of sinners. Mr. Moody used this as a peg on which to hang an earnest exhortation to all the Churches to utilise the gifts of song in their ranks. Why should not the voices of the young Christians especially be consecrated to God's service? Let them be trained, not only to sing, but to let the people know what is being sung. It is as much an abomination to sing as to preach in an unknown tongue. Have large choirs of every kind; sing solos, duets, and quartettes, &c., and you will find that a fresh interest will be awakened. It is always a sign of backsliding when the song of the Church becomes feeble.

By way of postscript to Mr. Moody's remark about singing in an unknown tongue, Dr. Pierson told of one who thus prayed, "O Lord, we suppose that, being omniscient, Thou knowest what this choir has sung; as for us, we have not understood one word."

TENT MEETINGS.

Rev. W. PRATT strongly commended tent meetings in the summer season. He was very severe on the notion that God cannot save souls in the hot weather. November appeared to be the limit that some people set before which it was almost presumptuous to expect the Lord to send a revival. He went on to relate some experiences of tent work in New England, which were very encouraging to all who engage in this form of evangelistic effort. Some folks asked how the tent converts hold out. As a reply to that, he would ask how those converted in churches of the Gothic pattern, or the Queen Anne style of architecture, or churches of the Greek cross, held out. Whether converted under the canvas or under the dome of a cathedral, all who are born of God are alike sons of God, and are kept by his mighty power.

Mr. MOODY thought that probably there were a number of wealthy ladies and gentlemen in the meeting; they could not put their money to better account than for each of them to purchase a Gospel tent, and pay for the expenses of an evangelist. During the summer he could visit the country districts, and in the winter time visit places where there were weak churches. He knew a man in Maine who had become so convinced of the blessing to be derived from this kind of work that he is now supporting three such evangelists.

Mr. G. C. NEEDHAM said that many who were evangelists had entered into business or gone to other lands because they were so poorly remunerated. He knew of the case of an evangelist preaching in a place for three weeks, and he was rewarded with five dollars! If Christian men who had means would stand by evangelistic work, much more of it would be done. In answer to a question as to how the churches could hasten the Millennium, Mr. Needham said there was no better way than for every man and woman to bring to Christ as many sinners as they could. Before the Millennium could come the number of the elect would have to be made up.

DR. PIERSON ANSWERING QUESTIONS.

One word about the use of Scripture types. Never deduce doctrine from a type, lest you engraft on Holy Scripture some conception of your own. There is a danger of informing the Bible with our own sentiments. We may, however, safely take a type as an illustration and confirmation of a doctrine.

As to tent work, he told what they had done in connection with Bethany Church, Philadelphia (of which he is pastor). A band of fifty consecrated workers was organised, and undertook to do any work that the Lord might present to them. A field was lent to them in the suburbs of the city. They got second-hand materials, and themselves raised a canvas-covered erection with a board fence all round to keep away evil-disposed persons. Much of the labour was given freely by the workers themselves, and they had a tent holding about a thousand people, at a cost of 200 dollars. It is full every time a service is held, and there has never been a meeting without some conversions.

Q. Should a preacher give any heed to the tastes and desires of his hearers?

A. No preacher, who is a gentleman, not to say a Christian, would unnecessarily go against the preferences or tastes of his hearers. Apart from that, it is difficult to say which is the greater danger to a preacher—the fear of incurring the condemnation, or the desire to have the commendation, of those to whom he delivers the Gospel message. The minister of Jesus Christ has to receive his message from the Word of God by the illumination of the Spirit of God in answer to prayer, and he has to carry it directly to the hearts of the people without concerning himself as to what they will say about it. Enlarging a little further on this point, the Doctor quoted the passage in 2 Tim. iv., about people "having itching ears," who heap up to themselves teachers, because they could not endure sound doctrine. The figure, "itching ears," he said, was a very quaint figure, and referred to the fact that certain unclean animals, particularly swine, whose filthy methods of life produced an irritation about the ears, heaped up something on which they could rub themselves so as to remove the irritation. In like manner, those professing Christians whose lives were not consistent, and who were rebuked by the preaching of sound doctrine, desired to find out other preachers who might hold their own lax views, so that they might take consolation in the fact that this one and that one were like minded with themselves. As to desiring the commendation and applause of his hearers, he knew so well, personally, that the flesh was so strong in him, that he would avoid everything that would render it any encouragement.

Q. Is there any progress of doctrine as between the Old Testament and the New, on the subject of the Christian's relation to death?

A. I would not dogmatise; but it appears to me as if the Holy Ghost, after the resurrection of Jesus Christ, desired to introduce an entirely new nomenclature on the subject of the death of the believer. In the Scripture record, there appears a new set of terms, as if it were designed that the word "death" should be abolished from the vocabulary of Christian people. I have examined the Book from Matthew to Revelation, and I cannot find a single case where the departure of the believer from this world is described as "death." The very first decease of a believer recorded after the resurrection of Christ, that of Stephen, is called "a falling asleep," and the same or similar phraseology is afterwards used throughout. The words "die" and "dead" are used several times, but always with the qualification, such as, "the dead who die in the Lord," "the dead in Christ," &c. In quoting the phrase used by Paul, "the time of my departure is at hand," Dr. Pierson said that the more correct rendering would be, "the time of my unloosing." It was as if a vessel tied to her moorings in some foreign land had her hawsers unloosed, her sails unfurled to catch the favouring breeze, and away she went to her desired haven. The phrase as used by Paul referred to his martyrdom, which circumstance adds force and significance to the figure.

ANSWERS BY DR. GORDON.

Q. What is the meaning of Matthew xii. 3 the passage referring to the sin of blasphem against the Holy Ghost.

A. It is a very difficult passage, but I w give you what I suppose to be its meanin
Christ had just said, that by the Spirit of G
He cast out devils; but his enemies had said th
He cast them out by Beelzebub, the prince devils. Just at this point He said, "A manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiv unto men, but the blasphemy against the Ho Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men." T peculiar sin seems to me, therefore, to the attributing of the works of Jesus, throug the Holy Ghost, to the devil.

Q. What is the meaning of the passage whi says that the Comforter, when He is come, w reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, a of judgment?

A. The promise was: "I will send the Com forter unto you." Christ did not promise send Him to the world. Therefore the Holy Gho must convince the world through Christian
In these days it is the holy life of the Christi that is to convince the world of sin. He was judgment"—not "judgment to come," as it often quoted. The Holy Ghost is to convin the world, through the testimony of believer that the judgment of sin is passed, that th prince of this world is dethroned, and there now no condemnation.

Q. Is it right to disregard all inner experienc and say we are satisfied with the work of Chri for us?

A. No. The mission of the Holy Spirit is make the work for us to become a work in us.

Q. What is the meaning of 1 John iii.
"Whosoever is born of God doth not comm sin"?

A. The life of God is imparted to t Christian, and that life tends not to sin but holiness. The believer, therefore, does n habitually commit sin. An expression in t first prayer that I ever heard Mr. Spurgeo offer imprinted itself on my memory: "
Lord, Thou knowest that when we were unre generate we lived in sin and loved it, but no that we have become regenerate we fall into si but we loathe it." That, I think, is what stated in this passage.

Q. Is it possible that the sonship which w have through faith in God can be lost?

A. I would not try to lose it any way. B if you ask me, I say most emphatically, "No, any more than a man who has eternal life c lose it. I am not very strong on the perseve ance of the saints, but I am very strong on t perseverance of the Lord.

Before leaving the meeting to proceed to t

I have already embodied in my report. He sa that perhaps it was in answer to the prayers

HOW THE DAYS GO.

t one of the later meetings Mr. Moody said days of the Conference had been going by hours, so full were they of thrilling and tical interest. That I imagine is the expe- ce of all. For myself there is so much of g interest at all the assemblies, that I find ry hard to secure a little leisure in which to are my notes, not to speak of indulging in eative rambles, to which the glorious scenery every hand would tempt the lover of the tiful in nature. From early morn to dewy the Seminary buildings are the centre of tant movement and bustle. In these parts egin the day betimes. In this respect Mr. dy sets an example that some of us fall very hort in imitating. He has been seen driving splendid team of black horses at six in the ning; whether he is up before the sun or I cannot tell. Most of us are astir before n, and at half-past the breakfast bell rings Household prayers for those who can nd follow very soon. The first public meet- in Stone Hall begins at ten, though some before that is usually spent in a service of . Mr. Moody may almost be said to have ing on the brain. He calls for it on every ible occasion, and though everybody knows he is not an artist in the vocal line, nobody rs so heartily into the spirit of it or enjoys thoroughly. A friend has erected a large near by the place of meeting, and during the ng days of the Conference smaller meetings been held there even before the gatherings ecitation Hall.

inner is at half-past twelve, and the young es who wait on the guests have a busy time t. The rare and pure atmosphere gives ybody a voracious appetite, but the com- ariat department is equal to every strain put n it. I feel bound to express my admiration he generous and well-prepared table that is ad from day to day. It is no slight matter ave to supply the daily needs of perhaps 300 ors, who are dependent on the provision e by Mr. Moody and his assistants. Mr. H. shall, of Boston, one of Mr. Moody's most ed coadjutors in all his good works at North- , has the oversight of the entertainment rtment, but his health is far from good, and has delegated the burden of the executive k to Mr. Ober, a young Y.M.C.A. official, is exactly suited to the post, and makes ything go as smoothly as in the best regu- d hotel. A number of the young ladies are being educated at the Seminary have n up part of their vacation, to come and t in caring for the comfort of the visitors; e a little army of these young people wait at e, and, from their proficiency in this direc- , I can only judge that the training they ive here is of the most comprehensive kind, embraces not only their intellectual and tual, but their prospective domestic life.

fternoon meeting begins at three and ends at Tea, or supper they call it here, is at half- five, and this is the last meal of the day. ericans at home do not appear to countenance hours for eating, and probably they are t. The half-past five tea is, however, a h more substantial affair than is the cor- onding meal in England. Many of the nds here take drives through the lovely ons of the Connecticut Valley after supper, rning mostly in time for the eight o'clock tings, which are held both in Marquand and t Halls. By ten o'clock the members of our nsive household have disappeared, as a rule, so the bright and busy days are rounded off.

he mention of drives prompts me to note one the many proofs of Mr. Moody's kind ghtfulness for the comfort of his guests. in America is credited with being about as rtionate in the matter of charges as the don "cabby," and the thirst for good nping fares has presumably extended to the t vale of Northfield. Mr. Moody, however, he exercise of competitive or argumentative , perhaps of both, has reduced the transit f by one half, and in some cases more than . His own vehicles are in constant requisi- for carrying friends hither and thither.

A CONVOCATION OF WORKERS.

Almost every sojourner here is a Christian worker in some department of service. There is a host of ministers from all points of the compass; these are backed up by a cohort of evangelists, and then follow the rank and file who tread quieter paths of labour. All alike are drinking in the inspiration that the Convocation so richly affords, and the effects of which will not be exhausted for many and many a year.

It has been specially interesting to me to see the face and grasp the hand and hear the voice of not a few with whose names I was already familiar through the pages of THE CHRISTIAN. Among these I may mention Mr. S. Bridgeman, of Northampton, Mass., who is almost a neighbour of Mr. Moody's, and whose lively pen has often enriched your columns; Mr. Collins, of the Gospel Union Mission, New Haven, Conn., from whose little paper the sketches and portraits of Dr. Pentecost and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins were recently transferred to your pages; Dr. Dowkontt, of the New York Medical Mission, whose career as a worker I have traced with much interest since the old days when his letters were dated from H.M.'s Dockyard, Portsmouth, and who is now doing noble pioneer work in home medical missions in this great country; Mrs. Coe, also of New York, who has laboured long and successfully among the lapsed mass of that city; Rev. Jacob Freshman and Father O'Connor, both of New York, who are respectively in the van of Gospel effort among the Jews and the Roman Catholics of America's commercial capital; Miss Dryer, of Chicago, so well known for the impetus she has given to Bible study in the West, and the network of home missions she superintends in that great and wicked city; Dr. Munhall, the evangelist of Indianopolis, a veritable Boanerges, who seems to be equally at home in blowing the Gospel trumpet, exhorting the saints to holy living, or in swimming across the broad waters of the Connecticut river; Mr. Oakes, an Irish evangelist, who has just returned to these shores from a short Gospel tour in his native isle, and who hopes some day to lift the banner of the cross in old Ireland; and others.

THE CONVENTION HALF DONE.

Sunday, August 9, closed up the first half of the Convention. The day of rest dawned peacefully, as indeed every day seems to do in this sylvan retreat. It has been my happy fortune to tarry during some of these memorable days in the pleasant and cosy home of Mr. and Mrs. Sankey, near the centre of the long and unique "High-street" of Northfield. This thoroughfare, a mile and a half in length, is in a great part of it a broad avenue of stately elms and maples, and though the dust in dry weather is much too abundant for the comfort of the traveller, it is a noble highway. Before the hour of service, as Mr. Sankey and myself were in the open, drinking up the fresh, pure ether of the morning, bells rang out from the steeples of the two churches in the town—the Unitarian and the Congregational. Somewhat facetiously, but not untruthfully, Mr. Sankey described the ding, dong of the former bell as "Doing, doing," while the steadier note of the other seemed to him to say, "Done." Unitarianism has had one of its strongholds in Northfield for many a day, but things have changed a good deal since Mr. Moody came before the world as a preacher of the Gospel of a free and finished salvation. I am probably not over-sanguine in hazarding the belief that that unhappy system of colourless negation is "in the down grade" in this birthplace of the world's evangelist. At any rate it is a fact, I believe, that a goodly proportion of the people who are wont to frequent the Unitarian synagogue were on this Lord's Day found within the walls of Recitation Hall. There they must have heard much that was fitted to give them pause, if they were at all addicted to thinking about what they heard. Every now and then Mr. Moody lets fall an expression that shows how near to his heart are all the dwellers in this beautiful valley; how he longs that they should walk in the unclouded light that streams into the soul through the exercise of faith on the Son of God. His heart must have been rejoiced to see so many—for they came from far and near—listening to the good old Gospel of redemption through the atoning sacrifice of the Divine Lamb.

The public engagements of the day consisted of four discourses. At ten o'clock Dr. Gordon preached a very choice and suggestive sermon on "Seven First Fruits," first fruits of the Resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 20), of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 23), of the redeemed (James i. 18), of Israel (Rom. xi. 16), of Achaia (1 Cor. xvi. 15), of Asia, not Achaia (Rom. xvi. 5), and lastly, first fruits unto God and the Lamb (Rev. xiv. 4). I hope you may in some future issue have space for notes of this discourse, which was marked by the beauty and freshness of exposition, as well as chasteness of expression, that characterise all the utterances of this polished and spiritually-minded Christian teacher. May I here take the liberty of hoping that Dr. Gordon's voice will be heard at the next Mildmay Conference. I understand that a cordial invitation was sent to him to speak at the Conference of this year; but being pre-engaged for Mr. Moody's Convention he was unable to respond. The friends at Mildmay will do well to "fix" him for June next.

At eleven o'clock Dr. Pierson had the platform. He did not essay to preach a regulation sermon, but gave, in his peculiarly terse, clear, and rousing fashion, a Bible reading, bringing out, as he modestly said,

A FEW OF THE GREAT FACTS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

The general drift was to prove that in every book of the Old Testament there is a forward look to Jesus Christ, the coming Messiah, and a foreshadowing of his great Redemptive work. After some preliminary words, showing how the prophecies concerning Christ were literally fulfilled, and that after an interval of 400 years from the closing of the prophetic period, Dr. Pierson referred to the Old Testament books seriatim, quoting from each some passage or statement that was an index finger pointing to the promised Saviour. Your space will not permit me to do more than mention these points in outline.

Genesis.—The promise made to Adam as to the seed of the woman; the clothing of the man and the woman with the skins of animals, implying the idea of blood-shedding in sacrifice. The offering up of Isaac by his father; Jacob's ladder (see John i. 51).

Exodus.—The Passover Lamb. One statement made by the preacher on this point was perfectly new to me, and may be to many of your readers. The paschal lamb, he said, was used for eating as well as for sacrifice, and it was roasted on a spit of a peculiar kind. One piece was thrust through the animal from shoulder to shoulder, and another from the head towards the tail, so that the lamb was actually roasted on a cross.

Leviticus.—The sacrifices. The day of atonement, a remarkable pictorial example of the idea of reconciliation of man to God. Referring to the sending away of the goat into the wilderness, a token of sin atoned for and forgiven, and utterly forgotten, by God, Dr. Pierson made this finely suggestive remark; a special peculiarity of animals of the goat species is their complete lack of sense. If a dog had been used, he would, by the very instinct of his nature, have found his way back to the camp; so, probably, would a horse. Send a sheep or a goat away into the wilderness, and it will never appear again. It will wander heedlessly, farther and farther, until it die; but it has no instinct that will lead back to its fold—a most striking picture of sins confessed and forgiven, because atoned for, and also removed from the view of God without recall.

Numbers.—The serpent on the pole. The word translated pole means "banner staff," which has a cross-piece at one end—another hint of the cross erected at Calvary.

Deuteronomy.—The cities of refuge.

Joshua.—The very name is typical. The scarlet cord symbol used by Rahab.

Judges.—The history of Gideon, and especially that of Samson rending the lion's jaws and bringing honey out of its carcase; in his death pulling down the very temple of the Philistines. Jesus Christ by his death shaking to their fall the pillars of earth's iniquity.

Ruth.—The kinsman-redeemer.

1 Samuel.—The types of the Church—Saul a type of the Jewish Church, David a type of the Church militant, and Solomon of the Church triumphant.

2 Samuel.—A type of free grace in the history of Mephibosheth.

1 Kings.—The temple on Mount Moriah. The Queen of Sheba typifying the sinner coming to Christ, and saying of Him, "The half was not told."

2 Kings.—The cleansing of Naaman the leper, through obedience to God's command spoken by the prophet.

1 Chronicles.—The plague stayed by sacrifice.

2 Chronicles.—The temple on Mount Moriah.

Ezra.—Salvation for backsliders who repent and confess their sins.

Esther.—The queen taking the place of the people, bringing deliverance through the grace of the king. The letter written in the king's name.

Job.—The daysman who should lay his hand on both.

Psalms.—xxii.: The hour of darkness and crucifixion, giving the very words of Christ; xxiii.: The valley of the shadow of death; xxiv.: Resurrection and ascension.

The time allotted to the Doctor had now expired, nimble though he be both in flash of thought, and readiness of utterance, so he had to draw bridle, contenting himself with one more reference to Ezekiel i., in which we have a description of the likeness of the glory of the Lord; also a picture of the fourfold aspect of Christ's character—the face of a man; of a lion—He was the lion of the tribe of Judah; of an ox, representing the sacrificial bullock; of an eagle, soaring above the world into the very atmosphere of God. The Bible-reading was concluded by a most pathetic appeal to the large congregation, to see that they rejected not Him who was so fully set forth by patriarch, psalmist, and prophet, and who has fulfilled, to the letter, all that was predicted of Him as the One who would appear in the fulness of time for the salvation of men. Some 200 persons, I was informed, were turned away from the hall for want of room; it was the largest Sunday audience ever gathered in the little town of Northfield, marking, let us hope, an epoch in the spiritual history of the entire valley.

Mr. G. C. Needham preached in the afternoon on the Priesthood of Christ. He was followed by Mr. Moody, who discoursed on free and sovereign grace, with all his accustomed power and earnestness.

FIRE AT AN INDUSTRIAL HOME.—On Thursday last the large building occupied by the Industrial Home for Boys at Islington was destroyed by fire. This Home, which has cared for and brought under Christian influence many hundreds of vicious and unmanageable boys, is terribly crippled by the calamity. Schoolroom, workshops, dormitory, &c., with clothes, materials of labour, and more than £100 worth of firewood in bundles, are all consumed. The building was insured, but not these contents; and the stoppage of the boys' labour, by which a large trade was carried on, entails a further heavy loss. We thank God that no lives were lost.

A FOREST HOME.—Whilst many fond hearts have been providing change for their families, the nearly exhausted shop-girls and work-women have had no one to send them out, and no little savings that could procure them a week at the sea, or even with friends in the country; some, indeed, appear to have no earthly friends at all! The Home which Miss Reynolds has on the borders of Epping Forest has in the past been warmly appreciated. Many who for years had never seen the country, and others who were fast declining, speak of extreme pleasure, restored health, and sweet spiritual comfort enjoyed at this healthy little resting-place. Those who delight to work for the Lord, visit the patients, with bright young faces, and glad hearts, trying to make the little outing as beneficial as possible, both for body and mind. But applications are more numerous than funds. Particulars can be obtained of Miss Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill, Essex, who will be most grateful for all contributions of money, food, or clothes.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. W. FORBES has, since his return from Kent, been giving addresses at Lewisham, Whitechapel, Barnet, and Highbury.

GERRARD'S CROSS, BUCKS.—Mr. Charles Billett has been visiting this neighbourhood for some weeks, and has been holding Bible-readings in the Public Library, kindly lent by J. Bramley-Moore, Esq. The Christians have been greatly cheered, and much blessing has resulted.

BIRMINGHAM.—On Sunday week, in the People's Chapel, Mr. Edward T. Smith delivered from memory Dr. Talmage's Temperance Oration, "The Arch-fiend of the Nations." The chapel was crowded, and the powerful words of the great American preacher produced a deep impression on the audience.

CLAGGAN, IRELAND.—During August evangelistic meetings were held here each evening in the week, and two each Sabbath, with marked success. The Irish Evangelisation Society kindly sent one of their tents, and Mr. James Thompson, whose powerful and thoroughly Scriptural addresses rivetted attention at all the meetings, which increased in numbers from two to six hundred. Mr. James Osward, from Belfast, also assisted part of the time. The whole district has been moved.

UPPER CLAPTON.—During the past three months a tent has been erected in Northwold-road, for evangelistic services, and the closing fourteen days' mission has been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. C. King. The tent was crowded every night, and large numbers could not gain admission. Mr. King riveted the attention of his audiences night after night with his stirring addresses; he introduces numerous humorous sketches and incidents in his life, but always brings out an earnest Gospel appeal from each one, which evidently drives the truth home to the hearts of his hearers. Mrs. King sang some sweet Gospel solos, and her simple but loving addresses touched the hearts of many. On Monday, August 31 (the closing service), a praise and testimony meeting was held, when many testified to the blessing they had received, and to the realisation they had of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit at these meetings.

CAMP MEETINGS IN PONTYPOOL.—At the anniversary of the Undenominational Mission, Pontymoil, Alderman R. Cory, the president, suggested that, before the summer was over, a vigorous effort should be held in Pontypool by a series of open-air or camp meetings. Mr. T. M. Wintle, the hon. superintendent of the mission, fell in with the idea, and soon carried it into effect. A large marquee, to hold several hundred people, was erected in the market-place, and here for two days, the meetings were held. Mr. Wintle secured the services of a number of well-known Christian workers. The weather being fine, the tent was utterly inadequate to accommodate the large numbers who sought to gain admission at the evening services, but by removing the surrounding curtain those outside were able to hear all that was said by the speakers, and to take part in the gatherings.

PETERHEAD, N.B.—The months of July and August bring to this town thousands of men and women to engage in the herring fishing industry, and thus opportunities are given for Gospel work. The open-air meetings, attended by large crowds, have been interesting and encouraging, and many hundreds, gathered from all parts of the country, have "heard words whereby they may be saved." The open-air meetings are followed up with tract distribution, and a prayer-meeting in the hall, where the awakened are spoken to and prayed with, and some have left rejoicing in the Saviour. We have been assisted in the work this summer again by our brother, Mr. Ririe, from Horley College, and also by Miss Gamock, from Mildmay Deaconess' Home, who has conducted special meetings for women, attended with much blessing. Efforts to reach the young were also made, a band of workers going into the streets on Sabbath forenoon, and gathering into the hall large congregations of boys and girls. W. S.

A HEBREW CONVERT.—Rev. A. Ben-Oliel, missionary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, has under his instruction in Rome, a highly-educated Austrian Jew, who speaks Latin, Ancient Greek, and several European languages. He desires to dedicate his life to the Master's service, and would like to go to a Christian College, and there equip himself the more fully for the work, but is now at the Home for Jewish Inquirers, at Rome. Mr. Ben-Oliel's address is, Viareggio, Lucca, Italy.

M.C.A. CONFERENCE AT BELFAST,

SEPTEMBER 2 TO 5 INCLUSIVE.

IIS year will remain in the history of Y.M.C.A. work as one of the most help-nd encouraging we have known.

lfast has truly shown herself worthy of the privilege she sought so earnestly at the n International Conference, when she asked ve the honour of receiving the Y.M.C.A.'s his year. Truly our Sister Isle has, in ing her arms to receive the various Associa-, been doubly blessed by the many prayers, ghtful addresses and papers read before elegates and many of the residents of this ured city.

e general meetings were preceded by a g of the secretaries, when various topics discussed, and many useful hints were and received.

e principal paper at this meeting was read Ir. Hind Smith, on the "Causes of Failure sociation Work." These Mr. Smith said were erous, and whilst he lamented having to ss such a subject, yet he hoped to give a ractical suggestions now to secure success to avoid failure. The following are a few s only:—Let the Secretary and Committee nsecrated men. Keep a single eye to God's , and let our watchword be "Young men hrist." Let the work be started on right Do all we can to help the several churches ending teachers and workers. Encourage arnest missionary spirit, &c. A few things avoided:—Unsuitable buildings; living nd your income; holding services at same as churches; too many mixed meetings; nsuitable secretary, &c.

e above paper was very freely discussed, the result must be that the secretaries will n home with a clearer view of their part in ver-increasing effort to reach young men.

e reception of delegates was held in the bition Hall, on Wednesday, Sir David or presiding.

e following Ode of Welcome was read and wards sung by a choir of ladies and gentle-:—

he Athens of the North, a loving hand f welcome to her visitors extends; ho work for Christ, throughout the world are friends
ivinely bound in one unsevered band.
We pray that heav'n, as if by fairy wand ould further in the race for righteous ends ose, Shamrock, Thistle, that to God amends ay rise like incense from a sinful land.
Shaftesbury! good Earl, thy absence draws a tear;
rin knows that thou did'st work and pray or those who in the city's perils stray.
nd Williams, of the blest work pioneer, he jewels in thy crown shall sparkle clear, hen God receives thee to his cloudless day!"

e Chairman, in the course of a very happy earnest address, said, "I have watched the ciation for now nearly thirty-five years, and pleasure in saying that never in its history t been so vigorous and healthy as it is at resent time in Ireland," and that no doubt England and Scotland would be able to rt continued progress throughout their al fields of labour.

llowing the Chairman, addresses were given Rev. Charles Leaver, who welcomed the lish delegates; by Rev. George Cron, oming the Scotch friends; and by Rev. iam Park, to the Irish delegates. The note was struck when Mr. Leaver referred to rand revival of 1859, and the still fresh lection of the sweet and hallowed time God truly gave showers of blessing upon eople of Ireland, and then to Scotland and land. Mr. George Williams, Mr. James (Greenock) and Mr. Fowler (Dublin) replied, ing how deeply they valued the hearty in which their several friends had been ved.

The first day's conference commenced by a bright, earnest, devotional meeting in the Association Hall, Rev. W. Riddall presiding; after which Mr. McCann, Irish Travelling Secretary, reported that the National Organisation had only been in existence since January last, but that during the period of eight months ten new Associations had been formed, whilst many others were in course of formation, making a total of 48 Associations in Ireland, with a membership of 4198. Ireland is now divided into two districts—North, with Belfast as the centre; and South, with Dublin as the centre.

Mr. W. H. Mills, National Secretary, read the report of the English work. The following figures contain a summary of the associations:—1879, 163; 1882, 188; 1885, 239. The National Council has done good service in reviving many an Association, whilst very many have been helped out of difficulty by a brief visit of the Travelling Secretary. Not one Association has lapsed during the past year, and this is to a large extent attributed to the more perfect central and district organisation.

Mr. Auld reported on behalf of the Scottish Associations. The work in Scotland differs somewhat from that of either England or Ireland, in the fact that the various fellowship unions in connection with the evangelical churches are regarded, when affiliated with the Y.M.C.A., as branches of their work, thus swelling the membership to a very large extent. Twenty-one new Associations have been formed during the year, whilst very great encouragement has been given by the deep spiritual tone of each branch. Special reference was made to the great impetus given through the work carried on amongst the students at Edinburgh, and spreading from thence throughout the greater part of Scotland.

Mr. W. T. Paton, of London, read an excellent paper on "The Relation of the Work of the Y.M.C.A. to that of the Churches." It breathed the spirit of oneness with Christ, and hence unity with all Evangelical Churches. Mr. Paton said that whilst we may have diversity of sentiment, yet unity of action should characterise the work of the Associations with that of the various sections of the Church of Christ, and with Nonconformists when not conformed to the world; the Established Church, with its power; the Methodist with its fire; the Presbyterian with its strictness; the Baptist with its water—surely here would be found all that is necessary to get up steam in any one and all of our Associations.

Mr. Paton strongly urged the closer inspection of Association work by the various ministers, and, on the other hand, the secretary should seek a closer union with the Church and the pastors, that thus mutual help might be rendered.

During the discussion it was noted that one Association alone had, during the period of its existence, sent no less than 1000 Sunday-school teachers to the various schools in its neighbourhood; whilst another, during the past eight months, had sent sixteen for the same work. Thus it is shown how these God-given agencies may help one another.

During this sitting a telegram was sent to the venerable President of the English Associations, the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, who for three weeks has been confined to his bed. To this the worthy President replied during the day, thanking the friends assembled, and expressing the hope that he would at no distant future day be able by his presence to help on the work.

Mr. W. Oates, of Glasgow, then read a paper on co-operation with other institutions outside the Y.M.C.A. agency.

The following were a few of his points:—The value of a very close alliance with the various morning fellowship meetings, Sunday-schools, evangelistic agencies, open-air missions, and many other kindred works. It was felt that in every town and city the Y.M.C.A. should become the platform upon which all these bodies could meet in unison, whilst the room should be a centre of all evangelical effort. Special allusion was, during the discussion, made to missionary work, and it transpired that some fifty or more had entered into the foreign field from the various Associations during the past year.

Mr. R. Burn read an extract from a letter just received from Mr. Stanley Smith, now in China, who said that a wonderful work of grace was now going on in Pekin, a medical missionary having healed, under God, the wife of one of the prominent men of that city. This caused the man to listen to the Gospel, and the result is that the house, once in the grasp of Satan, is now thrown open to all who are diseased, so that these missionaries can use means to cure both body and soul. This message moved the meeting, and the whole body of delegates felt the powerful presence of the Holy Spirit.

The public meeting at night filled up the programme of the day. One of the bright features of this public assembly was that two of the students from Edinburgh told how wonderfully God had blessed those of their number who had gone evangelising throughout Scotland, and then they very earnestly told of the preciousness of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Friday's meetings were no whit behind those of the previous day. Earnest heartfelt gratitude to God for his presence in yesterday's Conference, and prayer for rich blessing on this also, commenced the meeting.

The Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, then read a paper on, "How can the Association best protect young men from the temptations of City life?" The subject of this paper was treated in such a masterly way as to lead each one to feel that the reader had himself had experience as a young man in city business life, and it ultimately came out that Mr. Montgomery was won through the agency of the Y.M.C.A. Earnest discussion followed the paper.

Mr. Henry Thorne next read a very able paper on the difficulties in the work of the Y.M.C.A. It would do one's heart good to have given the pith of papers and discussions, were it not that the writer is himself a delegate, and for him to write more would have necessitated his absence from the Conference. He cannot close, however, without reference to the final meeting, held in the Association Hall in the evening, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird presiding.

This meeting, as well as the previous public gathering, had the opportunity of hearing the pleading voice of the Edinburgh students, and it was felt that at no public meeting of any Conference ever held was there such a manifestation of the presence, Spirit, and power of the Lord Jesus Christ. At every meeting of the Conference, from the beginning to the close, this thought was repeated, and everyone felt that no Association could do any work for Christ without a band of consecrated men at its head, and without very much of earnest pleading with God for the souls of guilty men.

The Conference at Belfast will be remembered as one of the most spiritual gatherings ever held, and the earnest cry to God from every heart was that the Associations throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland might be deeply stirred up by the secretaries and delegates carrying home with them what was so powerfully felt in the meeting—viz., the power and presence of the Holy Ghost.

The Conference, by unanimous vote, will meet next year at Bristol.

PROF. GEORGE L. WHITE has returned from Thousand Island Park, much pleased with that resort. He met the Jubilee Singers there, and arranged to re-organise them and conduct a tour in the South and on the Pacific Coast. Their prosperity was all due to him, and their evil days soon followed after they deserted him. He met Mr. T. P. Perkins there, who has written a letter, which will appear in our next. Mr. Perkins' family returns to Lemona, Florida.

MR. C. B. WHITE, the Army Scripture Reader, has been passing through deep waters. After his return from India, he accompanied the regiments to the Soudan, where he laboured amongst the soldiers with much blessing. He was, however, summoned home to attend the deathbed of his wife, whose case had been brought under the notice of the Queen and Princess Christian. She has since died with her twin daughters, for whom provision had been made by the Princess. The mother and children were interred at Windsor Cemetery in one coffin, which was carried to the grave with military honours. Mr. White has now been bereaved of all his seven children and an attached wife.

ENGLAND'S FUTURE MANHOOD.

AN APPEAL TO MOTHERS.

OUR country is deeply degraded,
Her manhood is branded with shame;
For the wrongs of the weak and the helpless
Have brought a foul stain on her name.
But the childhood! the boyhood! of England
Are ours. In the might of the Lord,
Let us train them for Christ and his kingdom,
By the light of God's Spirit and Word.

Oh, mother! the babe at your bosom,
The little fair son at your knee,
All nations are asking the question:
"What manner of man shall he be?"
Shall he be, through the sway of foul passions,
The disgrace of his country and age?
Shall he be "Knight of God," brave and noble,
Stern warfare 'gainst evil to wage?

Shall he be the strong guardian of weakness,
Protector of innocent youth?
The champion of virtue and honour,
High in purity, valour, and truth?
Oh! pray for it, live for it; teach him
To fight all life long 'neath the cross;
May he for the smile of his Saviour
Count the pleasures of sin but as dross!

'Tis yours, Christian mother, to guide him;
Your words he'll recall in life's din;
Your teaching will foil Satan's tactics
Your boy to entice into sin.
Knights of God, lords o'er self, shall Old England
Train up as brave heroes to fight
For woman! for home! and for country!
For God, and his Christ, and "the RIGHT"?

THE CENTRAL VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

SIR,—In view of the present agitation on the subject of Public Immorality, will you allow me to inform your readers that there already exists (at 15, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.) a "Central Vigilance Committee," which has been working for nearly two years and a half, and which has laboured earnestly to carry out the very objects that are now so prominently placed before the public? This Committee was formed in June, 1883, at the house of the Marquis of Ailsa, after two meetings had been held to discuss the public immorality which existed. It has for its President the Earl of Shaftesbury, and for its Vice-Presidents a large array of well-known philanthropists, from the Duke of Westminster to Samuel Morley, Esq., M.P.

It has held one very important annual meeting in Willis's Rooms, and is to hold its second in the Mansion House (with the Lord Mayor in the Chair) on Monday, October 12, at 3 p.m. It has already formed (or helped to form) some ten or twelve Local Vigilance Committees in the metropolis, and a few in the provinces. It is in touch with every corporation in the kingdom, I believe; and while others have held back from this painful subject of immorality, on the plea that it was not right to speak of it, I can testify, as its chairman, that this Committee has done good and earnest work from the time of its formation. It has sought, not unsuccessfully, to form that public opinion against evil which has now been so vigorously, if roughly, aroused, and has largely contributed, as I humbly believe, to the knowledge and zeal of many on this sad subject of the day.

Its one and only fault, so far as I know, is this—that it moved for reform, in regard to our streets and bad houses, before the public were ready for such a movement throughout the nation; and the consequence was that it was well nigh starved for want of means. A few generous donors had to bear all its expenses, and again and again we have had to press them for aid. Now, however, a mighty change has been wrought, and I believe that many, in all parts of the land, would be glad to aid in the great and national movement of this Committee to repress all public immorality, so far as possible; and to raise the moral tone of our nation, through the formation of Local Vigilance Committees. All information, as to the objects and workings of the Central Vigilance Committee, may be obtained from the Secretary, 15, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C., and I would very earnestly plead for generous and immediate support, and offers of personal service, from all who desire the real welfare of our nation. The Treasurer is the Hon. A. Kinnaird, at the offices of the Committee, as above.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
H. W. Webb-Peploe,
Vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, and Chairman of the Central Vigilance Committee for the Repression of Immorality.

A CAUSE OF HEART DISEASE.—A large number of boys examined for apprentices in the United States Navy have been rejected owing to weakness of the heart, caused by cigarette smoking.

MOTHERS AND THEIR BOYS.

SIR,—Every Christian parent must rejoice that the "White Cross Army" is working amongst young men, but, as one deeply anxious, I would ask, can nothing be done for our boys? It has been said that Temperance societies now are harvesting the seed sown years ago in the youthful "Band of Hope," and, if our children are to grow up pure men and women, something must be done. Oh that it might be done speedily, to stem the torrent of vice taught each other by school children! How few parents are alive to their children's danger; how few "hark to the rescue," and help them by counsel and instruction and prayer. While we are quietly comforting ourselves with the thought that "they are too young to think of such things," they are all having possibly their health of body and soul ruined for life; and this goes on even while yet they sleep under our roof. I know of a respectable middle-class day school, where out of forty boys only three are abstaining from impure words and actions—only three. What reason is there to hope that the thirty-seven will grow up pure men?—I am, Sir, An Anxious Mother.

[Whatever else may be done, the first and most effectual thing must be done by mothers themselves. They are the natural and divinely constituted guardians and teachers of their children; and we speak from our own experience when we say that nothing will tend more to ensure to a mother the lasting love and respect of her boy than her wise and faithful fulfilment of this sacred obligation.—Ed.]

"A SHAME TO SPEAK."

SIR,—It is a shame to speak of these things, have we not all felt it so? and we speak with hushed voices and pallid faces, with quivering lip and tearful eye. But the burning sense of shame in our hearts causes us to speak, we can no longer keep silence. St. Paul speaks of not keeping company with the workers of evil, but he would have the evil-doer judged, and the sinful taught the way of life. Oh, we would rather not speak! but what are we to do?

A young woman comes and falteringly tells out her horror at the fearful evil. She has younger sisters out in the world, and she trembles for them. We speak together of our duty as Christian women, and of the deep contrition which should be felt by all for the nation's shame; and she feels there are those who can sympathise with her, although the world tells her "such evils always did exist and always must!"

And the children—we must take upon ourselves this cross, we must speak. With deep humility, at the sacred hour of prayer, in the solemn hush of the quiet hour at mother's knee, we must tell them, warn them of the evil that may meet them—not to detail evil, but to warn as every mother, or one who takes that place, should. Oh, mothers, remember that pure girl, that innocent boy, will soon be with companions who will teach evil things only too readily; and better for your child to have learnt to shun such revelations than to listen with curiosity just aroused. Would that every child were warned by judicious parents before entering the child-world—school.

God forbid that anyone of us should speak of such things merely as "idle words." We need all to "go softly" and humble ourselves. I would almost cry to my sisters to wear the garb of mourning in which The Christian appeared when it brought first to us the revelation of which before we knew nothing. God will teach us our part in this mighty conflict, and He will give us strength either to be silent or to come to active combat, as He calls us, so He will fit us for our own part.

Yours in Christian sympathy,
Bradford Y.W.C.A. A.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Our visit to Brighton this year has, we believe, been a more successful one than in the past. Our Jewish brethren there have got used to us, and much of their prejudice seems to have been swept away through contact with the missionary, and by reading Christian literature left at their houses. The public meeting at the Pavilion was, above all other meetings, a very interesting and encouraging one, in that several Jews and Jewesses listened attentively to the Gospel message delivered to them pure and simple. Of two educated Jews there we entertain great hope. One of them may be said to be "not far from the kingdom of heaven."

lotes on Daily Readings.

SEPTEMBER 10.—I PETER III.

. 1.—“They may without the word be gained by behaviour of their wives” (R.V.).—It does not “without the word be born again,” which uld be contrary to i. 23; but “won” or ained” to give heed to that word which may as become the means of their regeneration.

. 6.—“As long as ye do well.” “If ye do well”
.V.).—The Greek is literally “doing well,” and the st natural construction of the sentence is to take thus, “After this manner in the old time the y women also, who trusted in God, adorned them-ves.” Then follow three modes of adornment: “being in subjection unto their own husbands en as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord:
ose daughters ye became);” (2) “doing well,”
l (3) “not being put in fear by any terror.”
e allusion in No. 3 seems to be to Manoah's fe (Judges xiii. 22) where the “terror” which red her husband did not “put her in fear.”

. 7.—“Giving honour unto the woman, as unto the aker vessel” (R.V.).—Both A.V. and R.V. miss e the right construction. Sp. Com. says: “The e construction of this clause seems to be ‘Living ether, according to knowledge, with the woman as weaker vessel . . . rendering honour as due to se who are also fellow heirs of the grace of life.’”

. 19.—“In which also he went and preached to the spirits in prison” (R.V.).—The difficulty e is not so much in the words as in the idea sented by the words, and in its possible abuse.
t it can hardly be denied that they assert that, fter death, our Lord, in his own human spirit nt forth and preached to certain spirits (specified erwards) who were . . . in custody as prisoners

. 21.—“The answer of a good conscience.”— iterally, the question, in the sense of a prayerful estioning, a petition or supplication.”—Sp. Com. e word “appeal,” given in margin of R.V., is haps the best rendering of the word.

SEPTEMBER 11.—I PETER IV.

. 1.—“He that hath suffered in the flesh hath sed from sin.”—“Hath done with sin” would press better what is meant. This is not an tract proposition, but one definitely referring Christ. The next clause gives the way in which he same mind” will show itself in those who rm themselves” therewith. The teaching here very parallel to that in Rom. vi. 10—12, and uld he compared with it.

. 6.—“For unto this end was the Gospel preached, n unto the dead,” &c.—If this refers back, as erally supposed, to iii. 19, it explains how in judgment which overtook those referred to at time of the flood, they were “judged according men in the flesh,” whilst by the Gospel after-rds preached to them, and that by the Lord mself, “they lived according to God in the spirit.” t the case is so distinctly exceptional that it is gerous to look upon it as a precedent.

. 11.—“If any man speak (let him speak) as the cles of God.”—This is sometimes taken to mean t what is spoken may be called “oracles of God,” l R.V. favours this view by rendering: “If any n speaketh, (speaking) as it were oracles of God.”
t as the expression “oracles of God” means Scriptures in the only other passages where it urs (Acts vii. 38; Rom. iii. 2; Heb. v. 12), it is er to keep to this meaning here, and understand s “Let him speak in accordance with the oracles od.”

. 12.—“Fiery trial which is to try you.”—“This y be more exactly rendered, ‘The fiery affliction ich is taking place among you for a trial.’”— Com. So similarly R.V. Persecution is, of rse, referred to.

SEPTEMBER 12.—I PETER V.

. 3.—“Neither as being lords over (God's) heri- e.”—“Rather acting as lords ‘lording it over.’” Ieritage,” is literally “the lots” or “allotted tions” committed to their charge. R.V. renders neither as lording it over the charge allotted to
.”

. 4.—A.V. is wrong in “a crown of glory,” &c.
here is a definite article, and it should be as in ., “the crown of glory.” “Speaker's Com-ntary” renders it happily, “the unfading crown
he glory.”

. 5.—“Be clothed with humility.”—“The exssion in the Greek, which occurs nowhere else the New Testament, has a singular force. It ns to be clothed as with a white scarf worn by es, and in a manner which intimates promptitude in the discharge of menial duties.—Sp. Com. This will account for the rendering of R.V., “gird yourselves with humility, to serve one another.”

v. 7.—“Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you.”—The first half of this sentence is better rendered in R.V., “casting all your anxiety upon Him” (the rest of the sentence is as in A.V.). The latter half might be rendered, “for He is concerned about you.”

v. 10.—“Make you perfect,” &c.—R.V., adopting a better-attested reading, has, “shall Himself perfect, stablish, strengthen you.”

v. 12.—“By Silvanus, our faithful brother, as I account (him)” (R.V.).—This marked recognition of the well-known companion of Paul is in keeping with Peter's testimony to Christians in Pontus, Galatia, &c., who probably had received the Gospel from Paul, that “this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.”

v. 13.—“She that is in Babylon, elect together with you” (R.V.).—“The city of Babylon at that time was certainly not the seat of a Christian community; . . . Babylon was well known in Asia Minor during the lifetime of St. John as the symbolical designation of Rome, and the whole phrase has a symbolical form or tone. Accordingly we find an absolute consensus of ancient interpreters that here Babylon must be understood as equivalent to Rome.”—Sp. Com.

SEPTEMBER 13.—2 PETER I.

v. 1.—“To them that have obtained a like precious faith with us in the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ” (R.V.).—A vastly improved rendering, fully justified by the original.

v. 3.—“Him that called us by his own glory and virtue” (R.V.).—This latter clause might be rendered, “for his own glory and praise.” See 1 Peter ii. 9, for “virtue” meaning “praise.”

v. 5.—“Yea, and for this very cause adding on your part all diligence, in your faith supply virtue,” &c. (R.V.).—An improved rendering; but “virtue” is better rendered “courage.” Each of these seven graces, which are to be supplied or furnished “in their faith,” will be found to qualify the immediately preceding grace “in which” it is to be supplied. Thus, faith is defective till in it is supplied (1) “courage,” which itself needs to be guided by (2) “knowledge,” and that kept down (for “knowledge puffeth up”), by (3) “self-control” (marg. R.V.), which must be persevered in by (4) “patience,” and kept from mere asceticism by (5) “godliness,” which, if genuine, will produce (6) “brotherly kindness,” and that, if not mere sectarianism, (7) “love.”

v. 11.—“Thus shall be richly supplied unto you the entrance,” &c. (R.V.).—The same verb as that which has gone before.

v. 19.—“We have the word of prophecy (made) more sure” (R.V.).—More sure to us, though not more sure in itself.

v. 19.—The usual construction of the latter part of this verse is not satisfactory. What can be the meaning of “Till the daystar arise in your hearts”? Dr. Tregelles long ago suggested a parenthesis as the key to the difficulty: “The prophetic word whereunto ye do well to take heed (as unto a light shining in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise) in your hearts.”

v. 20.—“No prophecy of Scripture is of private interpretation.”—Literally, “of its own or self-solution,” which it might have been if man had been its author, but the Holy Spirit who “moved” the writer can alone give the true solution.

SEPTEMBER 14.—2 PETER II.

v. 1.—“Who shall privily bring in destructive heresies” (R.V.).—“Privily shall bring in.” This, in the Original, is one word, which, in addition to the notion of introducing something alongside of something else, contains also the idea of secrecy. It is found here only in the New Testament, though the adjective derived from it is employed by St. Paul (Gal. ii. 4) to describe the false brethren “privily brought in” to the Christian community. —Sp. Com.

Denying the Lord that bought them.”—More accurately rendered in R.V., “Denying even the Master that bought them.”

v. 2.—“Pernicious ways.”—R.V. adopts an older reading, and has instead “lascivious doings,” which agrees with the parallel passage in Jude iv.: “Turning the grace of God into lasciviousness.”

v. 3.—“Through covetousness,” &c.—False doctrine, evil-living, and covetousness, are thus the three distinguishing marks of the false teachers in the Christian Church.

v. 10.—“Despise government”—“dominion,” R.V. “The word signifies ‘lordship,’ and it may be referred primarily to Jesus Christ.”—Sp. Com. “They tremble not to rail at dignities,” R.V. “Seems from the context to refer to spiritual powers.”—Ib.

v. 17.—“Springs without water, and mists driven by a storm.”—Two very striking images of teachers from whom refreshing waters of spiritual blessing are expected, but expected in vain.

SEPTEMBER 15.—2 PETER III.

v. 2.—“The commandment of us, the Apostles of the Lord and Saviour.”—“The commandment of the Lord and Saviour through your Apostles,” R.V. The command is thus traced to its source, the Apostles are but the channels for its transmission.

v. 5.—“For this they wilfully forget,” R.V.—“The mockers have spoken of all things as unchanged from the creation of the world. The Apostle brings an example to refute them.—Sp. Com.

v. 7.—“Stored up for fire,” R.V. (in margin “Stored with fire”).—This latter is in strict accordance with what all our knowledge points to, viz., that the earth's surface is but a crust over a sea of fire within.

v. 8.—“A thousand years as one day.”—This hint, taken in connection with Rev. xx. 2, is the key to the prophetical difficulty of this passage; viz., how the general conflagration and burning-up of the earth here spoken of can consist with the thousand years' reign of Christ and His Saints over it. The day of the Lord may be ushered in by a partial or local conflagration, but it is to the end of that day, i.e., of the Millennium, that the passing away of the heavens, spoken of here, belongs.

v. 13.—“We look for new heavens and a new earth.”—Parallel to Rev. xxi. 1.

v. 16.—“In which are some things hard to be understood.”—The best-supported reading makes “in which” refer to the preceding “Epistles,” and this is confirmed by “the other scriptures” further on, which shows that the Epistles of the Apostle Paul were regarded as “Scripture” by St. Peter.

SEPTEMBER 16.—I JOHN I.

v. 1.—“That which was from the beginning,” &c. —“This preface to the Epistle corresponds in a remarkable manner with the preface to the Gospel (John i. 1—18), but the two passages are complementary and not parallel. The introduction to the Gospel treats of the personal Word (“the Word”) and so naturally leads up to the record of his work on earth; the introduction to the Epistle treats of the revelation of life (“the word of life”) which culminated in the Incarnation, and leads up to a view of the position and privileges and duties of the Christian.”—Prof. Westcott.

v. 5.—“God is light.”—Self-manifestation is perhaps here the thought most prominent. “Whatsoever doth make manifest is light” (Eph. v. 13).

v. 7.—“The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.”—The blood of Christ manifestly means the death of Christ, for though, as Lev. xvii. teaches, the blood is the life, it is for this very reason that the sacrificial shedding of the blood was significant of laying down the life. See Isaiah liii. 12: “He hath poured out his soul unto death.”

v. 8.—“The truth is not in us.”—“In St. John ‘the truth’ is the whole Gospel, as that which meets the requirements of man's nature.”—Prof. Westcott.

v. 10.—“If we say that we have not sinned.”—“The perfect marks the present state, and present acts arising from and connected with the past.”—W. E. Jelf. Consequently this is even a stronger denial of sinlessness than ver. 8. That referred to the principle of sin within; this to the result of that principle as tainting even our best and holiest actions. It would perhaps be better understood if the distinctly negative idea of this verb “to sin” were expressed. “If we say that we are not coming short,” &c., the standard being that of “the word,” which “is not in” those who say so.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—The “Christian Medical Mission” (begun here last January), has grown very remarkably. The work is carried on simply as an out-patient department, one forenoon weekly, and during the short period of its existence no less than 1060 cases have received advice and medicine. This work originated with the congregation of Trinity Church, by whom, since their formation under Bishop Gregg, in 1877, the sum of £11,186 12s. 6d. has been locally raised for the work of the Reformed Church of England, and through their instrumentality a granite drinking trough and drinking fountain have been presented to the town.

Letter to the Editor.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

DEAR SIR,—Those acquainted with the question of the genuineness and historical accuracy of the Book of Daniel, know that the principal and most potent objection to the truth and divine authenticity of it was that monarchs are recorded as reigning over Babylon not only unknown to historians and ancient writers, but wholly precluded by them. Now, Sir, there can be but one alternative. Either Darius the Mede and Belshazzar did live and reign at Babylon, or they did not. If they did not reign, then Daniel must be regarded as romance, and the prophet as being simply an ideal personage. But if the affirmative is proved, then not only is the book unquestionably genuine, but the writer was a contemporary, to have known of the events he relates.

The question has been in abeyance many years, but at last, in God's time, the solution of the above historical difficulties has been found, and a very simple one it is too.

Those who desire thoroughly to study the subject, I would recommend to get the work, published by the London Literary Society, Strand, and entitled "Darius the Median Identified." It is clever and ingenious, and well worth reading. Indeed, I do not doubt it will soon be regarded as an essential to every Biblical student. It is distinctly shown therein that the cause of the difficulties was a defective chronology. This is substituted by another, based on the results of modern astronomy, and valuable information obtained from recently discovered tablet inscriptions, found in Assyria, Chaldea, and Egypt. The author has, to my mind, accomplished a great work, and deserves the thanks of every devout Christian man, in thus freeing Daniel from the hands of infidels and other, whose delight has been to cast reflection upon it, and bring it into disrepute. The author not only identifies Darius (who is distinct from the son of Hystaspes), but proves that he reigned at Babylon at precisely the same time and under the same circumstances related in Daniel.

HISTORICUS.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

CALAIS.—The mission ketch Annie is again moored here, and meetings of a very encouraging kind are being held for both French and English. Many of the former are thirsting for the truth, and we believe much good will ensue. I shall (D.V.) soon return to England for home work, and I shall be very glad of some 9000 little bags, 8 inches long by 7 inches wide, which I should fill with Gospel books and papers, &c., for which the soldiers and sailors are most grateful. I shall be very thankful for help in this important branch of our work.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

In Memory of

Major-Gen. Sir HERBERT STEWART, K.C.B.

HRISTIAN FRIENDS,—It is my earnest wish and desire to raise some memorial in ie town in which I live in memory of my late rother, Sir Herbert Stewart, and I appeal to our liberality and generous aid. It is proposed open for soldiers coffee, reading, recreation, nd dining-rooms, library, and Bible-class ooms, besides nightly Gospel and Temperance ldresses, &c.

All who are interested in the Soldiers' welfare ould (if they knew this town) agree with me at this "Home" is urgently needed, and the pportunity of possessing a building, at this articular moment, coupled with my earnest wish do something in memory of my brother, clearly hows me that it is the Lord's work (before hom I have laid the whole scheme), and I condently appeal to your Christian sympathy, being ssured that, with the blessing of Him "whose re the silver and gold," I shall not make the ppeal in vain.

Full particulars and circulars will be forwarded anyone who will write for them. Collecting ards will be gratefully supplied, and Christian orkers are earnestly asked to help in raising he necessary funds.—Believe me, very truly ours,

AUGUSTA EVERETT.

Contributions will be most thankfully received by yself, the Rectory, Dorchester, or at Messrs. Villiams' Bank, Dorchester, or the Office of THE HRISTIAN.

Kind friends are also asked to help by sending or the "Home" any gifts of Furniture, Clocks, ictures, Books, Games, Screens, Texts for the Valls, &c.; in fact, anything and everything will e most acceptable.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

DEAR SIR,—I consider it a happy privilege to ecommend the proposed scheme for a Soldiers' Home in Dorchester, in memory of the late istinguished soldier, Sir Herbert Stewart, K.C.B. I feel sure that you share the universal sorrow in the loss of this gallant and brave oldier, the youngest General in the British Army, and therefore I, in behalf of his sister, ppeal through your paper to the liberality of ll sympathisers in this excellent scheme.

The "Home" will greatly benefit our 600 oldiers, as a resort for quiet enjoyment, recreaion, and Christian instruction. At present, out of barracks, the public-houses (of which we have very liberal supply) are the chief places where our soldiers spend their evenings, and consequently, get into endless mischief, as I and ther officers can fully testify.

To commence this work about £1000 will be equired, of which £380 has already been received. am sure you will agree that a "Memorial" hat will thus benefit the British Soldier, will be touching tribute to him whose short but briliant career terminated so gloriously, and whose arly death caused such universal sorrow, not nly in the Army, but throughout the length and breadth of England.

H. MARSHALL, late 9th Lancers,
Commanding 39th Reg. District, Dorchester.

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the nchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by etter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, rove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers r about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give owards paying for their infants at nurse during the irst few months of the mother's return to service or ther occupation, causes the work to be unusually ostly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either o Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' ommittee) at her private address as above, or to essrs. Morgan & Scott.

LITTLE INNOCENT GIRLS IN ACTUAL DANGER,

Even if NOT Absolutely Destitute, may be brought at any hour by Day or Night, to

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes,"

Where immediate shelter will be afforded.

Application should be made between the hours of 9 a.m. and 7 p.m., to the SECRETARY, at No. 18, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY; at all other times to the MATRON, at No. 10, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

Letters and telegrams addressed to VIGILANCE SECRETARY, care of DR. BARNARDO, 18, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E., will at all hours receive prompt attention.

For Poor Children who have already been injured, a special COUNTRY BRANCH HOME is being formed, and prompt aid of every sort, including Legal Advice, will be afforded.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of antold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

HOMES OF HOPE,

(Established 1860),

For the Restoration of Fallen and the Protection of Friendless Young Women. Special efforts are made on behalf of young mothers, before and after confinement.

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

The applications every day are most distressing, and the Committee anxiously appeal for funds to enable them to utilise to the utmost the room in the Homes.

IMMEDIATE HELP IS NEEDED.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

EXTRACT from a LETTER of Mr. J. LUCKHAM, of SOUTHAMPTON.

Writing on behalf of a young friend, this correspondent, alluding to his own case, says: "I was under your treatment for three months. It quite set me up, and I have reason to gratefully remember you. I have been often told I ought to write you, and tell of the benefit I have received. I have taken to my old work in the Sunday-school and Band of Hope, and though sometimes it tries me a little, a dose or two of your medicine sets me right, thank the Lord. I am glad to bear this testimony.—Hazelwood House, 45, Milton-road, Southampton."

LETTER from Mr. FLATMAN, Manager, "FREEMAN" Office, CASTLE-STREET, HOLBORN.

"Dear Sir,—Enclosed is a private letter, in which reference is made to your treatment. Perhaps it may be useful.—To G. T. Congreve, Esq."

The "letter" is from W. A. Ivey, 4, Arlington-villas, Clifton, Bristol. "I am thankful to inform you that under Mr. Congreve's treatment I am getting on wonderfully well. I am becoming myself again, strong and hearty. I am taking the third large bottle of his medicine. The effect is wonderful. Should you know any persons in any way consumptive, tell them to place themselves under his treatment."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

AFTER YEARS OF AGONY.

REV. F. A. VINCENT, B.D., Rector of Elsted, Trayford, &c., writes:—"Dec. 23, 1884,—I shall be glad to reply at my own expense, to all inquiries as to the effect of the invaluable remedy 'Tikheel.' After taking two bottles I derived benefit I never could have anticipated, after suffering many years of agony. I had in vain tried all specifics known, as well as consulting physicians. I hope this testimonial, if it will not requite you will at least exhibit my gratitude."

JESUS, THE LAMB OF GOD:

SHOWING HOW HE DIED ON CROSS FOR CHILDREN; AND HOW LITTLE ONES HAVE LEARNED TO LOVE AND TRUST HIM. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may all. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the ery youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to nteresting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetngs. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to hrist, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

TELLING HOW JESUS GATHERS THE LAMBS TO HIS FOLD. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal ddresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most ffective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. he book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted nder his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

ANECDOTES AND APPEALS: WITH VERY NUMEROUS INSTANCES OF THE EARLY REGENERATION OF THE YOUNG. Sixth Thousand.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Limp cloth, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Many testimonials have been received, speaking of the blessing this book has een to its readers in this and other countries where it has been, or is now being, ranslated.

"It has been circulated among missionaries in various lands. Many have been aught by it to lead children to the Saviour. Repeatedly we have had occasion to raise God for his seal of acceptance to this book.

"Many a precious work of grace among the children, often extending also to the dults, has been directly traceable to the influence of the truths and facts gathered n these pages."—Preface to English Edition.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"This work consists of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, which are for the most part original. . . . This is really a new Hymn and Tune Book, and one which is sure to become very popular. It is a Gem. The Hymns are suitable for Special Meetings, Family Worship, and Children's Services."—Oldham Chronicle.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath-schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."

BARBICAN EAST CENTRAL MISSION TO THE JEWS.—At this time of the year, when so many friends of Missions are from home, we feel our responsibilities in connection with our work among our brethren pressing upon us rather heavily. It is a fact well known that Jewish believers and inquirers are sadly persecuted by their unbelieving friends, and are, as a rule, thrown out of employment. To help such distressed ones, and in some instances to teach them a trade, is our constant anxiety and care. Will some of the Lord's Stewards, for the sake of Him whose kinsmen after the flesh the scattered people are, help us in our present emergency, when our funds are entirely exhausted? Free-will offerings will be gratefully received, either by the Treasurer, Edward Jarvis, Esq., The Priory, 10, Kingsland-green, N.; or by the Missionary Superintendent, Paul Warschawski, 16, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington, N.

THE PARK HALL CONVENTION for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, will be held as usual (D.V.) on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, the 23rd, 24th, 25th instant. Meetings will be held on each day at 11 a.m., 3.15 p.m., and 6 15 p.m. Conveyances will be provided to meet the different trains at Polmont Station.

HYGIENIC FACTS FOR HEALTH SEEKERS.

The advantages of Electricity are not restricted to the conveniences of business or domestic life. In surgery it is one of the most useful allies. In the art of healing, when applied on the Magneto-Electric principle, no other agent produces such beneficial results; and, at the same time, none is so well adapted for home use. Results hitherto deemed unattainable follow its judicious application, simply through the invigorating influence which it exerts upon the vitalising processes of the system.

Recently people were hurrying away to the mountains and the seaside, their stock of nerve force being exhausted through overwork. In seeking a change of air they not only acted under medical advice, but they obeyed a natural instinct. Many of us, especially those who dwell in towns, find the external conditions depressing, because the wear and tear and mental strain are too great, the nervous system flags, and the healthy action of the organism generally is interfered with. The power for resistance, or what may be termed self-assistance, is rendered inert; consequently health fluctuates or declines, and counterbalancing conditions are imperatively called for. That the action of that subtle agent —Odo-Magnetism—is to supply the conditions most favourable to recuperation is proved by what it has done, and by the facts and truths stated in the few following sentences:—

Every living animal experiences sensations produced by the positive and negative state of the atmosphere, and every scientist knows the sensation felt in the nervous system from certain forms of electricity. The vigorous, braced-up condition of the nerves as the effect of mountain air or sea-breezes conveys some idea of the invigoration realised by the proximity of Odo-Magnetic influence. Nature and art now combine to render this subtle force constantly in action or perpetual operation. A power for good as natural as the air we breathe is superadded for the invalid's advantage, surrounding him, as it were, by a vitalising atmosphere. During thunderstorms and epidemics it has been well ascertained that the atmosphere is demagnetised, and Magnetic conditions interfered with.

The essential characteristics of Odo-Magnetic influence are its penetrating and permeating qualities, and the unabating regularity in its lines of force, which are so equally distributed and well-balanced in their operation as to induce a uniform flow of health in the living organisms even amidst surrounding disturbances.

Our principle of application is to infuse this unseen but energising force in such a manner as to affect the whole organism for good. Our attention is especially directed to the mental disturbance or nervous affection which is too often the original cause of physical ailments. By this means we supply the over-worked man with the like physical stimulus to that which he gets from the mountain air and sea breezes, and often more effectually.

We can point to people who were once incapacitated, and seemingly so for life, but who are now healthy and actively taking their part in the world's hard work. In numerous instances, affections which had been pronounced incurable, leading the patients, perhaps, to give way to melancholy forebodings because of the dark prospect before them, have yielded to Odo-Magnetic treatment. No more inconvenience is involved than by the wearing of an ordinary garment, and it is often as effectual as the most radical change of climate or favourable condition of health which could be devised for an invalid. This is no extravagant statement, but it is what is continually attested by our patients. Although we do not assure any applicant that cure is certain, we are permitted to refer such inquirers to a goodly number of those who know from experience what Magnetic Treatment has done for them. A list, containing the names of 1000 such persons willing to answer inquirers, can be had free, together with all information on the treatment, from B. Corson Garratt, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

In Memory of

Major-Gen. Sir HERBERT STEWART, K.C.B.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—It is my earnest wish and desire to raise some memorial in the town in which I live in memory of my late brother, Sir Herbert Stewart, and I appeal to your liberality and generous aid. It is proposed to open for soldiers coffee, reading, recreation, and dining-rooms, library, and Bible-class rooms, besides nightly Gospel and Temperance addresses, &c.

All who are interested in the Soldiers' welfare would (if they knew this town) agree with me that this "Home" is urgently needed, and the opportunity of possessing a building, at this particular moment, coupled with my earnest wish to do something in memory of my brother, clearly shows me that it is the Lord's work (before whom I have laid the whole scheme), and I confidently appeal to your Christian sympathy, being assured that, with the blessing of Him "whose are the silver and gold," I shall not make the appeal in vain.

Full particulars and circulars will be forwarded to anyone who will write for them. Collecting cards will be gratefully supplied, and Christian workers are earnestly asked to help in raising the necessary funds.—Believe me, very truly yours, Augusta Everett.

Contributions will be most thankfully received by myself, the Rectory, Dorchester, or at Messrs Williams' Bank, Dorchester, or the Office of The Christian.

Kind friends are also asked to help by sending for the "Home" any gifts of Furniture, Clocks, Pictures, Books, Games, Screens, Texts for the Walls, &c.; in fact, anything and everything will be most acceptable.

To the Editor of The Christian.

Dear Sir,—I consider it a happy privilege to recommend the proposed scheme for a Soldiers' Home in Dorchester, in memory of the late distinguished soldier, Sir Herbert Stewart, K.C.B. I feel sure that you share the universal sorrow in the loss of this gallant and brave soldier, the youngest General in the British Army, and therefore I, in behalf of his sister, appeal through your paper to the liberality of all sympathisers in this excellent scheme.

The "Home" will greatly benefit our 600 soldiers, as a resort for quiet enjoyment, recreation, and Christian instruction. At present, out of barracks, the public-houses (of which we have a very liberal supply) are the chief places where our soldiers spend their evenings, and consequently, get into endless mischief, as I and other officers can fully testify.

To commence this work about £1000 will be required, of which £380 has already been received. I am sure you will agree that a "Memorial" that will thus benefit the British Soldier, will be a touching tribute to him whose short but brilliant career terminated so gloriously, and whose early death caused such universal sorrow, not only in the Army, but throughout the length and breadth of England.

H. Marshall, late 9th Lancers,
Commanding 39th Reg. District, Dorchester.

E FEMALE LABOUR MARKET.

I a programme I have received from the Council of the National Conference for Protection of Girls, there are two subjects ed for consideration, on which I should to say a few words :—

he first is, "that in view of the over- vded condition of the female labour- ket, the Council expresses a strong opinion favour of throwing open to women, as ely as possible, all avenues of earning an est livelihood."

Vith all our deep and earnest desire to er the condition of women and girls, we t not close our eyes to the fact that men at the present time, suffering greatly for t of employment; and before we advo- "throwing open to women all avenues earning an honest livelihood," the subject uires to be looked at in all its bearings.

part from domestic employment, that e and peculiar domain for women, it ld seem as if Providence, by giving er capacities and greater strength to men, plainly indicated that they are to be the n workers, providing not only for them- es but for others. Wherever disturbing nences do not exist (such as the lavish and sh expenditure on strong drink, &c.), n generally accept this responsibility; the nger serve the weaker; and with this sideration before us, we see it is a deeper mity for a man than for a woman to be rived of remunerative employment. A int old writer has said, "There is a sense which it may be said that women have to men if they may live at all, and men have epend upon women as to whether or no r own lives shall be worth living." Men ild freely divide with women their silver gold, and women in return should give n something better than silver and gold. enever men, either by their vices or n inability to obtain work, cease to be dwinners for others, they lose the one g which specially ennobles themselves, lifts what they do into a region above e sordid toil.

fter years of thought, observation, and ulation, I am convinced that the crowd- up of the female labour-market mainly es from the fact that a great number of ried women prefer the more exciting life working abroad to the care of their ilies at home. Probably in one case in there really exists a necessity for the her to earn wages; but in most cases, a e extra thought and care, and making the t of things, would answer a great deal er.

Vhen we consider what an enormous iber of women are required as servants, llewomen, laundresses, &c., I believe if nothers of children were withdrawn from labour-market who need not, and ought to, be there, not only would there be ple employment and better pay for single women, but men also would have a better chance. All who visit the very poor will bear me out in saying that, for some time past, it has been less difficult to find some kind of employment for the wives than for the husbands. What we call "an overcrowded market" really arises from the fact that a large percentage of our home work is left entirely undone. No department in trade or commerce could stand such neglect as we find in our homes; and that this ruinous neglect should have fastened itself pre-eminently where children are born and brought up, constitutes for us a national calamity. An incalculable number of our English homes are simply nurseries of vice; and, as ever and anon a fresh page in the black book is turned over, revealing deeper and still deeper depths of sin, all we can say is, the seed has been sown, and is only bearing fruit after its own kind. Those mainly responsible for our dark catalogue of crime are the fathers and mothers who, for any reason—be it play or work—neglect the first duty of their lives.

I have persuaded numbers of women to remain at home, and carefully expend their husbands' wages. With very few exceptions, the material prosperity of the family was greatly increased by this change. When a mother leaves her home to use up her strength elsewhere, she at once exposes herself to the strongest temptation to expend what she earns in intoxicating drink. The physical exhaustion which, in the absence of properly cooked food, must follow her long-sustained exertions, makes it well nigh impossible for her to pass the open door of the public-house. If in any way the stream of wealth which now flows into these houses could be turned back to the homes, our labour difficulty would at once diminish; but as long as men and women persist in maintaining such surroundings of misery as we now so often see, they may be said literally to drive themselves into the public-houses. The excuse for children's rags, and for having nothing of any value in the house, is that "children is so destructive;" as no doubt they are, when left to themselves. The mother at home buys material and makes it up; she collects bits of furniture, and thus, becoming a customer to labour-making trades, she increases work for men. Our mothers should add to the demand on our labour-market, instead of contending with men for its spoils. In one neighbourhood where I was particularly successful in getting women to remain at home, it was not unusual, when I went to pay a bill, for the tradesman to say, "We often say we ought to let you have your things for nothing, you have got us so many customers."

Whilst the ear of the public is open to what has to be said on social questions, let us not fail to reiterate that England expects not only her soldiers and sailors, but also her fathers and mothers, to do their duty. We will hope that the effort now put forth in such earnest to improve the moral and social position of our young people will be so blessed of God that a better generation of fathers and mothers may be in store for us; but if not—if home duties are to be neglected in the future as they have been in the past—we fear that the places of our rescued ones will all too soon be again filled. As long as our domestic life continues to represent probably the worst done work in the country, the result must be an unfailing supply of miserable children sent out into the world.

When the men of Jericho complained to Elisha that "their water was naught," and their "ground barren," he did not address himself to the streams: he took his cruse of salt round to the spring, and emptied it at the fountain head, and "the waters were healed."

I will pass on to the next proposal which seems to me to ask for reconsideration: "That every effort should be used to afford opportunity of recreation and enjoyment to girls who have their evenings out."

The words "recreation" and "enjoyment" admit of various constructions. If, as used here, they mean bringing cheerful surroundings about our girls whilst they are engaged in rational and useful occupations, then few things could be more desirable; but if they mean an effort to introduce habitually what has been termed "got-up excitement," then let us pause and consider. Let us remember how the day has been passed. Most girls are engaged to do one special kind of work; this gives monotony to their lives. At the same time, that the employer may gain as much as possible out of their work, they are required to keep up their utmost speed: thus they have really to endure both monotony and excitement. By the time they leave their work, their strength is well nigh spent. We should greatly add to their dangers if we cultivated in them a habit of depending on fresh and stronger excitement to renew the zest of life. What they need is quiet employment, made interesting by the consideration that it may be turned to account both for the present and the future. Most girls with whom we have to do, will eventually take the place of wives and mothers. We should talk freely to them of this, and encourage them in every possible way to imitate the bees and ants in wisely laying up stores both of goods and knowledge.

The kindest thing that one created being can do for another is to assist him, as far as possible, in qualifying himself for whatever in life he may be called to do. Certain positions must be filled, and the question of questions is, "Shall we prepare ourselves to conquer the difficulties inseparable from our post in life, or shall we leave ourselves to be conquered by them?" Victory or defeat are involved in the answer to this question. One of the main causes of failure in domestic life is that the majority of girls do conquer the difficulties of their monotonous occupations—the shop, the workroom, the factory, &c.; but when they come to take their place in their own homes, they know so little of the best modes of management that their lives seem to them one long mortification and failure. All this is apt to cause an insatiable desire to return to the employment of which they have made themselves mistresses, and they delude themselves into the idea that their money will do their homes more good than their own stupid work. On the other hand, a well-qualified wife and mother, primed with resources for all emergencies, will derive more enjoyment in one day in noting the triumph of her own good management, than she could get from any amount of forced excitement.

The rooms provided for evening resort should, if possible, contain a piano. Singing lessons given a few times a week would be a great attraction. To teach girls to sing is setting them up with a life-pleasure.

We cannot turn our thoughts upon amusement without sighing for the country, with its sweet air and simple pleasures. Our London walls and roofs and ceilings have much to answer for morally as well as physically. Our beautifully-arranged suburban gardens are said to be an object of envy to the London poor. Could we not share this great luxury with our poor pent-up workers more than we have hitherto done? Most houses of business now close early on one day in the week. Can we think of anything which would give so much pleasure as opening our gardens to receive from twelve to twenty girls at a time? The cost of travelling would be very small. For a few hours they would be brought in contact with exactly the kind of things they most of all need—fresh air, external beauty, kind words of sympathy and cheer. Through the eye, they would have a chance of catching the charm of good manners which words cannot teach. Such visits, repeated perhaps three or four times, whilst the long summer evenings last, would probably leave an impression which would never be effaced. I know families who have long done something of this kind. In speaking of it, a lady said, "O those hoyden girls! how they tried us at first! but this only made us feel more than ever how deeply they needed our help; and now we reckon the day they come one of the pleasantest in the week."

It may be desirable occasionally to gather people together in masses, but in doing this we do not get to know them any better; and as personal contact is the main thing needed to effect the changes we desire, I have thought that money and time might be better expended. When we gather round us but twelve, fourteen, or twenty, we soon learn to know them individually, and care for them as individuals, and get a kind of influence over them, which they in their turn will distribute to others.

We must all admit that we have a very difficult question before us. Our hearts would fail us if we could not rest in the assurance that "with God all things are possible;" and we have need to cry mightily to Him that He will direct us to such plans as shall be in entire accordance with his will. Probably no large, all-embracing scheme will be found—at least we need not wait for it, but each look out daily to see what is "laid at our gate;" and when the chronicles o these times appear, may it be found recorded, as it was of Judah of old, "The children of England prevailed because they relied on the Lord God of their fathers."

MARY BAYLY.

ANNUAL GOOSE FAIR AT NOTTINGHAM.—Mr. Henry Johnson, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Nottingham, is engaged in organising a band of workers for special evangelistic effort at this great fair which takes place on October 1, 2, and 3. The Open-air Mission, of London, are sending Mr. W. E. Bailey, of Peterboro', to assist in the work. As a large quantity of tracts, books, and leaflets will be required for distribution to the showmen, pleasure-seekers, and others, Mr. Johnson will be glad to receive parcels from friends who have it in their power to help. The Association is located at Morley House, Mansfield-road, Nottingham.

CHILDREN AND THE CHURCH.

AN important and deeply interesting question has been raised in the correspondence columns of The Christian World on the subject of the kind of teaching needed in Sunday-schools to secure the development of spiritual life in children, and their adherence to the Churches. It is stated that not more than one in ten, on an average, pass from the school into Church membership. If this be a correct estimate, and we fear it is, it is evident that the Sunday-school is not the seed-plot of the Church, though no doubt it ought to be.

It has been suggested as a remedy for this state of things, that the general teaching given to children that they are "lost," and need "conversion," because they are born "totally depraved," and members of "the kingdom of darkness," should be replaced by the teaching that, as children of Christian parents, they are already "members of the spiritual Church of Christ," and "children of God." The work of the teachers is set forth to be rather for their spiritual training than for their conversion.

We cannot agree with this suggestion, inasmuch as we find no such statement in the Word of God, that children of godly parents are born children of God. The truth of Psalm li. 5: "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me," holds true of every child, and we shall gain nothing by ignoring the fact. We cannot admit the statement that "children are born in the kingdom of heaven." The child of Christian parents needs to be born "from above," as much as any other child. The Holy Spirit is not transmitted, but is imparted: "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John i. 12—13).

In saying this, we desire in no way to undervalue "the power of Christian example set by those parents and guardians who are living lives of faith and love, and reflecting the beauties of Christ's character." Such lives have an inestimable influence on the youth of our land. But influence is not spiritual life. We believe that if parents will dedicate their children to the Lord from their birth, and train them for Him, rather than for the world, the result of such faith and prayer will be seen in the children. They may never know the need of conversion, the Holy Spirit having been given them, in answer to prayer, at a very early age.

Allusion has been made to the two references by our Lord to little children, as endorsing the view that children are already in the kingdom. Was he not rather using them as illustrations of simplicity, trustfulness, obedience, and dependence, saying: "Except ye become as little children ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven;" and again, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." What we want is not so much a "reconstruction of the theology of childhood" as the reversion of the teachers' minds to the theology of the Bible, and its adaptability to childhood. The truths of the presence of sin, the power of sin, and deliverance from sin by Jesus Christ, need to be taught just as fully to the children, but they need to be taught in a fresher, simpler way. Many of the stock phrases in use in Sunday-school teaching have lost their power and meaning by the constant reiteration of them. The mind of a child is largely composed of love and trust, and these faculties have to be laid hold of and entwined round the person and words of the Lord Jesus.

Then, again, profession of faith and love Him should be accepted as genuine by teacher until proved to be otherwise by t child's conduct and character. Teachers us to study individual character more, to enab them more skilfully to apply the fitti statements of the Word of God to the nee of the children. Whole-hearted devotion the work, prayerful preparation, and improv ment in method of work, will accompli much more in our Sunday-schools than a change in our theology.

Nine-tenths of our scholars have little no helpful home influence, and here li our chief difficulty. Parents who are able train their children for heaven themselv will not, as a rule, send them to Sunda school, so that we have amongst us those w need most the influence and help that teacher can personally throw around them.

Improvement of method in teaching mig be obtained if Sunday-school teachers wou make up their minds to adopt a unifor system of lessons, such as the Internation Series, and would attend a teachers' cl once a week, to have the lesson gone throu by the most eminent teacher that can secured. In America, thousands of teach of all denominations meet, from four to f every Saturday, to hear the lesson giv
One group attend for instruction in infa class-teaching, the other group for the ol classes. The effect on the churches is v marked, in the passing of the larger numb of the senior scholars into Church memb ship on their profession of faith.

GOSPEL WORK AT THE WELCOME HOM

GOD is still blessing our work among

A STORY OF LYDIA MONTEFIORE.*

ONE of the agents of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews was the means in the hand of the Divine Spirit of leading to Christ the aunt of Sir Moses Montefiore, and this little book gives an interesting and instructive account of the way in which she was led, the methods of the missionary, her intense desire that all her relatives should be saved, among whom was her dear nephew, Sir Moses Montefiore.

On one occasion Sir Moses paid her a visit when she was ill. Then she bore noble testimony for Jesus. She had the courage to tell her nephew how precious Jesus was to her soul, and how she was waiting for Him to come and take her to Himself. This was more than Sir Moses could stand from his aged aunt. Although he had only been a few minutes in her presence, he at once lifted his hat and disappeared from the room.

After this, and after much waiting upon the Lord in prayer for wisdom, she wrote to her nephew the following letter :—

My Dear Nephew,—In consideration of all your kindness towards me, it is impossible for me to pass over in silence our last momentary interview, afforded me doubtless by yourself from the same affectionate disposition which you have ever manifested, without expressing my hearty regret at the untoward circumstance of your sudden withdrawal from my apartment.

Aware of the short opportunity there is left me by Divine Providence of thanking you for all the kind interest you have taken in my welfare, I desire to do it now most cordially, and to assure you that my heart's desire and prayer for you is that you may be saved by that only name of Jesus, the Messiah, by which alone man may be saved, even by Him whom you blindly reject. I am aware you would hardly thank me for praying for you in that name, because the veil of unbelief is still upon you, as it has been these eighteen centuries upon our poor, benighted people of the house of Israel, for having crucified their own Messiah, the Lord of glory. Nevertheless, I feel it my duty and privilege to bear testimony for the holy name of my Saviour, whom I expect soon to meet in the regions above, where He is gone to prepare a place for me, and for you also, if you do not persist in your unbelief; but search, as I did, and that honestly and ardently, the Scriptures of Moses, the Psalms, and the prophets, which testify of his passion, death and resurrection.

I remain, with much love and gratitude,
Your affectionate, aged aunt,
Lydia Montefiore.
Marseilles, March 16, 1857.

A few months after, she wrote to him once again, in the hope that he might receive what she had written, and that her testimony might lead to his conversion.

My Dear Nephew,—I was much surprised to find my letter returned by you without even paying the postage. I could not have supposed that you were capable of manifesting such a bad spirit towards your poor old aunt, merely because she had followed the dictates of her conscience, which God has been pleased to enlighten by his Spirit; and from that time, I can assure you, I have been happier than ever I was before my baptism, because I know I am in the fortress of Jehovah, the ark of the covenant made to our forefathers, and ratified by the Lord Christ, our true Messiah, when He cried on the cross, "It is finished." This is the only sure hiding-place, where I hope you, and all revolted Israel may hide from the wrath of an offended God. Search the Scriptures as I have :—

"I once was blind, but now I see,
Was lost, but now am found."

I place my trust in Jehovah, my Redeemer, who counts me worthy to suffer for his sake, and whilst I live, I shall not cease to pray to Him to save your soul, and I conjure you to be reconciled to God, through his Son. Be ready, for the hour may be near. He will come like a thief in the night. Repent, repent, repent! He will judge us all according to our works.

I still remain, your affectionate aunt,
Lydia Montefiore (your Father's Sister).
Marseilles, October 23, 1857.

The author here says :—"Her prayers for him were frequent and earnest, and she would often remark 'that it was her belief the Lord would answer her petitions in his conversion, and show his salvation to all her relatives.' Let us hope that her earnest and importune prayers have been answered. God alone knows what passed in that great man's mind, ere he entered into the presence of Him who knows the secrets of all hearts."

From the day of her conversion until she passed in triumph to glory, we see in her the repose of Christian faith and the struggle of Christian love for souls. "I shall never forget," says the author, "the happy hours I have passed with her. She was not merely satisfied with the evidences of Christianity, and with the proofs that Jesus is the true Messiah, but deeply felt her own sinfulness, and need of a Saviour. She felt she had to do with a Holy God, and that her life had not been in accordance with his Divine will. She was a Jewess, and belonged to a Jewish aristocratic family; and had moved in the wealthier walks of Jewish society, but she felt she was a sinner, and needed a saviour, and as such she went to the Lord Jesus Christ, and as He came to seek and to save that which was lost, He had mercy upon her even at the eleventh hour, filled her with joy and peace in believing, and made her to know the comfort and consolation of the Gospel. With emphasis she would often say: 'I am a great sinner, but I believe in a great Saviour.' Such was her earnestness of heart and mind, and so deeply was she effected by the precious truths of the Gospel of Christ, that several times I have been obliged to pause in my conversation, or in the reading of the Word of God with her, to let her weep, and often we have wept together."

This little book ought to be read by all lovers of Israel and all Jewish inquirers.

A DAY FOR UNITED HUMILIATION.

SIR,—I was glad to see in last week's Christian that you had set apart a day for prayer and humiliation. We have cause to humble ourselves on account of our "national sins," and, as we are approaching a crisis in our history, it has struck me for some little time, should not we women, who are "watchers" on the occasion, be engaged on our "watch-towers," giving heed unto our blessed Saviour's admonition, "Watch and Pray," a week before the General Election—not mixing ourselves up with party politics, but praying—as your correspondent advocates that candidates may be found who are supporters of Bills relating to "Sunday Observance," the "Criminal Law Amendment," &c. Surely through the Prayer Unions of our Christian Associations, &c., we might be zealously employed in holding a "mission week" before the din of voices is heard through the length and breadth of the land. We can pray that the Lord may "prevent us in all our doings with his gracious favour." Should any of your readers sympathise with me in this wish, I shall be obliged to them to let me have a line direct, in order that we may endeavour to create an interest in the subject in our different neighbourhoods.

I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,
K. I. Goode (widow of Dean Goode).
Holme Lea, Abbey-road.

BAPTISM OF A JAPANESE.—On Sunday, Aug. 23, an educated young Japanese physician was baptised in Christ Church, Berlin. With clearness and much depth of feeling he made confession of his faith in Christ, and answered the questions put to him by the officiating pastor. He has since then returned to his own land, there to labour in the spirit of Christ. This is the second baptism of a Japanese which has taken place in this church.

HOOKS AND EYES.*

THE TWO HONEYSUCKLES.

I AM perfectly sure of it, that no one can walk in conscious communion with the Father and the Son and be a miserable Christian, a joyless Christian. Keep in the light, dear readers, and you must be happy in the light, and others will see it and glorify God. See the difference in vegetable life of light and shade by this incident, which only took place a fortnight ago. I was walking with my host in his lovely garden at Clapton. He had no idea I was writing these "Hooks and Eyes," so all unconsciously he showed me this most apposite subject for one. Said he, "Just look here at the difference between these two honeysuckles—sun, and no sun in the light, in the shade. Observe what a mass of flowers this one has, and what rich colour is on them"—picking a piece and presenting it me to look at—"it is always like this."

"Ah, yes!" I observed, "all the caprifolium tribe thrive best in the sun, and the more they are exposed to it, the faster they grow, and the fresher the flowers. Just what we ought to do as Christians, face the sun!"

My friend gave a smile of pleasure as he said, "True, true. And now let us see what you can find in the other honeysuckle to draw a spiritual lesson," and, walking across the lawn, he showed me the opposite woodbine, feebly only climbing the luxurious apple-tree, its kind supporter. "This one was planted exactly at the same time many years ago; it has never flourished, because it is in the shade; and, see, there is only a sickly blossom here and there!" "Yes, see, too," I exclaimed, "it has managed to collect all the green fly in the neighbourhood, I should think!" as I espied its poor stem thickly coated with that gardener's pest. "Just like the poor foolish believer, who will not cut away the shade of the world and the flesh, so discontent, and fretting, and other 'green flies' seems to sap all the healthy nourishment from his soul."

Readers, do let us cut off all the "shades" that we know are keeping back the full rays of the Sun of Righteousness from our souls, and let Him pour in, to dispel this sickly state of things, that we may become happy, joyful, shining Christians, and so fulfil our calling, instead of disgusting the would-be-Christian with our caricature of Christianity.

* Hooks and Eyes is the title of a new book which Miss Leakey, Exeter, wishes to publish shortly, if friends will send her orders at once.

THESE DANGEROUS DAYS.

EARTH'S sorrows are increasing; heard ye not
That stifled wail? With famines, earthquakes, breath
Of plague, and din of war, she travaileth
Till now; and now—as each most loathsome spot
Of social life by that fierce flash was caught,
And the thin guise that hardly covereth
Is sternly reft—what hell-traps yawn beneath!
Oh, haste—make straight paths for their feet, whose lot
Is helplessness! Each fair and tender one Must "walk more warily in these dangerous days,"
Till heaven that way of holiness upraise,
Where simple wayfarers nor stray, nor fall,
Nor any ravenous beasts go up thereon,—
Then they shall sorrow never more at all. W. S.

THE GEORGE SMITH OF COALVILLE FUND has reached the gratifying amount of £1465 1s. 10d., but we hope that there are still many more who will contribute something out of their abundance to secure comfort for the old age of one who has done so much for the comfort of those who had no other friend. With great self-sacrifice Mr. Smith has toiled to relieve the poor children of our brick-fields, canal-boats, tents, and vans from the condition of white slavery under which these little ones groaned, until be compelled Parliament to hear their "bitter cry."

Notes and Comments.

THE French Protestants in London intend to celebrate the bi-centenary of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes by a meeting in the city. It is expected that the Lord Mayor will consent to act as president of the committee.

A gentleman who describes himself as "an experienced beneficed priest, who for obvious reasons cannot advertise his name," advertises the fact that he "intends shortly to resign a lovely parish where there is no work." As the population of the parish is stated to be from 600 to 1400, one would think it would not be difficult to find work, if the "beneficed priest" had any desire to follow in the footsteps of the Master who went about doing good.

Mr. Mitchell Henry, M.P., has addressed a remarkable letter to the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, and the layman seems to have the best of it. In explaining the reasons which influenced his refusal to join the Nationalist party, Mr. Mitchell Henry alludes to the doctrines of that party as being "antagonistic to the laws of God, as your Grace has hitherto expounded them," and goes on to say, "The outrages, the murders, and the decay of religion in Ireland have filled the whole world with grief, and caused her best friends to bow their heads in shame;" and points out to the Bishop that the resolution recently passed in Galway, that no priest in that place was "worthy to take the chair" at a Nationalist meeting, "cannot be accepted as anything else than an intimation that the clergy are expected in future to follow, not lead, the consciences of the people."

A few weeks ago we stated that the priests in Ireland were being borne away like straws by the stream which they are no longer able to stem, and every day's events illustrate more and more forcibly the opinion that "the decay in religion," to which Mr. Henry refers, is not altogether confined to the laity.

"I recognise the Bible as the one sole guide for everything in both public and private life." So said Earl Carnarvon, a few days ago; and if all the members of the Cabinet resolved to follow closely the same guide, one might have less occasion to fear for the future of England. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," and if our nation's rulers unreservedly followed the divine teachings of Christ, we should have less complaining in our streets. At present, however, policy and diplomacy have hustled righteousness out of doors, and, therefore, the idle ploughshare is being beaten into a weapon of war.

A Ritualistic editor has discovered that there is a good deal to be said in favour of liturgical confession and absolution, in cases where penitents are in "Puritan regions where they cannot obtain the services of a confessor.". If they make their individual confession at home fully before service, and then mentally refer back the liturgical confession to that, it is reasonable to believe that the liturgical absolution will avail for it." After this hair-splitting, how sweet some lines of Cowper's hymn sound in their broad Gospel simplicity:—

> "Where'er they seek Thee Thou art found,
> And every place is hallowed ground."

Mr. J. Spencer Curwen has nearly completed a second series of his "Studies in Worship Music," which will be published in the autumn. This volume will carry on the topics started in the first, which was issued five years ago. There will be several descriptive chapters on music at the Chapel Royal, St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey; and the employment of music by the Russian Church, the Moravians, the Welsh Calvinists, the Salvation Army, &c., will be treated. An important section will deal with German Protestant Church music. In the preparation of this Mr. Curwen has paid several visits to Germany. The St. Cecilia movement in the Roman Catholic Church will also be noticed, and there will be a chapter on the relation of music to Sunday-schools, and another on its place in the curriculum of theological schools.

A correspondent "regrets that in rules for dealing with cholera, given in a recent issue, the mischievous suggestion of 'rum or brandy,' added to hot tea, should have been inserted." We agree with him as to the undesirability of using those remedies, but did not feel at liberty to omit it when reproducing the circular issued by the English, French, and American surgeons.

The Mark Lane Express tells us that the corn harvest has been in most places favourably gathered, and in every division of Great Britain is above the average. Spite of low prices, the wheat harvest has added to the wealth of the nation a capital sum of £13,569,600. Let us not also forget that with the old corn exhausted, famine would have stared us in the face but for this new supply. "HIS MERCY ENDURETH FOR EVER."

In an article in this month's Quiver on "The Drift of Evolution," a fact is quoted that an American monkey, an Ateles, on getting drunk on brandy could by no means be induced to do it a second time, on which the writer, the Rev. William Guest, says this would not prove aptitudes of man in common with monkeys, but aptitudes altogether different. The Nonconformist reviewer says of the article:—"Mr. Guest, we are glad to see, deprecates either boasting or fear in relation to Evolution, and maintains that our age is not without signs that a union is approaching between scientist and theologian, and that the late deplorable hostility is passing away."

Sir Lyon Playfair, as the President of the British Association, set an excellent example last week at Aberdeen. His inaugural address on "Science and the Common Weal" was admirably practical and popular. This is as it should be. If the non-scientific residents in a town are encouraged to attend the evening meetings of the Association, they should have addresses that interest them. At Southport, two years ago, an opening address was delivered, concerning which it is not too much to say that it was unintelligible to nine-tenths of the audience. It is to be hoped that Sir Lyon Playfair's example will be followed.

The Committee of the Church Missionary Society have decided to hold a series of meetings simultaneously throughout the country extending from Feb. 8 to Feb. 12, 1886. The purpose of these meetings will not be to raise funds by collections, but to arouse a more profound sense of the vast importance of the Society's work. The committee wishes it to be plainly understood that the design of these meetings is distinctly spiritual. They say:—"We do not desire that stress should be laid so much upon the details of missionary work as upon our Divine Master's parting charge to his Church. We want to see the missionary spirit universally diffused. We are painfully conscious that even supporters of missionary work are greatly lacking in earnest and continued prayer for the vigorous maintenance and expansion of that work. We want, therefore, our friends to be doubly stimulated to that unceasing prayer, every petition of which is only another name for increased power of self-sacrifice." The suggestion is that one hundred centres should be chosen for the meetings, but perhaps the number may swell to many more. If the movement is as successful as it ought to be, all Christians will have reason to rejoice.

Evangelical Christendom says that the trouble given by the Romanising element in the Church of England is continually making itself felt in some way or other. The evil has become inveterate, and the question is, How is it to be reached? A great revival of evangelical life would be the best of all remedies. Against that the "Catholic Revival" would not be able to hold its ground.

The Wesleyans have taken up the question of Rescue and Prevention with their characteristic zeal. Dr. Bowman Stephenson has intimated that the Home in Bonner-road, Cambridge Heath, will receive, at any hour of the day or night, any girl who may want shelter. A Girls' Parlour will also be established in the East-end of London, affording a place of meeting, refreshment, and social improvement to young women after their hours of labour. A still more important step will be taken in the formation of a Ladies' Association, with members all over the country, for the purpose of looking after young women who may remove from one locality to another. This Association will work much on the same lines as the Girls' Friendly Society, but, of course, with a less elaborate machinery at first, and without any denominational restriction. Placards have also been prepared to be hung up in schools or chapels, giving instructions to young women as to how they ought to proceed if they are leaving home for a situation elsewhere. All the points of the plan seem to have been carefully thought out, and it promises to work most effectively for good.

Preaching the other day at a Golden Jubilee, with Pontifical High Mass, at which the newly-elected Archbishop of Dublin officiated, the Rev. Dr. Donnelly said that "their ever welcome Archbishop appeared for the first time to offer up the sacrifice of the Immaculate Lamb of God."

The Ritualistic movement has done much to obscure the differences between the Church of Rome and the Protestant Church, not only by the prominent position in which it has placed colour and sound, but also by its leaders' adoption of doctrines essentially Romish, and a few plain and unmistakable utterances like Dr. Donnelly's will not do any harm if they serve to recall attention to one great and vital distinction.

Protestantism is based upon belief in the finished work of Christ, Romanism rests upon the substitution of the repeated sacrifice of the altar for the one sacrifice of Calvary.

At the installation of the new Roman atholic Archbishop of Dublin this difference ras, perhaps unconsciously, made clear by ne preacher, who said, after speaking of hrist as ascending "the altar of the cross," So the Great High Priest finished his own ersonal work . . . but Jesus Christ, the reat High Priest, Pastor, and Bishop, is so or ever, because He carries on his work by eans of his own Church."

The two sermons contained references to ifferences no less striking, if less vital, as r instance, that portion in which the reacher assured the Archbishop that the ssembled priests would pray for him to St. ridget and other saints, "set in the glory of eaven by Irish faith," as well as to St. oseph and the Virgin Mary; or the more emarkable words with which the preacher at ne Installation concluded, "So that having overned this diocese for many years to his wn sanctification and ours, and to the reater glory of God, he may pass into the oly of Holies, to be enthroned and crowned y the Great High Priest Jesus Christ, and make intercession for us."

The Daily News correspondent has given graphic description of the depopulation of ne of the Shetland Isles. Fifty years ago ne island was occupied by over a thousand appy, if poor, people, with tiny holdings nd flocks. A Dr. Maclean had only a nineen years' lease of the island, but he wished be the possessor of a deer forest, so he rved notices of eviction wholesale, and, in even days, seven hundred and fifty people ere driven out of the place, to make their ay to the large cities, or to emigrate as they est could, and the island was thus "cleared," ne cottages being levelled with the ground, ne gardens and plots rooted up, and deer one being at liberty to roam over the fields.

Strange as it may appear, a few years fterwards the cruel landlord lost his sight, nen he got into difficulties, and shortly fterwards lost his reason, the superstitious eople who had been so ruthlessly treated eeing in all the troubles and trials only direct ghteous retribution.

After a narrative like this one can hardly onder at the Crofters' agitation, with its y of "Down with deer forests;" but in any ase it seems somewhat of an anomaly that rge portions of the Highlands should be iven up to wild animals, whilst in Glasgow early seventy-five per cent. of the population are living in dwellings of only one room. hat misery and vice are spreading is only hat may be expected as the natural result f such a state of things. For every acre of round left untilled under such circumtances, or kept from flocks of sheep and erds of cattle, a man's heart is left open to ne evil weeds of Communism.

It is painful, though not surprising, to learn om a leading New York paper, quoted in he Pall Mall Gazette, that the congregation f Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, is about to ispense with the services of Henry Ward eecher. In this gifted preacher and orator hey have discovered some grave mental and oral defects. He is becoming more eccenric as he gets older, and his flock "are in onstant apprehension of new and dangerous reaks on his part." He is also always nancially behind, and his capacity for getting nto debt increases with his years and the amount of his income. The congregation, however, will be merciful to Mr. Beecher, who is now approaching his seventy-second birthday, and will not dismiss him abruptly, but, in the phraseology of the New York journalist, "eliminate him by degrees."

The Etoile Belge states that, according to official information received from the Congo, the report which recently reached Cape Town of a massacre by cannibals of white men at certain stations on the Congo belonging to the International Association, is entirely devoid of foundation.

We would call the special attention of our readers to the forthcoming Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in Glasgow, from October 6—8. It is very desirable that there should be a large attendance of members and friends of the Alliance from various parts of the country. The programme will be found in our list of Forthcoming Meetings.

The London correspondent of The Western Daily Mercury says:—

> "Nothing can be more grossly unfair than The Times' report of the Jarrett case. All the points in Mr. Russell's cross-examination of Mrs. Armstrong are either slurred or missed altogether, while everything that tells against the defendants' case—even the cheers and interruptions of the public—is made absurdly prominent. I don't write this in the interest of one party or another, but in that of justice. Cooked reports like that of The Times are absolutely worthless, and the journalist who admits them in his paper does not know his business. The Daily News is always an honourable exception to the practice of partisan reporting, and The Standard's account, though abbreviated, is fair. But The Times is simply deceiving its readers."

We do not think either The Daily News or The Standard deserves the praise here accorded. We have shown the untruthfulness of The Standard's report of the demonstration. The animus of The Daily News may be gathered from its description of Mrs. Armstrong as a representative British matron of the working class. In her cross-examination she admitted that she had been fined at different times for drunkenness, for assault, and for using obscene language. It is neither complimentary nor fair to the working-class to put her forward as their representative.

Anyone who was present and heard the conversation of those who cheered or hissed (without rebuke from the magistrate), would feel that these interruptions were no expression of the feeling of respectable London citizens.

The Spectator, while this case is sub judice, prints an article explaining the crime of abduction. In illustration of the fact that the absence of corrupt motive or the alleged presence of a good motive is no answer to the charge, it cites a case in which the abduction of a girl, for the purpose of saving her from a convent, was punished with eighteen months' imprisonment with hard labour. One purpose of this article would seem to be to suggest this punishment for the parties at present accused; and is a breach of journalistic decorum in the paper which makes it and in those which quote it.

We are glad to see the religious Press taking a truer view of the position. Thus The Rock asks "whether this prosecution is to be the sole result of the righteous zeal of the Government. At a time when the conscience of the nation has been shocked at the discovery that crimes of the foulest description have long been allowed to pass unpunished, is the Public Prosecutor going to content himself with placing in the dock those who have exposed the evil, while the criminals go scot free? Shame on such protection of vice!"

The Methodist Times says:—

> "There is one question which it is already high time to ask. Do the Government intend to prosecute The Pall Mall Gazette Commission and nobody else? Are the public money and all the resources of the State to be used in attacking those who have exposed an infamous traffic, while those who engage in the traffic, and find their base pleasures in the traffic, are to go scot free? Is this even-handed justice? Is this the way to fill the guilty with terror and to encourage the virtuous? We are sorry to pain Mr. Poland, but it will be necessary to 'rake up' a great many things before we have done. It is intensely desired and believed in some very influential quarters that this prosecution will suppress the agitation. There never was a greater mistake. Mr. Stead and his friends may have broken the law, and they may, in consequence, have to pay the penalty. They are not people to shrink even from that. But the agitation will go on, more energetically, more enthusiastically, than ever. This is not the end, but the beginning."

The Freeman did not say without reason that "Journals which hitherto have written with dignity of their opponents, and been courteous in their opposition of opinions they disliked, have revealed a coarse rage in their attack on this reform which can only be accounted for by their writers having been defeated in their unholy passions."

Dr. Moon (who has just returned to England) fears that an erroneous impression may be conveyed by the paragraph on "Literature for the Blind," inserted in our issue of the 3rd instant, and therefore wishes to state that his present stereotyped plates at Brighton are still available for embossing the Bible in his type for the blind, although great care and attention are required to keep them in repair, which necessarily incurs considerable expense. The new electrotyped plates for the Bible will be of a permanent character, thus avoiding constant outlay for repairs.

The latest issue of the Author's uniform edition of Rev. William Arthur's works is "The People's Day: An Appeal against a French Sunday" (Bemrose, 1s.). The most eloquent, pungent, and powerful defence of the Sabbath we have ever read. We hope our readers will possess themselves of it, read it attentively, and scatter it broadcast.

HOP-PICKERS.—Rev. Charles Snell, Mayfield, Sussex, asks help to give free teas to hop-pickers. We shall be happy to receive contributions.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a blessing on Mr. Sheaver's work in Western Australia.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway on September 19 to 21, at Poulton, Gloucestershire.

SUNDAY SERVICES.—Rev. Veryman Trimming is prepared to conduct services in London, free of charge, for any evangelical Church. Address: Christian Herald Office, 1, Bakehouse-court, St. Paul's, E.C.

BRISTOL.—Services were commenced, on September 2, to celebrate the jubilee of the chapel, and the eleventh anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. W. J. Mayers, and the enlargement of the structure. At the early morning gathering an address was delivered by Rev. [illegible], and in the evening, after a tea-meeting, Rev. Francis Tucker, late of Camden-road Chapel, preached a sermon from the text, Acts xxii. 11. The works comprise—first, the reconstruction and enlargement of the vestries and class-room at the end of the chapel; and, secondly, the renovation and decoration of the interior of the chapel itself.—Freeman. [Our next will contain a drawing of the chapel.]

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

THE Bishop of Bedford has addressed the following pastoral letter to the clergy of East London :—

My Dear Brother,—You will recollect that, in addressing the Missioners in St Paul's, before the Mission which was held in the East of London in November last, I urged that the subject of Purity should be kept prominently in view during the Mission, and that associations of men should be formed, for the purpose of aiding all who would join them in leading pure lives and protecting the purity of others. I am thankful to know that in various parishes the subject was brought very earnestly before the men, and that many responded warmly to the offer of help thus held out to them.

We little thought at that time what a fierce and terrible light would be poured upon this subject within the course of a few months. The exposure of the hideous enormities hidden beneath the surface of our outward decency of life must very keenly affect us who are so deeply interested in the moral and spiritual welfare of our people. I confess myself one of those who, while believing entirely in the earnestness of purpose and honest desire to crush a frightful system of crime, with which that exposure was undertaken, yet regard with dread the effect upon the nation of a largely increased familiarity with the details of sensual sin. I cannot but fear that in thousands of cases that which should only arouse horror and indignation may be made to minister to prurient curiosity. Yet many good and wise men, and among them our own Bishop, believe firmly that the good which will be done by the firing of the public conscience will far more than outweigh the evil which I have spoken of. I pray, and you, I know, will pray, that it may be so. At any rate we can all do something to secure the good and to lessen the evil. And it is because I feel that there is a very loud call to those on whom lies the tremendous responsibility of the "cure of souls" to be up and doing, that I write this letter.

Let me point out to you, first of all, a very important consideration. The dreadful things that have been told in The Pall Mall Gazette are, of course, exceptional. They are the extreme outcome of a hideous sensuality. But, as the Archbishop has well reminded us, they are simply the final outcome of ordinary immorality; they are its efflorescence. It is ordinary immorality against which we must fight. It is of little use to lop off a ghastly excrescence here and there. We must get at the root of the evil. Again, I do not believe legislative enactments will affect very much. I am deeply thankful for the comparative stringency of the Act just passed by the expiring Parliament. We must take care that it is not a dead letter. But the crimes dealt with by that Act are most difficult of discovery, and of course secresy is one main condition of their possibility. I believe, therefore, that the power of punishing the miscreants whose evil deeds have been unearthed will have but little effect, compared with that to be looked for from a higher moral tone and improved public opinion.

The Church is surely bound, quite apart from any special pressure of present circumstances, to take the lead in creating and maintaining such higher moral tone and improved public opinion. As, in the case of Temperance, we want not alone to prevent or punish drunken brawls and riots, but to make the people a sober people, ashamed of the degradation of drunkenness; so in the case of purity our aim must be to inspire a horror and hatred, not alone of gross outbreaks of unrestrained lust, but of all sorts and shades of impurity. We want to teach our people the peril of every approach of sensualism, and to lead them to aim at purity of thought and word and deed. I need not urge the duties which the Bishop of the Diocese has himself set before you. You will not fail to show all attention to his counsels. I wholly agree with the advice he gives as to the practical steps which may be taken. Let me only, in the briefest manner, set before you the following thoughts :—

(1) Let us earnestly and plainly address gatherings of men on this subject, speaking boldly, reverently, lovingly.

(2) Let us band our young men together in brotherhoods or associations, in which the aiming at a life of purity shall be a main feature.

(3) Let us do all in our power to foster and secure a higher tone of purity in our schools, and especially in our boarding schools for boys.

(4) Let us teach very distinctly the sacredness of marriage, and make our celebration of marriage as reverent and impressive as possible.

(5) Let us inculcate a chivalrous care for the protection of women and children from all that can injure their purity.

(6) Let us promote Vigilance Committees for the enforcement of the law, and the purification of our parishes and streets.

(7) Let us teach always the true foundation of all purity of living, and strive more and more earnestly to bring souls to Christ, that they may be set free from the bondage of their own evil passions.

Your affectionate friend and brother,
W. WALSHAM BEDFORD
(Bishop Suffragan for East London).

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

BY T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.

MY latest party of young voyageurs to Canada was a very small one, only forty-five girls, all told. They sailed last Thursday in the Sarmatian (Allan Line), from Liverpool, under the care of two earnest Christian workers, one of whom has been a helper in our work for thirteen years, and the other was herself a poor girl taken into the Village Home, trained as a pupil teacher, and then advanced from point to point, until at length she is looked upon as a valued colleague in our fair Canadian settlement.

Our work of emigration this year has not quite come up to our own expectations, but through the goodness of God we have been able to send out, during the seven months of the year which constitute the "emigration season," no less than 400 boys and girls, all thoroughly equipped and trained in our Village Home, Ilford, and Boys' Homes, London, for the work of their life in the purer atmosphere and happier surroundings of the dominion.

Of course we have had difficulties to contend with. Who could attempt work of this kind without encountering many? Some of these had been anticipated; others were the more embarrassing because quite unexpected. But through the goodness of God our hope has not been dimmed, nor our courage diminished by these temporary obstacles. Rather have we taken them as a proof, not only that the work was being tested, but that we ourselves, the workers, were being closely sifted with a view to greater usefulness. God grant that it may be so!

Not a few of the 400 dear boys and girls who went forth this year to Canada have been true and real followers of the Saviour—children who have shown in a hundred ways in their home life the thoroughness and reality of the change which Divine grace had begun in their young hearts. All have been the subjects of much and earnest prayer, and I have no doubt that in that larger company, which will one day welcome us on the brighter and better shore, there will be many a dear child who had been rescued from misery, suffering, and even shame here by the dear Stepney and Ilford Homes, and trained for the better life beyond, by those who lived only to rescue the perishing in Christ's name and for his sake.

I ask the prayers of all who read THE CHRISTIAN for these 400 children who have gone out this year, and also for us, no longer children, who remain behind, and who are even now bracing ourselves together for the arduous toil of the winter.

It were impossible to recount in a few brief lines what even the expense of a single day in this rescue work really brings to light. See, however, those six children who have only just been brought to my door. That girl is a cripple, a hopeless cripple, of a peculiar and painful sort. The thin wasted form, and peculiar contortion of limb, would elicit sympathy from the sternest; but the large, dark, lustrous eyes, so sensitively full, the well-shaped head, with its abundance of rich dark hair, and the compressed lips, which tell of long-practiced lessons of self-control, compel more than a passing glance of pity, and send the beholder away with a choking sensation in his throat. At least, so I felt, as I resolved, "Yes, by God's help I will help you." This little boy of twelve is called "Dancing Jimmy," his mode of picking up a living being indicated by his sobriquet; while that big boy, standing close to him, has a sober look of earnestness in the face, that indicates a better practical experience with the fiercest struggle for existence, although he evidently knows nothing, philosophically speaking, of the doctrine of the "Survival of the Fittest." Ah, poor lad! he is half-starved. He looks it; and the story of privation that he tells is in strict harmony with his woe-begone appearance. Sitting on the bench hard by is a little girl of eleven. Her history I dare not tell. Modest and gentle as the child looks, her life since she was eight years of age has been so altogether exceptionally shocking that I could not recount the facts here. A decent woman, a fellow lodger, brought these facts to light, and rescued the child almost at peril of her life. The chief transgressor against the poor innocent's peace and happiness received, a few week's ago, the due meed of his misdeeds in a sentence extending to the whole term of his natural life, and it is now our task to nurse the frail and helpless little thing back to life and goodness, if we can.

Only God's mercy can complete the work, we know, but not unfrequently does that sacred stream flow through the channel of consecrated hearts and pitiful hands. That baby, whose presence in the corner cannot be concealed from anyone possessing ears, has been hawked half round London in the hope of finding some shelter for its poor orphaned head. Rejected at almost every door, a notice of our Home met the eye of one who took an interest in the child. A despairing application reached me one evening. Next day the little one was safely folded in our nursery. The next child is also a baby, an orphan too. Its mother, thirteen years of age, died in giving it birth. She herself was the unsuspecting victim of one who cannot be reached on earth, but on whose head verily the crime of a double murder rests.

These are fair representatives of the 1400 others, all in the "Homes" to-day—wreckage floated to our very feet amid the surging of the city's life. In the Master's name we gather them in. We are at it every day, and I might have said almost every night. "None ever turned away, if destitute" is still our confession and our hope. Of course I want help—everybody's help—that goes without saying. The children I am saving for God are everybody's children, even if they are also nobody's. They are certainly yours, gentle reader, and yours is, also therefore the privilege and opportunity of partnership in a service the most hopeful and the most blessed of any on earth, for "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth Me."

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.—The tent services that have been held for some months in the Latymer-road, in connection with the London City Mission, have now been brought to a close. Addresses were delivered to a good audience by Mr. Watson, and Mr. Ireson, the recently appointed missionary of the district. The meetings throughout the season have been well attended, and have resulted in much spiritual good. Thursday evening, Sept. 3, was the occasion of a public welcome to Mr. Ireson at the Latymer-road Mission Rooms, Blechynden-street, where the Sunday evening services will be continued by him, and where he will also hold a prayer meeting every Monday evening. A portion of the Notting-hill Male Choir assisted in the service, and Mr. C. H. Pearce sang, with much feeling, as a solo, "I have heard of a Saviour's love."

E RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF BERLIN.

ranslated from the report of the Berlin City Mission.]

HE necessity of bringing the masses under the sound of the Gospel is felt everywhere, t nowhere is it more urgent than in the tropolis of Germany. The population of rlin is rapidly increasing, being at present one lion and a half, and every year about 50,000 added to this number. Street upon street is lt, large suburbs rise out of the ground within space of a few years, wide areas are being ered with houses of five or six storeys high, ich are crowded from top to bottom with nan beings. But how many churches are ng built to provide for the spiritual wants of s vast multitude of immortal souls? None, e at all, with the exception of one small rch erected by scantily collected gifts, as a morial of gratitude for the preservation of the of our Emperor when his assassination was empted in the streets of Berlin. Christian rches are hardly anywhere to be seen, and if tranger can find the few places of worship will be surprised to see how few attend them n on Sundays.

There are 900,000 Protestants, and for these dly seventy places of worship, which have m, at the outside, for about 40,000 persons.
l greater is the lack of men, for there are only clergymen, twenty-one of whom are chaplains enevolent institutions. Still worse, if worse can is the unequal size of the parishes. Whilst in inner city a clergyman has a cure of from 2000 3000 souls, one in the suburbs sometimes has 000 to 30,000. There are in the suburbs ,000 Protestants, with only twenty churches thirty clergymen!

n the East and South-east, where matters stand rst of all, there are four parishes, comprising ether 300,000 souls. There are two parishes 30,000 each; then the gigantic parish of St.
rc with 90,000 souls and two clergymen. To s parish, however, two more have recently n appointed. Largest of all is that of St. omas, with 130,000 souls. This parish cons an immense number of large lodging-houses working men; for them there is one splendid rch, but with only 1,400 seats, and a little pel in Lausitz-square with 400 seats. There o more characteristic sign of our time than sight this square presents. On one side is a gnificent railway station; on another a large ool; towering higher still are the barracks.
idst these pompous structures stands the le chapel, beggarly, poor, and miserable, embling more a shed than a place of worship.
re it is proposed to divide the parish, and to ld a new church; but some years will elapse ore this will be accomplished, and, even then, y will be huge parishes of 60,000 to 70,000 ls, growing every year by thousands. The gymen in these monster parishes cannot pos-y fulfil all their functions in a decent, being way; they are often compelled to go ough them in a hurried and mere formal nner, and as for visiting their parishioners, speaking to individuals about their souls,
ere is the time for that?

Can we, under such circumstances, wonder t indifference to religion has spread to a htful extent? The South-east is called the in fortress of Socialism; here a socialist got 000 votes at the last election for the "Reichs-." Does not this arise from the spiritual lect of the district? Can we not trace to the of preachers of the Gospel throughout Ber-the ever-increasing poverty, and the appall-growth of immorality, and crimes of all sorts?
number of suicides, for instance, is fearful, the 72,000 persons brought into the Berlin son during one year, the 140,000 who claimed nittance into the asylum for homeless ones, the 30,000 prostitutes who are said to be in lin, do not all these point with threatening ger to the sad neglect of the preaching of the d of God amongst our population?

omething must be done to meet this evil.
me mission work is carried on in close connection with the Church, and great blessing has rested upon it. Twenty-four missionaries go from morn till eve through their districts and labour with great devotion and self-sacrifice. During last year they have made 6800 calls, giving temporal assistance to the poor and telling out the Gospel to them. They have given away 46,000 tracts and 212,960 sermons, besides getting 7231 subscribers to religious papers. They have gone to the railway stations and spoken to the emigrants, selling or giving away books and tracts. They have conducted Bible meetings and opened Sunday-schools, and whenever one is opened the children flock to it, the Hosanna of the children of Jerusalem seeming to find an echo and a repetition amongst the children of Berlin. Very active are some of these little ones, who distribute about 500 sermons every Sunday. It is sweet to see the zeal of these little messengers of peace. Conductors of omnibuses allow them to sit down in the omnibus until another one drives up, in order that the conductor and driver of this, too, may receive a sermon. The city missionaries all testify to the great willingness of the people to hear the Gospel; but we had not men enough to take it to them, and, therefore, we have resolved to send out thirty instead of twenty-four.

Besides this, we are going to establish a Female Mission for the rescue of the fallen. Last year I announced that we would begin a war against public immorality; we have done this, and have had a blessing. A society of ladies has been formed, numbering about 250 members. More than twenty ladies go into the haunts of vice after these lost ones. The police give us the names of such girls as are only beginning a course of sin; they are visited, and the word of God is brought to them. At times it is a disheartening work; one has to fight against frivolity and impudence, against lusts and seduction of satanic men. Yet some are saved, and it is sweet to help even one soul from death to life.

We have also held public meetings in this cause, which were attended by hundreds of men and women. We trust many hearts have been touched, and have said: "Things cannot remain as they are; this evil must be put down." These are only beginnings, but they are not without blessing; already parents of unhappy children apply to the mission for aid.

We have built a spacious house for our Mission. Last year, when the International Conference of the Y.M.C.A. was held in it, we were told by many that such a large beautiful house for City Mission work was to be found nowhere else. The thought of making the great hall of it the centre of evangelistic work has only been realised to a small extent up till the present. However, the fact that the majority of the inhabitants of Berlin are strangers to religious life urges upon us the necessity of extraordinary measures. It is needful to invite the non-church-goers to a place which they are less reluctant to enter than the house of God, and where the Gospel is preached in a lively and attractive way. Very effective proved the manner of Pastor v. Schluembach, from America, who took part in our evangelistic meetings.

The Committee of the City Mission have resolved to continue this work of evangelisation in earnest, though they know that not a few professing Christians in Germany hope for no lasting result from it, but fear that it may damage the work of the regular clergymen. We, ask, however, "What else was John the Baptist but a revival preacher?" He was no regular pastor, no trained rabbi, and could not follow up the individuals awakened by his speech. God Himself had given him the work of kindling a quickly-burning fire, and endowed him with gifts for it. We value highly the regular pastoral work, the quiet and faithful care for souls; but, if the Lord raises up popular preachers, endowed with the gift of mighty, arousing speech, who go from place to place like the evangelists of the early Church, and gather great multitudes around the pulpit, then we will accept this gift with fervent gratitude from his hand, and not run the risk of contending against God.

Mr. Moody expressed his conviction that the Protestant Church was on the eve of such a revival as had not yet been known in the history of the Church of Christ; because everywhere people were beginning to inquire after the living God. The Lord grant that the expectation of the great evangelist may not be disappointed, and that in our German nation, too, a great revival of religion may take place. But we must do our share in bringing about this change for the better. We must have more places for preaching the Gospel. Thousands crowd to hear the missionaries in most unsuitable places, such as taverns and dancing saloons, and even these are only to be had at an enormous rent. Open-air preaching is out of the question, Berlin being still in "a state of siege," and therefore not more than about half-a-dozen people being allowed to stand together in a street. We want, therefore,

MORE MISSION HALLS.

A society of ladies has been formed to collect means for this end, but our need is so great that we want the help of all Christian friends whom the Lord has prospered. Mr. Carl Haupt, missionary, 41, Danson-road, Manor-place, Walworth, S.E., is authorised by Pastor Stoecker and the Committee to give any further information to friends who may be interested in the work.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY of SCOTLAND.

THE monthly meeting of the Glasgow Committee was held on Monday week. Five special donations were reported, amounting in all to £220. The chairman called attention to the fact that the secretary, Mr. Slowan, was approaching the completion of his twenty-fifth year in the Society's service, and a committee was appointed to arrange for some recognition of the event. It was reported that the Marquis of Salisbury had promptly communicated with the Chinese Government on the subject of the recent assault made on Mr. Burnet, one of the Society's agents, with a view to the punishment of the offenders, and the issue of such instructions as may prevent the recurrence of similar outrages. Mr. Burnet, though still suffering from the effects of the assault, had accomplished a journey of nearly 500 miles, and sold nearly 4000 portions of Scripture, the proceeds of sales having paid the cost of the journey.

It was agreed to take advantage of the great triennial examinations of students at Wu Chang and Canton, to present each student as he leaves the examination hall with a copy of one of the Gospels, and a grant of 20,000 was made for this purpose. The completion was reported of the Rev. Griffith John's version of the New Testament in easy Wen-li, and it was agreed to encourage Mr. John to proceed with the Book of Psalms. The Rev. Dr. Williamson took farewell of the committee on his approaching return to China. Dr. Williamson was the Society's first foreign agent, and has now been connected with it for twenty-two years. His weight of character, ability, and devotion to China were cordially acknowledged, and the hope was expressed, that he would be long spared to labour for the cause of the Gospel in his adopted country. From Japan it was reported that the Book of Daniel had now been published in Japanese. One of the native colporteurs had recently brought to a missionary the names of fifteen persons who desired admission into the Christian Church.

GERMAN Y.M.C.A. IN LONDON.—In the spring of 1860 six German merchants formed this Association in the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. rooms. This year it was felt that a fresh start must be made, in view of the large number of young Germans who come to London seeking employment, in many cases in vain. The headquarters of the Association are at 28, Finsbury-square, E.C., where the secretary, Mr. W. Müller, will give counsel and help. A free registry is there kept of respectable lodgings and houses of business. Many utterly destitute have been fed and lodged in connection with the Arbeitsprobe, or labour test, carried on at the same address. The rooms of the Association are open all day. In the reading-room may be found a library, foreign and English newspapers. The Society has its own organ, the Anzeiger, edited by Dr. H. P. Ziemann, from which full particulars of the religious, scientific, and musical meetings may be learnt.

THE CONFERENCE AT NIAGARA FALLS.

THE papers read at the Conference, on "The Second Coming of Our Lord," held at Niagara, Ontario, in July last (of which we gave a short sketch in a recent issue), have now been published in Canada under the title of "Behold, I Come Quickly."

There are some strikingly trenchant remarks made on the present state of things in the world, chiefly in Christendom; and the prevailing feeling in the Conference evidently was that the appearing of the Lord Jesus as King of kings is the only remedy for the woes and sins of the world, and that his appearing is very near at hand. We quote a few paragraphs from the paper by Pastor Denovan, on "The Second Coming of Christ as related to the Establishment of the Coming Kingdom."

"The sphere of Christ's personal and local government shall be this earth, and its metropolitan seat, Jerusalem—'of the increase there shall be no end'—from Jerusalem over all Africa, then northward and eastward and westward. In these days we have been hearing not a little about the 'Federation of England with her Colonies,' so that there may be created (by concluding a close international treaty with the United States) a grand, world-wide empire of the English-speaking races, and thus secure permanent and universal peace. This is a grand Anglo-Saxon mythical vision; but ambitious, selfish, human nature would not long be contented with such splendid cosmopolitan imperialism. This sentiment is only a confession of, and a longing for, something we want—and here it is—the kingdom of Jesus Christ shall be far more than English-speaking, it shall be polyglot—'all kingdoms and nations and tongues and peoples.' This is the final solution of the political and governmental problem of the ages."

"One of the most interesting subjects of study at the present juncture of the world's history, is right government, i.e., government by which may be secured to the greatest number, all the world over, the greatest amount of blessing. With the accumulated historical experience of long centuries and all nationalities, we are now trying, by legislation, to improve upon every known form and method. Results: Russia tortured between her autocratic Czar and her Nihilists and their doctrine of dynamite; Germany and her Parliament controlled by one great man; France recently revolutionised into a Republic, and ready for something newer still—some coup d'état still more brilliant—any day; Old England seething politically, like the witches' cauldron Macbeth saw; Conservatives vieing with Liberals as to who shall pitch into the heaving, hissing mass the largest concessions to the mob; America very much in the grasp of millionaires and rings of monopoly, of Rome and Rum; Canada struggling to soothe her recent sorrows by giving the franchise to heathen Red Indians, and taking it from persons who believe in God and can read and write. What need I say more? All human methods of human Government seem hopelessly wrong. The very best are mere makeshifts, schemes to keep people from mobbing and devouring each other. Aristocracy is perhaps better than autocracy; but aristocracy is not government, it is only one favoured class manipulating all other classes for self. Modern Republicanism is, perhaps, sometimes better than aristocracy, and very often worse, but at best it is not government, but only the multitude led and hoodwinked by rings, caucuses, and demagogues, by secret societies and priests."

"What are we to do? There appears to be but one reply: one Supreme Ruler, perfect in wisdom and power, truth and honesty, is alone sound government. This, at least, is God's ideal of right government; and this is just the government this precious prediction of the return of Jesus promises, viz.:—

"(1) Our world, one great united empire, under one Infallible Emperor; and Jerusalem, the metropolitan city.

"(2) David's throne and dynasty restored.

"(3) Jesus Christ's method of legislation will be perfect, and his administration irresistible.

"(4) His dominion shall be permanent, lasting as long as our world. 'His dominion is an everlasting dominion.'

"(5) His reign shall secure universal peace. The angels sang, 'Peace on earth.' This has never been realised. Peace of heart in individual cases has, peace of conscience, peace with God, but not 'peace on earth.' To-day the military and naval instrumentalities are more terribly effective than ever. The machinery of modern warfare is simply enormous, appalling, diabolic."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

GOSPEL OAK.—Mr. William Sampson commenced a twelve days' mission on Sunday, Sept. 6. Prayer-meetings were held during the week previously, and the neighbourhood canvassed by the members of the society. On Sunday the chapel was filled, and the power of God came down upon us. Many consecrated themselves afresh and fully to the service of God, and many others came seeking pardon, some of whom were able to trust in Jesus and rejoice in Him as their Saviour.

DEVONSHIRE.—Rev. John Morgan, pastor of Whitefield Tabernacle, Leonard-street, City-road, E.C., has just completed his annual evangelistic tour in Devonshire. Among the places visited have been Honiton, Sidbury, Seaton, Beer, and Colyton. A series of Gospel services have been held in each place. Great interest has been awakened. The preacher has been heartily welcomed and warmly thanked by the people in each locality. A large company of Church members met on Thursday evening to welcome their pastor on his return.

SILSDEN, YORKSHIRE.—United open-air services of a very unusual and truly catholic character were, a few weeks since, conducted in this village. On the Sunday afternoon and evening all the ordinary services were given up, and the open-air gatherings were addressed by the Vicar and the ministers of the Wesleyan Methodist Free Church and Primitive Methodist denominations. United Nonconformist services are, happily, becoming very frequent; but at Silsden the union is made yet more perfect by the presence of the Vicar and his congregation.

DANBURY, CHELMSFORD.—A very successful ten days' mission by Mr. and Mrs. C. King, in the above village, has just been brought to a close. The services were commenced in a commodious tent on the lawn of Hill House, the residence of Mr. C. Butler, but, the weather proving unfavourable, the Rev. J. W. Compton (Church of England) placed his Mission Church at the disposal of the evangelists. There, night after night, crowds of eager listeners assembled, and rare mixed congregations they were—Churchmen, Wesleyans, Baptists, Congregationalists, Peculiar People, Quakers, and a very large sprinkling of "nothingarians." All alike were charmed by the rugged eloquence of Mr. King, and the Lord's presence and blessing were abundantly manifested. There were few dry eyes in the church on the two nights when Mrs. King told, with simple pathos, her story of "an actor's wife." On the evening of Sept. 10, when the last service was held, many openly declared that the Lord had blessed to their souls the visit of these evangelists. J. W. C.

OXFORD.—The active evangelistic agencies which have their headquarters at New-road Chapel took another "new departure" last week. A spacious tent was set up on waste ground in the very heart of the populous district known as St. Thomas's, the most degraded part of the city. The proceedings opened August 29, on the Sunday afternoon. Although no public announcement had been made, the tent was crowded, and Rev. James Dann, pastor of the New-road Church, spoke from, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." At 8 p.m., after conducting the ordinary services at the chapel, Mr. Dann again preached in the tent from the words, "When I see the blood I will pass over." There was again a very large and attentive audience, many being unable to obtain admission. The meetings were continued through the week, Mr. Dann preaching every night except Tuesday, when his place was occupied by Mr. W. H. Sale, of Little Tew, and, notwithstanding heavy rains, the tent was well filled each evening. On the 6th the closing services were held, when Rev. W. Hackney, pastor of Commercial-road Chapel, preached in the afternoon, and Mr. Dann in the evening from "The harvest is past . . . and we are not saved."

REV. T. CHAMPNESS is busily engaged gettin his scheme for training lay evangelists into workin order, and finds that there is a large demand fo men of this class, and also that there are numbe of suitable men willing to devote their lives to th work.

THURROCK, ESSEX.—Mr. John Richardso of Bow, visited this place on Sunday, Sept. 6, a delivered two Gospel addresses. Edward Dun Esq., of Whitehall, has all the summer personall superintended the services. Such gentlemen a greatly required in country places to organise a sustain evangelistic work.

Thomas L. Farnes.

WATERFORD.—A series of special evangelist services has been held here and in the adjacen watering-place of Tramorne, conducted by Rev. E. Williams, of Aberystwyth. The attendanc were encouraging, steadily increasing night aft night. Visitors at the seaside had an opportuni of hearing the Gospel without the sacerdotal in timidation that would have been experienced their own localities, and several availed themselv of the opportunity.

NEW CUT.—The enlargement of the "Working Men's Mission Hall" having at length bee commenced, the brothers Young are now conducti Gospel services in a tent erected in the Lowe Marsh. Every night the meetings are crowded, an real Gospel power is being experienced. One Sund evening, at the close of the service, the sce witnessed was remarkably impressive, over thir of the congregation coming out of their seats to th front seeking salvation, many passing from dea unto life, leaving the "tent meeting" with the jo of peace and pardon. These services will be co tinued for about a month. The co-operation Christian friends will be heartily welcomed.

BATLEY.—A great work is being done here means of the large Bible-van, belonging to th Manchester and Salford Auxiliary. Mr. Charl Clements, the evangelist and colporteur of th Society, has occupied a piece of ground near th Market-place for ten days, where he has draw large crowds of working men and women by h earnest addresses and plain Gospel truths. O brother displays great tact in bringing before th people the object of the Society—viz., that putting into their hands the Word of God. was a noble effort on the part of the Society each the working classes, which otherwise woul have been without the Word of God.

J. H. Akroyd.

WOOLWICH Y.W.C.A.—The ninth annual re report speaks of "increased success on the effor for the spiritual and temporal welfare of our youn women and permanent blessing resulting fro work of past years." There are over 300 member and attempts to find larger premises having faile a considerable sum had to be expended upon th present house. A prominent feature of this Inst tute is the successful Book and Tract Depôt in co nection with it, which, by its profits, adds conside ably to the funds, and is a valuable agency for th circulation of pure and religious literature, whe there is so much of the opposite character. Ov £300 worth were sold during last year. Th accommodation for boarders is largely used young women out of employment, an importa point at this time when there is so much danger those who are so situated. The Secretary is Mr M. Mandeville, 100, Wellington-street, Woolwic

THE FRENCH IN LONDON.—There are mo than two thousand French families in London a the suburbs who most likely have never read the Bib Luther said: "God does more by his Word alo than you and I, and all the world, by our unite strength." I should like to send by post a portio of the Word of God, and an illustrated Frenc newspaper, "L'Ami de la Maison," or "L'Ouvri Français," &c., to each family in and arou London, and to give a New Testament to eve young girl who passes in our Home, when they not possess one, and to the poor who come to o meetings and are unable to buy it. Twenty-tw years of work among my poor countrymen in Lond show me that the souls that are converted have most cases been converted through the Word God. A French Professor, who died in a hospit in London, saying, "Je désire que Mons. Barbi m'accompagne à ma dernière demeure," had made mark at John iii. 16, and died trusting in Jesus. woman engaged in a situation to go to Sydney w converted through reading on the vessel a Ne Testament given to her. A Jewess came out curiosity to our meetings, read the New Testame and was converted through it.—Yours in Chri Jesus, George Barbier.

Mr. Moody's Convention

AT NORTHFIELD.

(FROM OUR OWN REPORTER.)

ROFESSOR D. L. MOODY and HIS BOYS.

HE TALKS TO THEM ON PREACHING.

DURING my acquaintance with Mr. Moody I have seen him in varied pacities, but it was not till this forenoon at I witnessed him fulfilling the rôle of ofessor and Lecturer-in-General to the boys" of his Mount Hermon School. eaching that delectable height with a little rty of American and English friends, after pleasant drive from Mr. Moody's house in orthfield, the evangelist himself acting as r dashing Jehu, we found several groups reciting," which is the American parlance learning in class. Mr. Moody at once ok the chair in one of the rooms, and the ercises of the brief session were opened th an earnest and pointed prayer by one the youthful students. One or two verses re sung, to give other students time to drop , and then Professor Moody began :—

As this is a sort of odd morning, I thought would not have a Bible reading, but would lk to you a little on preaching, or how to eak in public, so as to interest an audience. ven if you do not expect to be regular eachers, or public speakers, it is a good ing for you to know how to express yourlves in the presence of others. Suppose one you becomes a farmer; there is to be a wn meeting on some topic of interest; it very important that you should be able to ace your ideas before the meeting so as to rry them with you. One of the greatest fts in the world is the power to sway an dience of your fellow-men.

In the first place, you have to avoid the nger of talking too much, of making yourlves too cheap. Avoid earning the repu-tion of being "a great talker." Be sure, so, you do not talk on a subject on which u are not "posted up." There is much sdom in knowing when to keep still, as ell as in knowing when to speak.

Give the people to whom you speak the st you have got; put your best foot forward ery time. Do not be afraid of giving out l your ideas. Use up the ideas you have; ore will come to you before next time, and e more you give out the more you will get. you can say something that will interest e people, you will succeed; but if you get e reputation of being a dry speaker, you ill have a hard time of it.

Do not talk to people when they are asleep. you see one hearer getting drowsy, address your discourse to him in a way that will wake him up; if you do that the others will keep awake too. Remember that drowsiness is contagious, as well as wakefulness. As a rule, a man cannot take in much when he is asleep. It has always been a mystery to me how a minister can go on preaching with, perhaps, a third or a fourth of the congregation asleep, or half asleep. Here you will find the advantage of bringing in a story, or a lively illustration. I have sometimes found an audience getting drowsy or stupid; then I have gone out of my way to tell them a story. That makes them rub their eyes and wake up. Most people like to hear a story. Have your addresses well "peppered" with them; you need not use all you have on hand if they are not required.

Be careful not to make a display of your wisdom. If people think you are trying to show off, you lose your hold on them at once. A friend of mine told me that a student once came from college to preach in the church he attended. After giving out the text, the first thing he said was: "This passage does not mean just what it says; in the original it is 'so and so.'" The congregation very soon got the idea that he was attempting to show off. Next Sunday they had another student who began in very much the same way, and it was repeated on a third Sunday. The people were so disgusted that they didn't want any more students. You will not do much for a congregation if they think you have a very high opinion of your own wisdom.

If you see a man who seems particularly stupid or simple, address yourself to him. A lawyer once said that he always picked out the most stupid-looking man in the jury and tried to hold his attention; then he felt sure of holding the rest. It is in such circumstances that you find the benefit of speaking without notes. If a man writes down and reads off all he says, any number of the listeners may go off to sleep and he will never know it. It is all right to make notes, but let them be little more than key words that will bring up whole trains of thought. If you cannot preach without reading the whole of your sermon, you can hardly expect that it will touch the people much. If a preacher does not get his thoughts burnt into his own soul and memory, how can he hope to get them into the hearts of the people so that they will remember them?

Do not be afraid if the people smile or laugh. Never say anything with the object of making them laugh; that is unpardonable. At the same time, if the thing comes in naturally it will do them good; much better to cause a smile than allow them to go to sleep. Above all things, be natural. Do not try to imitate the voice or the gestures of someone else. People hate counterfeits and imitations. Do not drawl through your nose, and do not assume a "religious" tone or accent. I have had people come up to me and say in a whining sort of voice, "I do thank God that He ever raised you up." [Mr. Moody here suited the action to the word, but I cannot hit upon any way of conveying his mimicry to the reader.] I always get away from such people as soon as I can. You will only repel sensible thinking folks among your hearers by cant or rant, or the putting on of a whining, unnatural tone.

Do not scream at the top of your voice, either in prayer or in preaching. Speak without strain, and in a natural way, unless the size of the building makes it absolutely necessary to speak loudly. I heard it said some time ago that fishes always go to the bottom of the water when it thunders. You will find that screaming and shouting will only frighten away the sinners you want to catch.

If you are going to relate an incident or give an illustration, never introduce it by saying that you have got a very striking story to tell; let the people find out for themselves whether it is good or not. I have known a man take up five minutes nearly in speaking about some story he was going to tell, and when it came it was about the flattest thing I ever heard; it seemed all the flatter because our expectations had been raised to such a pitch. Do not speak about "common sense" as though you had a monopoly of that commodity; if you have, they will soon find it out without your alluding to it.

Begin your talk with something striking. Many preachers begin in a cold and commonplace way, which seems to me to be stupid. They often lose a hold of their audience before they have reached the core of the subject. I would advise you to plunge into your subject at once. If I do not succeed in getting the complete attention of an audience within ten minutes, I feel that my hold over it is gone.

Let your illustrations and incidents be such as will be easily remembered. Many people hear a sermon, and in an hour after they cannot recall a word of it. A good story or illustration should be like a peg for the memory to hang on. Tell them so that they will "strike" and "stick." It is very important to acquire the art of telling an incident well. Some preachers spoil a story by spinning it out; others do not bring out the point of it, so it falls flat, and is worse than none at all. Put it into as few words as you can, so as not to weaken the effect.

Be sure you do not preach too long. We live in an intense age, when everything is compressed into the narrowest limits and men's thoughts move quickly. Stop speaking when you get done. Do not be like an open-air preacher who went on speaking till all the hearers had left him; he said he thought it would be a pity to stop as long as there was anyone to listen!

A point or two about gesture. Never speak with your hands in your pocket, or standing with one leg straight and the other foot on a chair or a bench. The people will think you are not in earnest, if you pose in that way. Do not walk about on the platform too much. I have got some friends, very good speakers, who spoil their addresses by too much movement. Stand before your audience in an easy and manly attitude, and be sparing of your gestures.

Having gone over these points, Professor Moody invited questions from the students. His answers to some of these were, in brief, as follows:—

A preacher can say as much in thirty minutes, if he compresses his thoughts, as an audience can profitably carry away. The first few years I attempted to preach, I could not keep it up more than ten minutes or so. Practice and study will soon enable you to speak as long as you ought to. Many think they cannot speak in public. I am sure that is a mistake; I believe anyone can do it, if they go about it in the right way. Begin by talking three minutes on some subject of which your heart is full. If a young man preaching in a regular church service has a long programme put into his hand, let him keep to it as far as he can; but, if it embarrasses him, let him feel at liberty to alter it. If you think it will sustain the interest better, cut up your sermon into two or three or even five parts, and have the verse of a hymn in between. The first and last thing to remember is that it is your business to interest the audience. If you fail in that, you fail altogether. It is a great thing to be able to turn a seeming defeat into a victory. If you have a good sermon do not be afraid to repeat it. If God has used it in one place, why not use it in another? I would rather have twelve good sermons, and preach them over and over again, than twelve hundred sermons that did not strike anybody or anything.

At this point I was obliged to leave the class-room to keep an engagement with Mr. Sankey. As I drove in one of Mr. Moody's buggies across the charming Connecticut Valley, in company with a London friend, I could not but envy the Mount Hermon "boys" in having such a Professor as Mr. Moody. It was no small satisfaction to have had the privilege of being present at one of his lectures, and of being able, through these somewhat fragmentary notes, to widen the area of his class-room.

BE FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT.

OPENING ADDRESS

By Rev. Dr. PIERSON, Philadelphia.

"And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit."—Eph. v. 18.

THE contrast is here suggested by the Apostle between spirituous and spiritual exhilaration —between the effect of intoxicating drink and the blessed, intoxicating effects of the Holy Ghost. The contrast impresses me as really a marvellous one, in the suggestion of its similarities, as well as of its dissimilarities.

There are five marked effects of the use of intoxicating drink upon the human frame. There is its effect upon the organs of vision, first in seeming to extend the power of sight, and afterwards in blurring the same vision. There is its effect on the brain in causing unnatural exhilaration and excitement. Then its effect on the disposition, moving to hilarity, and afterwards producing a relapse into a morbid, and perhaps morose and malignant, temper. The action of strong drink is also seen on the muscular system, in stimulating to efforts that could not be made under ordinary circumstances, and sometimes to exertion that is afterwards hurtful. Yet another effect is observable on the organs of speech, inclining people to be garrulous, to speak perhaps with a fluency to which they are ordinarily strangers, but such fluency of utterance by and by degenerates into senseless drivel.

The Apostle seems to have noted these fivefold effects, and contrasts with them the influence of the Holy Spirit of God on him who is filled with this Divine intoxication. There is its effect on the eyes. They see truth with new clearness and new power, and there is no subsequent blurring of the spiritual vision. The mind is aroused to its grandest efforts of thought. The tongue is inspired to its most fluent and most gracious utterances. The whole man is strengthened for new conflict and new endeavour in the Master's service. When we are drunk with wine there is a tendency to excess, but the Apostle says that there can be no excess in the fulness of the Spirit. You cannot have too much of the Holy Ghost, while the results of the Spirit's influence are, from beginning to end, blessed and glorious.

Let me, before I proceed further, briefly ask your attention to the context. We read in Eph. v. 18—21: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." These things are stated as the results of being filled with the Spirit. See how the songs of Zion have a new power when we are filled with the Spirit. I am satisfied that we have not yet begun to appreciate the power which the service of song has as a saving and sanctifying agency. The Apostle seems to regard "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" as things to be used for mutual exhortations. In Col. iii. 16 we find a similar passage: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." He evidently means to teach that if we are filled with the Spirit the songs that we sing have the power of admonishing, and teaching spiritual truth to the unsaved for their rescue and redemption, and to the saved for their sanctification and preparation for service.

Besides this effect there will be an increase of our gratitude to God. Have you not noticed that when spiritual life runs low, thanksgiving to God is well nigh forgotten and in a great portion of our prayers has almost no place? I requires a high grade of spiritual attainmen and fellowship with God to abound in thanksgiving. I heard Mr. C. H. Spurgeon in 1866. never heard such preaching and such supplicating, but though I have heard preaching an praying that came very near to his, I never hear such thanksgiving and adoration since I was born He seemed to mount on wings as eagles, an poured out, with the lavishness of a broken flas of alabaster, the precious ointment of praise t God. If I had learned nothing else from hearing him, I learned the power that praise ma have in the worship and service of God.

Mr. Moody has told us that one of the conditions of blessing is humility. Do you not see i in this passage as a fruit of the Spirit? "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear o God." That is nothing but mutual humility I believe that if the Spirit fills us, we shall, in certain sense, lose sight of our own profi Many Christian people consider it is perfectl proper for them to be absorbed in their ow spiritual profit. The Apostle said on one occasion that he sought not his own profit, but th profit of others, that they might be saved. Th highest spiritual profit comes when we are losin sight of it altogether in our desire for the wea of others and for the glory of God in the elevation of the whole Church of Christ to a sublime attainment in spiritual life.

Coming back to our leading thought, I woul ask you to notice that this is the dispensation c the Spirit. I do not pretend to say that th history of the world is divided rigidly into thre dispensations, which are wholly separate. think, however, we may say that the dispensation of the Father was from the creation to th coming of Christ; that the dispensation of t Son was from his first coming to his ascensio to be resumed at his second coming; and tha the dispensation of the Spirit is especiall between the ascension of Jesus Christ and h second coming. We are now in that dispensation, and it is a most remarkable fact that whi the Father has planned Salvation, and the S has executed Salvation in his own life and deat and resurrection and ascension, the Holy Gho alone is represented as applying the truth of G and the blood of Christ to the salvation of soul Our Lord did not even venture in the days of h flesh to preach the Gospel until the Spirit God came upon Him, so that He could sa "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, becau He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel."

Here is our encouragement. We are in t very order and the manner of the Divine dire tion and example, when we are seeking to filled with the Spirit. May I say, with reverence, that we are hardly justified in talkin about the indwelling of Christ in us, unless understand his indwelling to be the indwellin of the Holy Ghost? For Jesus Christ does n personally dwell in the believer, except in t Holy Ghost. We are to be his temples. To filled with the Spirit is to be filled with the Triu God. I am sorry for any man or woman w does not apprehend the personality of the Ho Ghost. The most conspicuous preacher Brooklyn in past years, and now unhappily co spicuous for his defection from the faith, h published these astounding words. They we the first indication to me that he was wanderin from the truth his father had preached befo him. He says: "The Holy Spirit of God is thin and shadowy effluence, proceeding from t Father and the Son, as the breath proceeds fro the human body." Think of that. It seems me it comes very close to blasphemy. The Ho Ghost is a person just as much as the Father or as the Son is a person. If you deny the pe sonality of the Holy Ghost, practically you de everything that the Bible reveals about t nature of the Most High God.

What are the effects of being filled with t Spirit? I have already referred to the effects spirituous excess, which have a certain corr spondence with the effects produced by t Spirit. Take the effect on the vision. We s spiritual truth more clearly. I apprehend th the greatest difficulty, perhaps, in the Christi Church to-day is that we have not a clear a vivid sense of spiritual things. Dr. Skinner, New York, himself a distinguished preacher a winner of souls, said that the ministers of Christ might represent any type of piety except one, nd yet sinners might not be converted. But if he exhibits that peculiar type of piety that is found in a vivid and almost visible sense of the powers of the world to come, men would surely be saved.

What is the difficulty in our churches to-day? We do not believe what we preach. The reality nd verity of hell has passed away in the minds f a great many. The reality and verity of the guilt of men is largely obscured. We need to have our eyes opened to see the bottomless pit, nd the immeasurable heights of heaven, the eality and guilt of sin, and man's absolute need f a Saviour. All this speculating on a probation beyond death, all this ignoring of the olemn, sacred testimony as to the assured condemnation of those who reject Christ, means that he foundations of our confidence in the Word of God are being very sadly shaken. President Edwards could not have preached that sermon n "Sinners in the hands of an angry God" if he had not realised the fact and the guilt of sin. All through this country, next Lord's-day, there would be one of the mightiest movements that ver it knew, if every professed minister of the Gospel had his eyes anointed with eye-salve o see the peril of men and the all-sufficiency of Christ as a Saviour.

Take the effect of being filled with the Spirit n the strength of the believer. One of the most precious passages in the Old Testament, which has been a sheet-anchor to me for the last wenty years, is in Isa xl. 28—31: "Hast thou not known, hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends f the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? here is no searching of his understanding? He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have o might He increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait upon he Lord shall renew their strength; they hall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall un, and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." Perhaps I do not read these verses right; but it seems to me only a representation here of the great needs that the believer has. There is his ordinary duty which may be described y the term "walking." There is uncommon xertion sometimes demanded of him, and he needs o be enabled to "run" without being weary. Once in a while an almost superhuman exertion s demanded. He has to do something in a crisis nd exigency of the spiritual life or work that orresponds to mounting upon wings like the agle. The Lord says his strength shall be not only sufficient for the ordinary duties and he extraordinary duties, but even for the duties hat transcend all others in some crisis of affairs when we need to mount up on wings as eagles. When we are filled with the Spirit of God we ind this marvellous power in strengthening for duty.

Then there is the effect on disposition. The best way to be filled with joy is to be filled with he Spirit of God. It is possible that a man may be at peace with God, and yet not be fully conscious of it, but it is difficult when you have the peace of God ruling in your hearts. In Rom. v. we read that the love of God is "shed abroad n our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us." You become conscious of fellowship with Him when you are filled with the Spirit of God.

I would like to say a word about the power of utterance. There is nothing that opens the mouth and loosens the tongue, so that one speaks plainly, like the power of the Holy Ghost. Many people are confessors of Christ who think hat they have no power to speak. The simple act is they are too conceited. A great deal of what we call humility is nothing but pride, and here is no pride as bad as the pride of humility. What some of us need is to be willing to fail. If we could only speak as well as So-and-so, as fluently and glibly as a certain brother or sister, so as to give the impression of intellectual power n utterance, we should be able to speak who are now silent. The simple fact is that we need humility enough to be willing to make fools of urselves for Christ's sake.

When the Spirit of God fills a man the fire pent up within him must have vent. David says: "As I was musing, the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue." "We also believe, and therefore speak." "Knowing the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men." "The love of Christ constraineth us." These three things—faith, a persuasion of the terrors of the Lord, and a sense of the love of Christ—will open our mouths to speak for Him. When we are ready to say something ungrammatical, rather than not say anything at all; to violate the laws of rhetoric rather than violate the law of testimony for Christ; to speak in such a way as not to call attention to ourselves but to the Master, and even by our failures to glorify God, then we give some evidence of being filled with the Spirit.

Observe the peculiar form in which the exhortation is couched. It is not, "Seek to be filled;" it is not, "Fill yourselves;" it is, "Be filled." This implies certain positive attitude towards the Holy Ghost. There is nothing upon which more erroneous notions prevail, than upon the conditions of spiritual power. You cannot fill yourselves. You cannot, by any association with others, or by the use of mere means, get filled with the Spirit. You are to be filled with the Spirit by taking the attitude, first, of prayer to God for a blessing that He alone can give, and then by a determination to be filled at any cost. I believe that is all we can do in order to be filled with the Spirit. There is much talk about emptying ourselves. We cannot empty ourselves any more than we can fill ourselves. When Christ met his disciples after his resurrection, He first gave them his peace. "Peace be unto you;" then He commissioned them to go forth; but He also breathed on them, and said: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." All they had to do was simply to receive, to inbreathe what Christ had breathed out. So if we are in the proper attitude towards God, we shall simply have to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit as we inhale the breath that is already provided for us in the inspiring atmosphere.

THE LIFE OF THE ASCENDED CHRIST.

BY DR. A. J. GORDON, BOSTON.

A YOUNG friend asked me to-day if I had any suggestion to make with regard to an outline of the life of Christ. I said, "There have been hundreds of lives of Christ published, but I have never yet found one that carried his life beyond the Ascension. I would advise you to carry it as far as the Scripture carries it." The life of Christ does not end with the Ascension. It is striking to notice how the Acts of the Apostles opens. We read there that the Gospel of Luke contains a record of what "Jesus began to do and to teach until He was received up." The four Gospels give the history of this. In the Acts we have a record of what He continued to do by the Holy Ghost after He was received up. The Epistles furnish a history of what He continued to teach by the Holy Ghost through his Apostles after He was received up.

Then we come to the Apocalypse, which I call the post-Ascension Gospel. It is simply the second Gospel according to John. It carries what we have in the Gospels a little further on. For instance, we have in Matthew the Sermon on the Mount, and the Beatitudes, all of which pertain to this life. "Blessed are the meek, the pure in heart, the merciful," and so forth. In the Apocalypse, or the second Gospel according to John, you have the Beatitudes again, not from a mount on the earth, but from the throne; and all these beatitudes pertain to the life that is yet before us. "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." "Blessed are they that have part in the first Resurrection." "Blessed are they that are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." "Blessed are they that do his commandments" (or, as the Revised Version has it, "that have washed their robes") "that they may have right to the tree of life." And so on—all these beatitudes pertaining to the life before the Church.

We have, as you know, seven epistles, that is to say, we have various Epistles that are addressed to seven different Churches—in Rome, Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, Colosse, and Thessalonica. If we turn to the Apocalypse we find epistles to seven Churches, these Churches being supposed to represent the future progressive state of the Church. We have in the first Gospel of John the Resurrection—the hour when the graves shall open; in his second Gospel you have a complete statement with regard to the Resurrection of the just, and then the thousand years before the resurrection of the unrighteous. So I might go on and show other points of correspondence.

Modern lives of Christ usually end with his ascension. Notice how it ends as given in the Gospel by Mark: "He was received up into heaven, and sat down on the right hand of God." We too often leave off at the point where He was received up into heaven. I want to find out how much we know about the life of Jesus Christ now. The books that would be likely to give us most about the life of Jesus Christ in glory are the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Revelation. Let us begin with Christ seated in glory, and see what we can learn. Hebrews i. 3: "Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when He had by Himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." What is the idea here? That of perfected and completed atonement. This is supplemented a little further on in the Epistle to the Hebrews x. 11: "And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins." In the ancient ritual the high priest never sat down, because his was never a completed work. Jesus Christ had completed his atoning work, so He sat down. There can be no more sacrifice for sin. This is a very important point. You know that in certain branches of the Church it is held that the Eucharist is a perpetual offering up of the body and blood of Christ. This is a Jewish idea, which has been appropriated, and it is quite in accordance with it that he who officiates should stand up in the presence of the congregation. It is to me a very beautiful thing that in the observance of our Lord's Supper the disciples sit down, and thus commemorate the fact of a completed atonement.

Notice the contrast between the Passover and the Lord's Supper. When the Passover was instituted, they were to observe it standing with staff in hand, with loins girded, and with their shoes on, as if in a hurry. It was very fitting thus to represent it, because they were just starting on their long journey. That feast passed into the Lord's Supper. The Lord has now finished his atonement, so we celebrate a completed work, and are found in an attitude of repose.

"Rest, my soul, the work is done; Done by God's Eternal Son."

Then remember that everything true of Christ is to be true of us. So in the Epistle to the Ephesians, where we have an account of his Ascension, this is added: "Being raised up together with Him, and seated together with Him in heavenly places." We are, therefore, with Him in glory, resting as He rests, and sharing his finished work.

Another thought is suggested by the passage in Heb. x—his accessibility, if I may so say. If you want to do business with some man, and, when you go down to his counting-house in the city, you see him surrounded by a good many men, you think to yourself, "This is not the time for me to talk with him." So at the evening hour you go to his house, and you see him there with his slippers on sitting before the fire, his day's work is done and he is at rest. Now is your opportunity. So we may say of Jesus, having finished the work of our redemption, how accessible He is now. He who sat on the mount and uttered that wonderful sermon, who sat at the well and discoursed to the woman of Samaria, has now sat down at the right hand of God. He said to the woman, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink: thou wouldst have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water." Out of the midst of the throne where He sits there proceeds the pure river of the water of life, and He now says, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." He is so accessible. A child once said, "If I should go to heaven I should have to wait a great many years, should I not, before I could get to Jesus and speak with Him?" Not at all. He would say to the angels and archangels, and all the host of heaven, "Stand aside! This little child wants to speak to Me. That is what I am here for—to receive and bless all who come unto Me."

Then there is a third idea brought out—that of expectancy. He is waiting for something that we are to wait for. We are exhorted to watch, for we know not the day nor the hour when our Lord will come. Christ said He Himself did not know the hour: "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, neither the angels, neither the Son, but the Father only." We are not to watch because we know the hour, but because we do not know the hour. Jesus Christ is waiting and expecting till the promise of the Father be fulfilled.

A good many people think it is very sentimental to teach Christians to be looking up to heaven and watching for Christ's return. He is our perfect example and we are but doing what He is doing. I think it is practical in a great many ways. I shall never forget one time when I went away from my home. I did not know when I should be back, and I said to my family, I might return the next day, or the day after, or any day, I could not tell; they might expect me any time. I was much interested to hear afterwards how the children believed my word and acted on it. They insisted on being dressed in their best clothes every day, and on going down to the station to meet me. It was something like this that the Lord said. He did not know when He might come. Surely that is the very thing to keep the Christian in the attitude of expectation, having his best clothes on all the time, keeping his very garments unspotted from the world.

What is He waiting for? The promise of the Father. Here comes in something very important to be noticed. God promised from the beginning that the kingdoms of the world should become the kingdom of his Son. He knows that and He is waiting for its fulfilment. What was the great temptation Jesus Christ met with at the hands of his adversary the Devil? Satan knew about these promises and the first thing he said to the Saviour in the wilderness was this: "I understand you have been promised all the kingdoms of this world, but you have got to wait a long while before you get them. You have to go through much suffering, to be rejected of men, to be crucified. That is a very hard way and a long way to get what God has promised; I can show you a much shorter way. Bow down and worship me, and I will give you all the kingdoms of this world." What did Christ say in reply to this subtle temptation? "Get thee behind Me, Satan. I do not propose to take the kingdom from your hands. I do not ask for any shorter method. I will take God's time and will go by the way of the cross." Peter had got the same idea, he was looking forward to a temporal kingdom of Christ. When the Saviour told the disciples that He was going up to Jerusalem to be rejected of men and to be crucified, Peter said, "That be far from thee Lord, I thought you were going to set up an earthly kingdom." The Lord answered Peter in the same words as he addressed to the tempter in the wilderness: "Get thee behind Me, Satan."

That temptation comes to us as the followers of Christ. It is a very wonderful piece of irony that the church which says, "I am no widow"—the true church is waiting for the return of her Husband—"I sit as a queen" and which professes to have Peter for its head, is the church that has this idea running through it, a kingdom without a cross, the kingdoms of this world without waiting for the return of the Lord Jesus Christ. So, perhaps, some Christians think they can have their good things in this world, and need not go by way of the cross. I can never forget what was said by a timid, troubled young lady, who had great spiritual conflicts. "You cannot imagine," she said, "how I am set upon by the evil one." She was asked to imitate the Lord's example, and say, "Get thee behind me Satan." "I do not want Satan behind me," she replied, "I want to have him behind Christ, so that I can have Christ between me and him." It might be as dangerous to have Satan behind us as before us; but, if we can get him behind Christ, we shall be safe. "Ask of Me," said the Father, "and I will give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." So Jesus is seated there waiting until that promise of the Father is fulfilled. In Hebrews xii. the Apostle draws attention to the fact of Christ, the Author and Finisher of our faith, having endured the cross, being set down at the right hand of God, and he adds, "Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds."

Here, then, is Jesus Christ resting and waiting. It is spoken of in Hebrews as "his rest." It is a striking thought, and one worthy of special notice, that we have two rests. Christ says, "Come unto Me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This is the rest of grace. But there is a passage in Hebrews, "Let us labour, therefore, to enter into that rest." In the one case we are to stop our labour, our good works, to give up our contrivances, and enter into the rest of grace and salvation. Now there remains another rest for the saved ones, but we must labour to enter into it. That is very significant. God rested from his works, and Jesus Christ rested from his works, as the Father rested from his. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours." We must first do some good works, before we can rest from our works. Those who have been diligent and patient and self-denying, who have endured hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, are exhorted to look to and consider Him who bore the agony of the cross, suffered the shame and endured the anguish, but who at last attained his rest. I am afraid a good many Christians will be saved by grace who will not have much rest of reward. Let us labour to enter into that rest. The highest place in glory will be given to those who deserve it. The Lord wants to save us for nothing; but He never rewards us for nothing. He wants us to labour with all our might, so that He may have something for which to reward us. I was once talking to a very humble Christian woman, who lived in a dismal attic. I said: "Well, you will get home by and by; your troubles and trials and poverty will soon be over." "Yes," she said, "if I can barely squeeze into heaven and get to a back seat where I can hear them singing, I shall be satisfied." There may be some of us like her, but if we are satisfied with that, the Lord will not be satisfied with us. He does not want his people to have back seats in heaven; He would have us press right on to the front seats. "So shall an entrance be administered abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of God." We are saved by the abounding grace of God, but we shall be rewarded according to our abundant works.

In the Revelation there is another remarkable statement. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me on my throne, even as I also overcame and am sat down with my Father on his throne." I do not know that there is to me a more touching and pathetic passage in all the Scriptures than that. Why? Think of where Jesus was, where He is, what He suffered, and what He is now enjoying; how He was once rejected of men, and how He is now accepted of the Father. In order to bring out my thought about it, let me tell you what happened some years ago as I saw it on record. A certain eminent judge was called on to act in that capacity where his own son was on trial. The court was crowded, as the circumstance was such an extraordinary one—the father the judge, the son the culprit. They said, of course, he would show his son a great deal of favour, and the crowd looked on to see what he would do. The culprit came in, and the judge sat as stolid and as seemingly indifferent as though the prisoner were the most hardened and unknown criminal. He went through the whole of the trial, gave his charge to the jury, and the spectators could not perceive in it that the father had the slightest sympathy for the son. Many times he had said to that boy, "My son," and the son had called him, "My father"; but the judge never spoke of him as his son. At last the jury came in and spoke two words—"Not guilty." Then the father stood up, reached out his hand, put his son right in a seat by his side, in the presence of all the people, and put his arm round him, and said, "My son"; and the son said, "My father."

God had a Son. And it is very striking to notice that only once, as recorded in Scripture, did Jesus Christ use the word "God," instead of "Father." On the banks of the Jordan, when the Spirit was poured out upon Him, God spake and said, "This is my beloved Son;" and, again, on the Mount of Transfiguration. All through that wonderful prayer in John, notice how often Jesus Christ speaks of the Father. "O righteous Father," "Holy Father!" In the Garden of Gethsemane He says: "Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from Me." Even on the cross He says: "Father, forgive them." But now we reach a point where Jesus Christ is bearing the sin of the world. He is, as it were, a great Culprit on trial. God spared not his own Son, when He was made sin for us. "Cursed is everyone that hangeth on a tree." He had been made a curse for us, and there He was hanging on a tree in the presence of the Judge. He cries: "My God! my God! why hast Thou forsaken Me."

He goes down into the grave, and rises again the third day. What is the first thing He says? It is all settled now. He had paid to the last farthing the penalty of the world's sin. He meets Mary, and his message to her for the disciples is, "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, to my God and your God." God and the Father now are alike to Him. He has satisfied the justice of God and He could say, My God, your God; My Father, your Father. Then the Father said, "Come up here," and he put Him right by his side on the throne, the place of power, of favour, of authority. There He is, sharing his Father's throne, for He is not on his own throne yet, remember that. And He says to us who are overcomers, "I will give you to sit with Me on my throne, as I am set down with my Father on his throne." By and by that promise will be fulfilled.

Now, I think, we know a good deal about the ascended life of Christ. But there is the great thought, that I have entirely left out so far, of his intercession for us, and his confession of us before the Father. When He was on the earth He said that whosoever would confess Him before men He would confess before the Father and before the holy angels. I think that is about the most wonderful thing in the Bible. You think, perhaps, it is sometimes hard to confess Christ before men. But Christ is placed in circumstances all the time when it is very hard for Him to confess you. Just think of it. Imagine Satan coming into the presence of God as he did of old. His name is the accuser; it is his business. It is not the office of Jesus Christ. I wish Christians would remember that, when they are disposed to criticise their brethren. Imagine, then, Satan, the accuser, coming to Christ, and saying, "I thought you said: 'If any man will follow Me let him deny himself.' There is that man down there, he never denied himself one thing; he is heaping up wealth so that both hands are full, and still he is not satisfied. There he is hugging it to his heart, while the world is dying for the means to preach the Gospel. Is he one of yours?" Jesus replies: "Yes, he is mine; he has confessed Me on the earth, and I will confess him before the Father. I hope that, by and by, through discipline, and trial, and chastening, he will be purified and purged. He is mine." Satan looks down again, and he sees some Christian lady carrying on her person wealth enough, in silks and diamonds, to build a church in Africa or India. "Is she one of your disciples?" says Satan. The Lord says: "Yes; she has confessed Me and I will confess her." So the Lord is all the time confessing us before the Father, because He has promised it. Oh, let us seek to be more worthy of being confessed by Jesus Christ.

Then think of Him as our Intercessor, praying for us at God's right hand day and night. I need not dwell on that, as we are familiar with the idea.

This, then, is what Christ is doing as He is seated at God's right hand. Twenty times in Scripture we find this expression, "Sat down at God's right hand." Only once is He represented as standing up—at the death of Stephen. I think we can understand how that was. I remember in the old slavery times hearing of a coloured man in Washington who prayed this prayer: "O Lord, thou knowest how they abuse us, how they whip us, how they steal our children from us, how they break up our families. O Lord, we sometimes wonder that when thou lookest upon these scenes thou dost not get right off thy throne." It seems to me that is what Jesus Christ did when they stoned Stephen to death. He could not contain Himself, so He stood up, and that was the attitude in which Stephen saw Him as he was about to depart and be with his Master. We can understand something of the meaning of the expression, "When once the Master of the house is risen up." All through the great day of atonement He has been seated there on the throne of his Father, accessible to his believing people, pointing to his finished work, and interceding for them. By and by He will rise up. When He has risen up, and hath shut to the door, some will stand without and knock; but He will say, "I never knew you." You remember when He read from the Prophet Isaiah, in the synagogue, He stopped at the words, "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." He did not go on to read, "and the day of the vengeance of our God." That day had not come. "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears;" that was the day of the acceptable year of the Lord. The other part was not to be fulfilled until his second appearing, when He shall come again in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel. The time will come when these words will be fulfilled. What a solemn subject for us to consider!

I beg of you who are weary and heavy laden with your sin to come to Jesus and find rest to your souls. And let us who have believed unto salvation labour that we may enter into the rest of reward.

THREEFOLD SONSHIP.

By Dr. A. J. GORDON, Boston.

THERE is hardly a more interesting and moving subject than this. It is the only theme that called out the deepest admiration from the calm and contemplative beloved desciple. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." The great Neander said, after many years of meditation, "I am convinced that the miracle of miracles, and the standing miracle of the ages, is the wondrous manifestation of the love of God to men by which they become sons of God."

The only way to reach and measure this subject is to follow the life of Jesus Christ Himself. For I challenge any one to deny the fact that there is nothing predicated or asserted of Jesus Christ from his birth to the end that is not perfectly true of every believer. "As He is, so are we in this world." He was begotten of the Holy Ghost; so are we. He was sealed of the Spirit; so are we. He was crucified, and the Apostle says we were crucified with Him. He rose again from the dead; "If ye then be risen with Christ." He ascended to the Father and sat down at his right hand; the Apostle says that we are raised up and made to sit together with Him. He is to appear in glory, and we shall also appear with Him. He shall reign upon the earth, and we shall reign with Him.

As we open the Scriptures we find in St. John's Gospel this remarkable phrase, "The only begotten Son of God." John goes back to the very beginning, tracing the pre-existent life of Jesus Christ, and so we find him using this phrase. It was true when John wrote, but I say it reverently, it is not true now. In the Epistle to the Romans we find Paul says, "Whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that He might be the first begotten from among many brethren." He was "the only begotten Son"; now He takes the rank of the first begotten. According to the English law of primogeniture, the eldest son has the inheritance. That is true of Christ, He is appointed heir of all things, but He does not inherit them alone; we are "joint heirs with Jesus Christ." All that He gained, He gained not for Himself, but for his people. Therefore you cannot find an experience through which He passed, or an attainment to which He reached that is not for us as much as for Him. So we find that John shows us Jesus in the beginning, one with God, in the very bosom of the Father. He takes us all through the wonderful story of Christ's earthly life, and we end by finding John the beloved disciple in the most intimate communion with the Master, leaning on his bosom. The Gospel opens with Jesus Christ in the bosom of of God, and closes with a sinner in the bosom of Christ.

What we want to do to-day is to trace the developments of the sonship of Jesus Christ in three stages, and to see how our sonship corresponds with it.

THE FIRST STAGE OF SONSHIP.

First we see Jesus Christ called the Son of God, simply for the reason that He was the Son of God begotten through the Holy Ghost. The angel announced to Mary: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke i. 35). There is where we start. For the same reason that you are your father's and your mother's son, born of these parents, Jesus Christ was the Son of God begotten of the Father through the Holy Spirit.

But observe this, that, notwithstanding it was announced that He was to be the Son of God, until the time of his baptism, so far as we can see, there was not a single person who knew Him as the Son of God. Can you find any evidence of it? Let us ask those who would be most likely to know. "John the Baptist, did you know that He was the Son of God?" He says, "I knew Him not, until the day when the Spirit was poured out upon Him and I saw the dove descending and resting upon Him; then I knew and saw and bare record that this is the Son of God." "John the Evangelist, you have written a good deal about the Sonship of Jesus Christ; how generally was it known?" "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not." Let us ask his mother. She certainly would be most likely to know, because the angel told her beforehand. Is it not strange that after Jesus Christ had preached the doctrine of the Resurrection, and announced it again and again, his disciples did not seem to understand it, or take it in. It was so with his mother. You remember this significant fact, that when Jesus was lost on the way back from Jerusalem to Nazareth, and after He was found his mother said to Him, "My son, how is it that thou hast dealt thus with us? Thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing." He said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" See what the Evangelist says, "She understood not the saying which He spake." So it seems to me it was that up to the time of his public baptism and the sealing of the Spirit, Jesus Christ was in the world as the Son of God, but the world knew Him not. Even those who were most intimately associated with Him knew Him not.

In 1 John iii. we find something about the parallel fact of our sonship. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not." We need not complain that the world does not know that we are the sons of God; it is not strange that it does not. When some one complained to Flavel about bad treatment, and how people did not seem to understand him, he said: "Of course they do not. We are citizens of heaven, children of the King, and they do not know anything about court manners. They cannot understand the vocabulary of a foreigner." Let us be content, therefore, rejoicing that the parallel fact is true that we are sons of God, just as Christ was, because we are begotten of the Holy Ghost.

There is a point here that a good many people are confused about. I once heard a learned minister make a distinction between sonship and adoption. God has not got any adopted sons in our sense of the word; let us understand this. All the sons of God are born in the house. Adoption simply means "son placing," not son making. "As many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God, which were born (or begotten) not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God."

How do we become sons of God? Through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore when we believe we become sons of God! "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." It is not a question of how you feel, or whether you have the earnest of the Spirit; it is simply a fact. It is not testimony that makes a thing true; the thing is true and that makes the testimony true. So you are not sons of God because you have the witness of the Spirit, but simply because you believe on Jesus Christ.

What does this sonship mean? "Marvel not," said Christ to Nicodemus, "that I said unto you: Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." To be born again is to be born from above. That is to say, heaven is our home; it is from heaven we are born. We are down here on the earth living a heavenly life. I have read a beautiful account of a water insect. It feeds on the bottom of the pond, but it has the power to take down with it a certain amount of atmospheric air and to hold it, and so all the time it is down below it is breathing the upper air. Just so with Jesus Christ. He came down from the atmosphere of heaven, but He was breathing it all the time He was here. So, when a son of God is born, God breathes into him the breath of heaven. Our true life has come down from heaven. Lady Powerscourt says: "the saint is not one who looks up from earth to heaven, but one who is looking down from heaven to earth." "Ye are not of the world, as I am not of the world." As sons of God we are all the while living in a divine atmosphere. That little insect at the bottom of the water is surrounded by many animals living and breathing the water life, but it is breathing quite a different life. We who are the sons of God are in the world, but the world knows us not, because our true life is in heaven.

When are we the sons of God? Now. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." The Scripture, so far as salvation is concerned, knows nothing about the future tense. "There is therefore now no condemnation." "Now then ye are no more strangers and foreigners." We are just as truly sons of God the moment we believe as we ever will be. You remember that one of England's kings was in exile, and went about in disguise. Nobody knew him, and he was on one occasion found helping the woman of the house where he had found a night's lodging in her household duties; but all the time he was the son of a king. By and by he was to be manifested in his true position. So we come to

THE SECOND STAGE OF SONSHIP.

Jesus Christ was the Son of God as witnessed by the Holy Ghost. In Matthew and Luke we read that at his baptism the heavens were opened, the Spirit of the Lord descended and rested upon Him, and a voice was heard from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son." Now at last God declares Jesus Christ to be his Son. The world had not known it before; now it is known, by a circle, at least.

I want you to notice a curious fact, which shows that Satan was a liar from the beginning. When God says a thing, it seems to be his delight to contradict it. What is the first thing that the tempter says to Christ in the wilderness? "If thou be the Son of God." As if He had said, "I heard God say you were his Son; I propose to test it." I would not say he did not believe that Christ was the Son of God, but he was bound to dispute it. From this time on to the very cross the dispute went on, whether Jesus Christ was the Son of God or not. The high priest said, when the Saviour was brought before him, "I adjure Thee, by the living God, tell me, art Thou the Son of God?" The chief priests and Pharisees demanded his death, and what was their accusation? They said, "He made Himself to be the Son of God." Even at the cross itself the controversy was kept up. They mockingly said, "If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross, and we will believe it. This is the great controversy now. There are some who know and believe that Jesus is the Son of God; but the great mass of mankind do not believe it.

Notice the several expressions used with reference to the witness of the Spirit to Christ's Sonship: the baptism of the Spirit, the sealing of the Spirit, the anointing of the Spirit, all mean the same thing. Christ Himself uses the expression: "Him hath God the Father sealed." He was sealed on the banks of the Jordan, of course. The expression refers to the lamb offered as a sin-offering. One was selected, brought into the presence of the priest, and examined to see if it were without blemish. It had to be perfectly faultless. If the priest was satisfied, he dropped a piece of wax on it and sealed it, to show that it was fit for sacrifice. God looked down on Christ, and to show to all the world that He was fit to be offered up as a sacrifice for the sins of the world, He said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Is there any parallel truth with respect to the believer? "Because ye are the sons of God, God hath sent forth his Spirit into your hearts, crying, Abba Father" (Gal. iv. 6). There is the witness of the Spirit. As I said, the witness of the Spirit did not make Jesus the Son of God; He was the Son of God, and, therefore, the Spirit witnessed to the fact. So the witness of the Spirit in our hearts does not make us sons of God, but, accepting the fact, the Spirit witnesseth with our spirit that it is so. Says the Apostle: "Grieve not the Spirit, by whom ye were sealed unto the day of redemption." Now we come to

THE THIRD STAGE OF SONSHIP.

In Romans i. we have this remarkable statement: "Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Here we have the manifestation of Jesus Christ with power. He had not been "with power" while He was on the earth. You recollect when He was about to be delivered up to be crucified, He asserted the fact that He could summon twelve legions of angels, but He would not do it. The Apostle says very significantly, He was "crucified through weakness." Just think of it. He was equal with the Father, and had all the prerogatives of Godhead; yet He allowed Himself to be led as a lamb to the slaughter—the very symbol of weakness. As though He were perfectly helpless, He was delivered up to death. What is the first thing we hear Him saying after his resurrection? "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." He was ready now to demonstrate his Sonship. Crucified in weakness, He was raised in power. He gave the command to the disciples to go into all the world and preach the good tidings of salvation to every creature. Then, as if He had asked, "Who am I, that I should send you to do this mighty work? I am He who has all power in heaven and on earth." He ascended and sat down at the right hand of the Father, and to place Himself in communion with his disciples He sent the Holy Ghost on them enduing them with power. "The works that I do shall ye do also; and greater works than these shall ye do because, I go to my Father." Therefore He was not only declared to be the Son of God, but the fact was demonstrated. He proved Himself to be the Son of God by what He did. All the ages since, and that are yet to come, have been and are to be, living testimonies of the power of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God. To Him all things shall yet be subjected. To Him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess, to the glory of God the Father.

Is there any parallel truth concering believers? There is a wonderful passage in Rom. viii. "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." What does it mean? We, the sons of God by faith, are going to be manifested as the Son of God was. The whole creation, now groaning under the bondage and dominion of sin, is waiting for this. There are tens of thousands of God's saints who have been hidden from the world who are yet to be manifested in power.

I have never spoken on this subject before, but as I was meditating on it before I left home, a wonderful illustration came to me that I will tell you. About twenty years ago, in making some repairs in my house, the workmen buried a cask twenty feet deep in the ground. This year some repairs were being done again, and the cask was taken out. It had all gone to decay, and the workmen threw it on the ground and left it there. When it became dark, a man saw something shining and shouted out, "What have you got there?" There was great excitement, and by and by a crowd gathered around; they had never seen such a thing. The fact was the decayed cask had become phosphorescent, so that it looked like silver. So it seems to me it will be with the saints when they are manifested in glory. "With what body do they come?" asks the Apostle. With bodies made like Christ's glorified body. The righteous shall shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. It was great condescension for Jesus Christ to become a son of man, to be born of a woman; but there is a still more wonderful thing—that men should be begotten of God, made partakers of the Divine nature. It is a great wonder that God should walk this earth; it is not less wonderful to know that there is a Man on the throne.

SIXTH DAY, MONDAY, AUG. 10.

ONE of the chief charms of the Convention was the variety, both of subject and of treatment. The unfolding and exposition of the great central doctrines of Scripture was, of course, kept well to the front. At the same time there were interspersed, by way of relief, questions of a more or less speculative kind. For instance, the morning session of the sixth day, Monday, August 10, was taken up with the discussion of such themes as the position, in the economy of grace, of Old Testament saints as compared with believers under the Gospel dispensation, with the different coming judgments referred to in the Gospels, the Epistles, and the Revelation. The prominent figure in these researches was Rev. Dr. W. Erdman, of Jamestown, N.Y., who seemed to have the letter of the Scriptures at tongue's end, and was never at a loss in giving some feasible explanation of a knotty or difficult point of interpretation. Dr. Gordon also brought his calm, clear, and matured thought to the elucidation of these somewhat recondite matters.

I do not think I could profitably occupy your space with any detailed report of the statement made as to the relations of Old and New Testament saints, and the exact sequence of the judgments that are to precede, accompany, or succeed the millennial age. The gist of the discussions was to this effect: While the position and privilege of such men as Abraham or David were less exalted than those of believers under the Gospel dispensation, because the atonement for sin was still in the future, their faith in a Redeemer to come was as savingly efficacious as is our faith in One who has completed the work of salvation. Dr. Erdman advanced the view, as to the position after death of these ancient worthies, that after the resurrection of Christ they were conveyed from "Paradise," so called, to some better place, where they could enjoy the presence of the glorified Christ. This, he thought, was the meaning of the phrase "leading captivity captive." The practical point insisted on was that the present is the day of Gentile opportunity and blessing. By and by, it may be soon, this favourable season of grace will pass away and be terminated, as far as rejectors of the Gospel are concerned, by the appearing of Jesus Christ to judge the Gentile nations, to receive his elect Bride, and to establish millennial glory.

Throughout the morning a perfect torrent of questions flowed in on the speakers. When Dr. Gordon was on his feet, and speaking as to the necessity of account being taken, even under the old dispensation, of the coming sufficient sacrifice for sin in order to salvation, one pertinacious questioner wished to know if a man then, and presumptively now, could not throw himself on the sovereign mercy of God, without reference to Jesus Christ's atoning work. Dr. Gordon cautiously replied that he would not risk such an experiment. In opposition to the theory implied in the question, Dr. Gordon remarked on the prayer of the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner," the true and exact interpretation would be, "God be propitious to me"—involving the thought of One who has made propitiation for sin.

THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

To this mighty theme Dr. Pierson addressed himself on Monday afternoon, in an address marked by an enthusiastic eloquence that showed the subject to be one very near his heart. He warmly contended that the promise of supernatural power with the preaching of the Gospel, accompanied by supernatural signs, is as binding to-day as when it was made by the departing Saviour. A rapid but comprehensive sketch was given of the extraordinary progress made in the work of foreign missions during the last century, so that now the whole habitable globe, not excepting Corea, the last of the sealed nations, is open to evangelising effort. Some of the more striking examples of this rapid progress were given, as in the case of Madagascar, the Telegu mission, some of the South Sea Islands, the opening of China, Africa, &c. These remarkable and undeniable facts were used by the speaker to press home an earnest appeal for a final and united effort to carry the message of the Gospel to the parts of the heathen world as yet unevangelised. This may be done during the remainder of the century, Dr. Pierson believes, if the whole Church of God will but brace its energies to the task. In order to its accomplishment, however, there would have to be a laying aside of all denominational jealousies, a sensible shortening of the time demanded for preparing missionary students, and a spirit of prayerful consecration in the Church as a whole.

As a pendant to his very stirring statement and appeal, Dr. Pierson moved a resolution, which was carried by acclamation, that a circular should be prepared in the name of the Convention, addressed to fellow believers in Jesus Christ the world over, setting forth some of the salient facts of recent missionary progress, and the unparalleled increase of missionary opportunity, and asking not only for a baptism of the spirit of prayer, but that a world Conference should be convened in some convenient centre and at the earliest period possible, with the view of apportioning and occupying all the unevangelised districts of the globe. Though somewhat out of course, it may be stated here that this circular letter was duly prepared and presented at the closing session of the Convention:—

"To fellow-believers of every name scattered through the world, greeting: Assembled in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ with one accord in one place, we have continued for ten days in prayer and supplication, communing with one another about the common salvation, the blessed hope, and the duty of witnessing to a lost world.

"It was near to our place of meeting that in 1747, at Northampton, Mass., Jonathan Edwards sent forth his trumpet peal calling upon disciples everywhere to united prayer for an effusion of he Spirit upon the whole habitable globe. That ummons to prayer marked a new epoch in the Church of God. Praying bands began to gather n this and other lands. Mighty revivals of eligion followed; immorality and infidelity were wonderfully checked; and after more than 1500 years of apathy and lethargy, the spirit of nissions was reawakened. In 1792 the monthly oncert was begun, and the first missionary ociety formed in England. In 1793 William Carey, the pioneer missionary, sailed for India. Since then over 100 missionary boards have been rganised, and probably not less than 100,000 nissionaries, including women, have gone forth nto the harvest field. The pillar has moved efore these humble followers, and the two-eaved gates have opened before them until the vhole world is accessible. The ports and portals f Pagan, Moslem, and even Papal lands are ow unsealed, and the last of the hermit nations velcomes the missionary. Results of missionary abour in the Hawaiian and Fiji islands, in Madagascar, in Japan, probably have no parallel ven in apostolic days, while even Pentecost is urpassed by the ingathering of 10,000 converts n one station in India within sixty days in the ear 1868. The missionary bands had scarce ompassed the walls and sounded the Gospel rumpet, when these walls fell, and we have but o march straight on and take possession of Satan's strongholds.

"God has thus in answer to prayer opened he door of access to the nations. Out of the pillar there came once more a voice: 'Speak nto the children of Israel, that they go forvard.' And yet the Church of Christ is slow o move in response to the providence of God. Nearly 800,000,000 of the human race are yet vithout the Gospel, vast districts are yet unccupied. So few are the labourers that if qually dividing the responsibility each must are for at least 100,000 souls. And yet there is n abundance of men and women in the Church o give the Gospel to every living creature beore this century closes. If but 10,000,000 out f 400,000,000 of nominal Christians would ndertake such systematic labour as that each ne of that number should in the course of the ext fifteen years reach 100 other souls with the Gospel message, the whole present population of he globe would have heard the glad tidings by he year 1900! Our own Lord's words are, Go ye and disciple all nations.' 'This Gospel f the kingdom shall be preached in all the vorld for a witness unto all nations, and then hall the end come.' Peter exhorts us both to ook for and hasten the coming of the day of God. And what if our inactivity delays his oming? Christ is waiting to see of the travail f his soul, and we are impressed that the things re just now of great importance: first the nmediate occupation and evangelisation of the estitute districts of the world's population, and econdly a new effusion of the Spirit in answer o united prayer.

"If at some great centre, like London or New York, a great Council of evangelistic elievers could meet to consider the wondervorking of God's providence and grace in nission fields, and how fields that are unoccupied nay be insured from any further neglect, and to rrange and adjust the work so as to prevent eedless waste and friction among workmen, it night greatly further the glorious object of the vorld's evangelisation, and we earnestly comnend the suggestion to the prayerful consideraion of the various bodies of Christian believers nd the various missionary organisations. What spectacle it would present both to angels and o men, could believers of every name, forgetting ll things in which they differ, meet by chosen epresentatives to enter systematically and harnoniously upon the work of sending forth abourers into every part of the world-field!

"But, above all else, our immediate and imerative need is a new spirit of earnest and revailing prayer. The first Pentecost covered en days of united, continued supplication. Every subsequent advance may be divinely raced to believing prayer, and upon this must epend a new Pentecost. We therefore earnstly appeal to all disciples to join us in imporunate and daily supplication for a new and mighty effusion of the Holy Spirit upon all ministers, missionaries, evangelists, pastors, teachers, and Christian workers, and upon the whole earth, that God would impart to all Christ's witnesses the tongues of fire and melt hard hearts before the burning message. It is not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord that all true success must be secured; let us call upon God till He answereth by fire! What we are to do for the salvation of the lost must be done quickly, for the generation is passing away, and we with it. Obedient to our marching orders, let us go to all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, while from our very hearts we pray, Thy kingdom come.

"Grace, mercy, and peace be with you all. Done in Convention at Northfield, Mass., Aug. 14, 1885."

The Committee of seven who prepared this letter were Drs. Pierson, Gordon, Pentecost, and Munhall, Mr. J. E. K. Studd, Rev. W. Ashmore (China missionary), and Miss Dryer, Chicago.

In a very interesting address, Rev. William Ashmore, for many years an American missionary in China, supplemented the more didactic utterances of the fiery Philadelphian divine. Dr. Pierson, he said, had only told the solemn truth as to missionary progress and opportunity, and he hoped the churches would send the doctor up and down the land like another Peter the Hermit, to carry on a missionary crusade, and fan the flame of zeal among Christians for a vigorous prosecution of this work. The controversy that was waged between Elijah and the priests of Baal is now being carried on in the heathen nations. The false gods of these people, so long held in bondage to error and superstition, are being put to the test, and the same results would follow. The systems of Confucius and Buddha in China are being tried by weary searchers after peace and rest of soul, and they are being found wanting. To illustrate the special difficulties of Gospel work in China, Mr. Ashmore asked what the condition of this land would be if all Christian agencies and all knowledge of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of men had been banished for generations past? In the whole of the native literature of the Chinese nation, the only reference to Jesus is the insertion of his name in a dictionary, in which he is described as "a Western sage." Still, it is remarkably evident that a great work of preparation has, in God's Providence, been going on among the people, and there are many tokens that the set time to favour these nations, so long wrapt in darkness, is nigh. The little band of 600 missionaries in China are but a mere handful compared with the vast needs of the country; but the importance of their work is now recognised by eminent statesmen and others in authority. The call to Christians in other and more highly-favoured lands to sustain the hands of these workers by prayer and practical sympathy, and to multiply their number, is very urgent. Let us, like Elijah of old, call upon our God to answer by fire, and show to these people that He is the living and the true God.

Mr. Moody and others prayed with much unction and fervour that the missionaries now labouring in China might be endued with power from on high, and that other believers might be speedily thrust out into this great and ripe harvest-field.

THE CAMBRIDGE SEVEN.

The same evening Mr. J. E. K. Studd told to a deeply interested audience of men in the East Hall the story of "The Cambridge Seven," who lately proceeded to China as missionaries, making special reference, of course, to his brother, Mr. C. T. Studd. As your readers are familiar with most of the facts, I need not now recapitulate them. Mr. Studd said his brother was absent from England when Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey visited Cambridge, so that he did not share in the blessing that fell so remarkably on the students there. It was not till the great meetings in London were well advanced that he came under the inspiring influence of Mr. Moody's preaching. Then he began to labour for the conversion of his friends and associates. The first five he took to the meetings, and who all decided to serve Christ, were among the leading cricketers of the land.

Another very interesting fact mentioned with reference to the visit of Mr. Studd and Mr. Stanley Smith to Oxford I had not heard before. One of the students there, who rowed this year in the Oxford Eight at the University boat-race, was greatly impressed by that visit; he did not then decide to become a Christian, though he was so much interested that he sent a cheque for £10 to the Secretary of the China Inland Mission. Mr. Broomhall, judging from the tone of his letter that he had not an intelligent faith in Christ, explained the way of life to him, while acknowledging receipt of the money, and this was the means in God's hands of leading him to a decision. The day after the boat-race, as some of your readers may recollect, this young man and one of the Cambridge eight addressed a Gospel meeting in Richmond.

As one result of the great farewell meeting at Exeter Hall, which no one present at it will readily forget, Mr. Studd said that he understood that hosts of applications poured in upon the China Inland Mission from men and women offering themselves as missionaries. Particulars were given of the outward voyage and the effective Christian testimony which the party of seven were enabled to give; the story of the remarkable conversion of the infidel, blaspheming captain excited great interest. Every one of the thirteen second-class passengers professed conversion to God.

Towards the close of his deeply encouraging narration Mr. Studd told of a case of divine healing in Pekin, in answer to the prayer of Mr. Stanley Smith and Dr. Mackenzie. A man suffering from epilepsy who was regarded as incurable was anointed and prayed over, the result being his perfect restoration to health. The last letters received from Mr. C. T. Studd, said his brother, are full of joy in connection with his work. Several friends in England have banded themselves to pray to God at a specified and agreed time on behalf of China missions; perhaps some American Christians may be moved to imitate this example.

Mr. J. E. K. Studd repeated his statement on the following evening at a women's meeting in Marquand Hall when the same interest was awakened.

WOMEN'S MEETINGS.

Several evenings when the men were in session at East Hall, meetings of women were held at Marquand Hall, and were addressed by some of the many Christian sisters at the Convention. One evening a narrative of her labours in Turkey, was given by Mrs. M. J. Davis, of Springfield. Miss Eugenia Gibson told of her former work in Lucknow, while Mrs. G. C. Needham related how her two children, eight and ten, five years ago adopted a missionary, saving their money so as to pay him 100 dollars a year. Later they discharged him and paid the expenses of a Kaffir boy who returned to preach in Africa. Mrs. L. D. Wishard spoke of the growth of the Y.W.C.A. in colleges. One missionary woman among the audience, who probably might have added a narrative, was Martha Price, who has been in Natal, South Africa. Miss S. K. Howland, of Ceylon, and Mrs. R. Aikman, who has laboured in China, were among the missionaries present. On subsequent occasions words of testimony or of exhortation were given by Mrs. Coe, of New York, Mrs. Dr. Gordon, of Boston, and other lady workers.

SEVENTH DAY, TUESDAY, AUG. 11.

THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

THIS was the all-important theme chosen for consideration on Tuesday, August 11; it was opened by Dr. Gordon in an address of much unction and freshness of thought.

Mark the change of tenses, he said, in that wonderful promise of John xiv. 17. "He dwelleth with you (present tense) and shall be in you" (future tense). The distinction between the relation of God through the Holy Ghost to the Church before and after Pentecost was that before He dwelt with his people, and since then, by his Spirit, He dwells in them. All through the history of God's dealings with his people we find

He is seeking to dwell with them, and history tells us how He accomplished this. He was with them in the pillar of cloud and fire, in the visible expression of his presence on the mercy seat in the tabernacle and in the temple. Subsequently this manifested presence was removed on account of the sin of the Israelites and the temple was left desolate. In due time God came again to dwell with his people in the person of his Son, who "was made flesh and tabernacled among us." God appeared veiled in human flesh "Emmanuel, God with us." The Jews rejected Him, and the glory of God was removed a second time. But He comes back in the descent of the Holy Ghost, and henceforth the believer is to be the temple of the Holy Ghost, so that God now dwells in his people, as well as with them.

Let us understand this significant fact of the present dispensation, that God is, so to speak, incarnate in the Church of Christ, through the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. We never read in the later Scriptures of God dwelling merely with his Church, "Know ye not that your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost that dwelleth in you;" and other passages to the like effect. Remember that Jesus is our example in all things, what is true of Him is true of his Body, the Church, indwelt by the Holy Ghost. Jesus was begotten, baptized, led, empowered, and anointed by the Holy Ghost. All this is or ought to be true of us. Many instances are recorded in the early Church of men who were "filled with the Spirit." That is at once our duty and our privilege. We read of one who was so pious and devoted that his neighbours called him "a God-intoxicated man." This is what the Apostle means when he says we are to be "filled with the Spirit." Somebody asks how this great mystery is to be explained. If we cannot fill ourselves, we can at least empty ourselves of all that would exclude the heavenly visitor and guest. We can create a vacuum in our hearts, so that the Spirit shall come in and fill the place thus made ready for Him. When the first disciples waited ten days for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, there must have been many things of which they had to get rid. Peter, of his self-conceit and self-will; John, of the revengeful spirit that prompted him to call down fire from heaven on those who were not of their company; and so with the others. We read that at the appointed time the Spirit came with a rushing mighty wind, as if to fill up the vacuum created by this emptying process. Oh, that God would teach us the secret of being filled with the Spirit!

Those who have read the biography of James Brainerd, who died at twenty-eight, will know that he did a work which any man might envy who died at seventy. He was baptized with the Holy Ghost; he tells the very day and hour when the baptism came upon him. He bestirred the people in this very part of the country, so that sinners fell before his preaching like grass before the scythe. His words were so spontaneous and so powerful that they were blessed to all who came within the scope of his influence in a marvellous way. One day he was out riding, and casually met another horseman and a stranger at a watering trough. He said to him sweetly: "I hope you love the Lord; if you don't I want to commend Him to you as your best friend." They parted, but this stranger could not get rid of the words. They were the means of his conversion, and he became a missionary to Africa. It was not until he saw a portrait in a book years after that he ever knew who the man was who spoke to him at the watering trough.

As Christ was led of the Spirit, so may we be. We know how Philip, the evangelist, was directly guided by the Holy Ghost to join the inquiring Ethiopian. We ought to expect and to look for the same leading in our daily life. Doubtless we could all give some illustrations of it. I may be permitted to mention one in the experience of my wife. We were enjoying a season of revival. One morning she said she felt that she must go and talk to so-and-so, mentioning the name of a young man in the city, the son of a wealthy father, but who had for years lived a profligate life. In response to this powerful impulse, she started for the other side of the city, where the young man was. She rang the bell, went in and sat down. The young man came into the room, and at once burst into tears, saying, "I am glad you have come to see me." It was the first time he had been known to show any tenderness of spirit for years. Before she left the house he was on his knees, and had yielded himself up to Jesus Christ. From that moment he has been a strong, stedfast, God-fearing Christian man. Was that not an example of the direct leading of the Holy Ghost?

Dr. Guthrie on one occasion had a strong impulse to visit an old widow, a confirmed cripple. After repelling the feeling for some time (he had visited her very recently), he yielded to the prompting and made haste to go to her cottage, which he reached just in time to save her from the flames which had taken hold of the place, and would have overwhelmed her in five minutes more.

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." When we are led of the Spirit we should have perfect freedom in everything. Not, however, freedom to do just what we please, but what He pleases. That is what we want in our churches. I shall never forget how I was startled once by a man, a stranger to me, who came into my church one morning. After the service was over, he came to me and said: "Do you always have a programme made in your church for the Holy Ghost?" Everything had been fixed up in the usual way—a hymn here, a voluntary there, and response here, then the sermon, and so on from beginning to end. Certainly the Spirit of the Lord had not much liberty there. It is our privilege to be so led of the Spirit that we shall have no doubt as to the course of action we ought to take. There is one beautiful change in the Revised Version of the New Testament, which no doubt spoils a good many sermons, but yet conveys a blessed thought. It reads in the old version, "Thanks be to God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ." The New Version turns it right round, so that it reads: "Thanks be to God who always leadeth us in triumph in Christ." Paul exults in this liberty of being led captive, so to speak, at the chariot wheels of his Lord. That is the liberty we want—to do as the Lord tells us, and to have our own way about nothing. His way is the best way, and the way of victory.

We are told that Jesus "returned in the power of the Spirit." This is what He said to his disciples, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." In the New Testament power is always linked with the Holy Spirit; there are nearly fifty such passages. The most intangible form that water takes is the vaporous form, and yet we know that that is the most powerful of any. It drives the ponderous engine, propels the huge ship through the water, and sets in motion the mightiest machinery. This nineteenth century is an illustration of the marvellous power of water in its vaporous form. That is a symbol of the wonder-working power of the Holy Ghost, which can alone move our Christian machinery to useful ends. That power is ours if we only seek for it, and receive it when bestowed. We read in the life of Brainerd, how, in answer to agonising prayer, he was endued with the mighty power of the Holy Ghost, so that when he went out to preach the people, as it were, fell before him. Jonathan Edwards, who published his life, says that in looking through the whole of Brainerd's private diary, he could not find a single instance recorded of a day having been set apart and consecrated to the Lord, that was not marked by some wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit in his work.

Then we come to the anointing of the Spirit. When Aaron was consecrated, the ceremony was in two parts; there was the sprinkling with the blood, and then the anointing with the oil. Types of the atonement by Christ and the enduement of power by the Holy Ghost. So through the early Church we find a distinction made between the reception of the truth as to salvation through the atonement, and the bestowal of power for life and service.

I have carried you in thought through this most tender and pathetic theme. As I look on this gathering of Christians I am aware that it is a somewhat rare company to get together. I look into your faces and I know you are in earnest God forbid I should speak of myself, but we are here as one family, and we may be helped by each other's experience. I well remember being here when the first Conference was held, and how we talked about this matter. After several days, I recollect, some of us went into a room and began to pray together. It was a sweet season we tarried nearly all night asking for this one thing—that God would teach us how to receive the anointing of the Spirit. We wen away to our separate spheres of work. Fo some time it was my daily prayer: "O Lord let me know what it is to have the powe of the Holy Ghost." I can never forget ho one day, when I was away from home, i seemed as if the windows of heaven wer opened. I said to a brother in whose house was: "Let us go apart and pray." That da my soul was lifted up in a wonderful way. went home, and when I preached the congregation were moved as it had not been for nearl fifteen years. We entered on one of the mos blessed revivals I have ever seen. When Go blesses a minister, He blesses the Church at th same time. That is what we who are worker all want to experience. I wish that spontaneously, without any motion of our own, w should be found in this Convention getting int little companies to pray to God for this blessing I pray that the outcome of this gathering sha be that scores of us may carry away with us tha which is beyond all price—the power of the Hol Ghost in a consecrated Christian life and service

At the close of Dr. Gordon's solemn words exhortation, the company sang softly Mr. P. Bliss's consecration hymn—

"More holiness give me," after which the gathering dispersed, with a unusual awe upon them. In the afternoon the same day Mr. Moody gave his well-know address on "The Holy Spirit for Service."* H had previously been requested by a rising vot of the Convention to give this address, whic never fails to be most inspiring and impressive.

WORK AMONG COLLEGE STUDENTS.

Not being able to be present I extract th following from a local report:—

On Tuesday evening the men's meeting wa of unusual interest, and the subject was one tha deserved to have been developed in a regula session. General Secretary L. D. Wishard spok of the college work to an audience of 150, whom 60 were ministers, and 40 others officer of churches. Of this whole number only 17 ha regularly observed the day of prayer for college but when Mr. Wishard had finished detailin the advantages the colleges of the country present for evangelistic work, together with th work that is going on, the 150 rose and pledge themselves to observe hereafter the Thursday se apart in January for prayer for college student

Mr. Wishard is fitted in every way for h work; a graduate of Princeton, he knows a the ins and outs, customs and ways, of colleg life. He described the circumstances attendin the observance in 1876 of the day of prayer Princeton. There, as elsewhere, the Christia workers in college expected a revival to begin the day of prayer. They were going to hav Mr. Moody to help. College-boy like, the resolved they wouldn't bungle anything by effor of their own, and waited for the evangelist. M Moody was providentially called South; by th advice of a few older spirits the boys went work themselves, with fruitful results which onl increased when Mr. Moody came later. Eighty two out of 87 converted then stood the test of lat life. That is one grand feature of the college wor There is no place like college where it is so ha for a man to make a stand, where all his litt inconsistencies will be pointed out so unsparingl

Beyond these individual results, also came th Inter-Collegiate Young Men's Christian Ass ciation. The young converts felt that the ought to break down somewhat the strict "tow and gown" relations which always existed Princeton, and join the village Young Men Christian Association.

After this union came the thought: We compete with other colleges in athletics and scholarship; why not in Christian work? At a convention in Louisville an Association was formed which to-day includes 195 colleges and 10,000 students. The Association works in four ways: by conventions, correspondence, the circulation of documents giving facts about the progress of work and personal visitation by the Secretary. The conventions give a new life to the work and send back into every college newly-consecrated men. We are also endeavouring to establish a system of Bible study. But the greatest feature of all perhaps is the presentation of the mission field both to medical, divinity and classical students, trying to get them to help on the wonderful work begun in 1806 at Williams College when three young men held a prayer meeting under a haystack in a storm and chose the world as their field. The difficulty is that the young men to-day are willing to go where the Lord calls them—if He doesn't call them where they don't want to go.

Lastly, we do individual work, seeking to reach the "freshmen" as they come in. There is usually a committee on hand, who greet the easily recognised new man as he comes, give him acceptable information on college customs and especially tell him that he must join the Y.M.C.A. He promises and goes to the meeting. He finds it different from any meeting he ever attended in his life. The company consists of young men who cannot exhaust any Bible subject and do not exhaust the audience. Plenty of singing enlivens the meeting. Our young comer thinks he can do as well as that, and in a moment more he is on his feet, not saying very much, but doing what means a good deal more, taking his stand for Christ.

Mr. J. E. K. Studd said efforts were made in English universities to reach the students. Bible study classes and prayer meetings were held at Cambridge. A few of the Christian workers at Oxford and Cambridge join in conferences periodically.

DR. GORDON AND "FAITH HEALING."

On the evening on which Mr. Studd rehearsed the story of "The Cambridge Seven," I chanced to encounter Dr. Gordon in the entrance lobby of Marquand Hall. Knowing that he was interested in the matter of Faith Healing, from a recollection of his book, published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, and recently reviewed in THE CHRISTIAN, I broached the subject, by a reference to the case of a healed epileptic in Pekin, related by Mr. Studd. The Doctor, in freely talking over the vexed question, said that he had become personally acquainted with so many cases of God's healing in answer to the prayer of faith that he could no more dispute it than he could dispute his own existence. At the same time he thought great wisdom and discrimination were needed in treating cases. He did not appear to concede that the required conditions were of such a cheap and easy kind as to warrant anyone in taking up Faith Healing as a profession, or looking for its manifestation in any wholesale or promiscuous way.

It was interesting to hear how his thoughts had been practically directed to this topic. It was in 1876, when Mr. Moody was holding Gospel services in Boston. A man came into the place of meeting one evening in a state of great mental distress because of his bondage to the confirmed habit of opium eating. He had come to the conclusion that nothing could deliver him but the direct intervention of God, and he entreated the Christians to pray that he might be set free from his degrading slavery. The workers gathered round the poor man and fervently presented him in prayer to God. Next night the man returned and said that for the first time during many years he had passed the day without indulging in the hateful drug. He continued to attend the meetings, and night by night he testified to the delivering and keeping power of God. He is now a Y.M.C.A. secretary in a city not far from Boston, and, said the Doctor, his testimony is, that from the time of his conversion he has never felt a craving for the opium in the slightest degree.

Dr. Gordon told me of another very remarkable case, with all the details of which he was personally familiar. A friend of his own, an experienced and most devoted returned missionary, had a young son afflicted with a very malignant cancer in the lower jaw. The best physicians were consulted, and they agreed that the only hope of saving the boy's life was by amputation of the jaw, which, of course, would disfigure him for life. This was a sad alternative, but the father acceeded to its being done to save the life of his child. The case was mentioned at Dr. Gordon's prayer meeting the evening before the operation was to take place, and it was spread before the Lord. The thought impressed itself on Dr. Gordon's mind that here was a case in which the Lord might reasonably be expected to interpose on behalf of the child of his faithful servant, and he had a long conversation with the father that evening about it. Finally, he persuaded the distressed parent to remove his son from the hospital next morning. The boy was brought to Dr. Gordon's own house where he remained a fortnight. During that time the doctor said he sought to imbue the mind of the afflicted boy with the conviction of God's power and willingness to heal him, so that there might be harmony of feeling and desire and mutual faith on the part of all interested. Then a few Christian friends came together, the lad was anointed and prayed over according to the precedent of James v. 14, 15. He was then removed to the country. Some six weeks afterwards the father wrote to Dr. Gordon to the effect that every trace of the cancer had disappeared.

Later on in the Convention, twice I heard from other lips a still more wonderful story of the healing of a New York lady, who, with her husband, was then present at its sessions. This lady, living in the midst of worldly luxury, was afflicted with a disease pronounced incurable, after several voyages to Europe for medical advice had been made without effect. One day she called her husband, who, like herself, had been up to that time leading a careless and worldly life. She said she believed there was one last resort: God could heal her, as she had been told. But first of all she felt that she must go to Him for the pardon of her sins, then she would consecrate herself and all her wealth to God, if He were pleased to restore her to health. She wanted her husband to do the same. He was so impressed that he agreed. They went to the place where they thought they would get the best teaching, and gave their hearts to God. In a very brief space of time this lady was found engaged nightly in a part of New York notorious as being the haunt of degraded women. She would be seen sitting on the doorsteps till a late hour night after night, pleading with her unhappy sisters to quit their evil life. She is now in good health, has a large establishment in the country to which she invites worn-out evangelists and workers to go and recruit themselves at her expense, and is in many ways using her large means for the glory of God and the salvation of her fellows.

EIGHTH DAY, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 12.

HOLY LIVING.

THE morning session of the eighth day was given up to the important question of practical sanctification, as it ought to appear in the lives of believers. In opening up the subject, Dr. MUNHALL, of Indianapolis, observed that the ultra and unscriptural views taught by some had, in many cases, caused the pendulum of Christian thought to swing round to the other extreme. This must not prevent us from seeking to know just what God says about the matter. Personal sanctification, or holiness, or consecration—they are convertible terms—is plainly and repeatedly enjoined in the Scriptures: e.g., Lev. xi. 44; 1 Thess. iv. 3; 1 Peter i. 13—16. It simply means being separated or set apart for the use and service of God. We are warranted in saying that God does not, nay, cannot use anyone in his service who is not thus devoted or set apart to Him. While this is true, it is also true that "the old man," with all his evil tendencies, remains in the believer, and this cuts at the roots of all pretension to sinlessness. No Christian would claim to be sinless if he were really honest with God and with himself. God sanctifies the Christian in Christ by the Spirit through the Word. The term "second blessing," used by some, is an unfortunate one, though it rightly enough conveys the idea of a distinct work in the soul beyond the act of justification and forgiveness through faith in Jesus Christ.

SANCTIFICATION, OR SEPARATION, is seen in the relinquishment of all entangling worldly alliances and engagements. This can only be done by letting Christ take full possession of the heart; then the questions of worldly engagements and amusements may safely be left to take care of themselves. Those who profess to be Christians and still are troubled with a hankering after the husks and vanities of the world are much to be pitied, the only cure is a revelation of Christ in the heart as the One altogether lovely, the satisfying portion of his people. Another distinguishing feature of the sanctified life is the exhibition of a forgiving spirit. To cherish enmity or illwill is utterly at variance with the profession of holiness. Purity of speech is another important result. I have heard some people who called themselves Christians use language that would have disgraced any ungodly man. To be pure in speech and holy in demeanour does not involve sourness of visage or austerity of temperament. Because I laugh when I see or hear anything funny I am not thereby to be accounted an unsanctified man. Who has so great a right to be cheerful and happy as "the child of a king"? Further, holiness shows itself in cleanliness of body. We are tempted to think lightly of the body, and to neglect it, forgetting that it is the temple of the Holy Ghost. We ought so to discipline them that they may be healthy and strong. We cannot presume on the mercy of God, and think that He will keep us in health, if we are all the time neglecting our bodies or sowing the seeds of disease. If we are truly sanctified we shall also be lovable in our tempers, and faithful in our service of God. I have heard of a company of Christians in some church calling itself "a holiness band;" the whole Church ought to be a holiness band. A man once told me he was so infatuated with holiness that he could not preach about anything else. I told him I thanked God I was not infatuated with holiness, but I was infatuated with the Son of God. People may call us peculiar, but there is not a man mentioned in the history of the Church whom God has used who has not been called peculiar. Joshua and Caleb were the peculiar men of their time, but they were willing to face the big giants of the land, and they brought back some of the big grapes; the two always go together. In closing his address, Dr. Munhall asked all who had fully devoted themselves to Christ, to rise. A great proportion of the audience stood on their feet, but it was very noticeable that Mr. Moody, Dr. Gordon, Dr. Pentecost, and others, did not respond; as several afterwards expressed it, they had got beyond making any such avowals as to their own Christian attainments. Such a test seems to me to be quite a worthless and too often a perilous one. Where the company is largely Christian, as in this case, the temptation is to follow the crowd, at the expense of truth and conviction, thus lying to God and our neighbour.

ADDRESS BY DR. PENTECOST.

All truth is so interlaced with every other truth that we are sure to fall into mistakes if we try to make a clean cut of any doctrine presented by itself. Another caution: the man who seeks any grace for the sake of that grace, or as something separate and apart from Jesus Christ, never gets it. He may get something that he will call sanctification, but there is no such gift apart from Jesus Christ, who is the sum and substance of every gift and grace. Therefore we are never to seek sanctification; we are to seek Christ. Such a gift has no value apart from the Great Giver. When I was an evangelist

I was a good deal away from home, and it was my custom when I returned to bring some little present to my eldest child Lucy. She grew to be so very anxious about her present that she would run to meet me and say: "Papa, what have you brought me?" I began to be a little grieved, lest she should think more of the gift than of her father, so on one occasion I resolved not to bring her any present. She came bounding downstairs as usual on my return. She did not even say she was glad I had come back, but asked what I had brought her. I said, "Lucy, I just brought you myself this time." It seemed to dawn upon her what I meant, so she threw her arms round my neck and said: "I am so glad you are come." Sometimes we desire God's gifts for the sake of experience, or of power, or of enjoyment. We ought to desire to have Christ Himself; then we shall have all that He brings. I once had sanctification, as I thought, and I fell into great spiritual darkness, because I had sought it apart from Christ. I have therefore learned to be careful about seeking sanctification purely as a matter of experience.

Sanctification is to be had first of all in union with Christ. He says, "For their sakes, I sanctify Myself." Truth was not only revealed in Christ, but by Christ, and all truth is made efficient to us in Christ. Further, sanctification is realised in its true perfection by communion with Christ. That which changeth me into his image (2 Cor. iii. 18) must be sanctification; and this is greatly stimulated by the hope of Christ's return (1 John iii. 1). Every man who has in him the sure and certain hope of the return and is daily looking for it, purifies himself even as his Lord is pure. Here I think is a great incentive to holiness. If we really believed that within the next twenty-four hours yonder blue would be rent asunder, and Christ would appear in his glory, how the world, with its vain show, would fade out of our thoughts; how selfishness and carnality and jealousy and all that mars our Christian life would drop out of our lives. No man can be looking forward to the advent of Jesus Christ without striving, almost unconsciously, to keep his garments unspotted from the world.

In the Apostle Paul we have a practical illustration and exhibition of this doctrine. He did not talk much about his own sanctification, but it was a great, working, effectual power in his life, from the time that he apprehended Christ as his Saviour, or rather was apprehended of Him. From that time Paul had no worldly ambition. He had no high ideas about himself. When you hear a man talking largely about himself and his attainments, set it down in your mind that he is not very greatly sanctified. Paul knew much about his Lord; yet he says he desires "to know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." Paul had no slothful habits. I have sometimes found that those who were professedly sanctified have become remiss and slothful in their Christian service. They become fascinated with their present experience, have got into little coteries, as though they were a sort of elect among Christians, and have ceased to take an active personal interest in religious effort. But this grand old man, after all these years of service and of suffering in the cause of Christ, says he forgets the things that are behind and presses forward to the goal which is yet ahead. That is what I call sanctification.

This separated life which we call sanctification is for two purposes, first for the preparation of our own character, and then for the service which God has prepared for us and prepared us for. From this service we must banish all thought of self-glorification or self-aggrandisement. We have to remember, too, that in the reception and use of power from God we are not to measure our sanctification by the apparent results of our work. Many workers get into trouble because they do not see immediate results, so that they get discouraged. God does not deign always to bless the efforts of his servants in the same measure, as far as the eye of sense can see. Peter preached on the day of Pentecost, and three thousand souls were converted, Stephen preached a much abler discourse, from an intellectual standpoint, and he was stoned to death; it seemed as though that sermon were a failure. But there was one man standing by who held the clothes of those who stoned Stephen and who, yet, never forgot the words of the preacher. Paul in a certain sense was a resurrection of Stephen. If you study his epistles you will find that Paul's theology is based on that sermon of Stephen. Let us never be discouraged about results, if we are honestly striving to serve God with all our powers, with a single eye for the extension of his kingdom, and in simple dependence on his strength, imparted through the Word by the Holy Spirit. My experience has been that there is a danger of trusting to our own might and prowess instead of implicitly leaning on the arm of Omnipotence. I remember a good many years ago, when I was very poor, I made a great stretch, as circumstances went then, to relieve my wife in a part of her kitchen duties. It was summer time, and there were small children in the family. One day I saw a stove, and I thought it would be of great assistance to my wife in cooking without having to keep the fire alight. Straining a point, I purchased the stove and had it brought home. Now I thought this would prepare the breakfast nicely—and I would not have to get up so early to light the fire! My wife liked the arrangement, and everything seemed all right. Next morning I went to see how the cooking of the breakfast was going on. There it was being nicely prepared, but there was a great fire burning in the range! "What did you make that great fire for?" I asked, somewhat perplexed. My wife replied: "Oh, I thought if the stove didn't work I would have the fire to fall back upon." That is very much the way we sometimes do with God. We go out to our work, and we think that if we fail we will have God to fall back upon. Let us look to Him for the message and the power to make it effectual, and He will assuredly, as it so pleaseth Him, grant us the success.

At the close of this interesting season, Mr. Moody focussed the talk of his two preceding brethren by saying that the short cut to the secret of power in life and for service was summed up in the five words: "Be filled with the Spirit." We can obey this command without having any deep thought about theology. If we want this blessing above all else, God will give it to us right here in his presence. He delights to give good gifts to the sons of men.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

On Wednesday afternoon, another deeply interesting and profitable two hours were passed in reviewing the three topics of Working among the Young, the Prayer-meeting, and the Service of Praise. Some condensed notes on each may prove useful to the reader.

Rev. Albert Woodruffe told of the planting and the spread of Sunday-schools in Germany. Beginning at Munich he traced the course of the movement, carried on amid many obstacles, till at the present time there are 3000 Sabbath-schools in Germany, with 30,000 teachers and 300,000 scholars, who are being taught the truths of salvation by faith in the finished work of Christ. This is a very important effort, insomuch as it is carried on in a land where even Luther unhappily left the poison of baptismal regeneration to do its deadly work.

Mr. Ensign, Chicago, representing the work of the Sunday-school Union in the far Western States, awakened considerable interest by reciting the efforts made in these remote regions to reach the children and train them up to God and a useful life. In many parts of the West, he said, not one-half of the children are cared for spiritually, and this neglect seems to be increasing. There are some solitary workers who have done and are doing a great work among the children, establishing Sunday-schools in out-of-the-way spots, which become centres of rich blessing to the population around. Last year the Sunday-school Union of America sent its agents into about 1800 of these primitive communities, planting schools and reaching 380,000 young people with the influence of the Word of God. Poor boys who show special promise are helped to an education that will fit them for filling some useful post in the Lord's vineyard.

Judge Wayland, of New Haven, pleaded that greater things should be done in home mission work in the large centres of population in the Eastern States. Suppose a number of young people are converted in some time of revival, how are you going to utilise their talent and give vent to the ardour and enthusiasm of first love? There is no better way than by setting them to work in mission schools. The Judge is no lover of paid choirs; he suggested that in cases where funds were needed for home mission work, the choirs should be disbanded, and the cost—say 3000 dollars annually—applied to the founding of mission schools. In my American experiences it has not yet been my fortune, good or bad, to attend any service where there is a paid choir; but it is, apparently, a settled institution in many of the well-to-do churches, and I fear the very practical, but revolutionary, proposal of the New Haven Judge will not meet with much acceptance. Precedent and custom seem to count for not a little, even in "the birthplace and home of American freedom."

PRAYER MEETINGS.

On this topic Dr. Pierson in substance said: The importance of the prayer meeting can hardly be over-estimated; it is the pulse of the spiritual life in a church. The power to conduct, with profit, a prayer meeting, is one of the greatest qualities a man can possess, and it ought to be sedulously cultivated. First of all, a prayer meeting ought to be a prayer meeting, not a sermon or lecture. There should be no formality about proceedings, and no starchiness in those who take part. Let the remarks of the leader take a conversational, colloquial form. In Bethany Church, Philadelphia, where I minister, we are able to get some 600 to 800 persons at our prayer meeting, and there, as elsewhere, we find the danger of being drawn away from prayer to lecturing or talking. It is good to go to the public prayer meeting straight from the atmosphere of the closet. No wonder that such a blessing fell at Pentecost, and again in the house of Cornelius, when Peter preached. In the one case the disciples had been praying in the upper room for ten days; in the other, the centurion had been praying to God when the message came to him to send for the Apostle. There ought to be lively, cheerful, and harmonious singing. Another essential to success is brief testimony from the Christian workers. We want something definite to pray for. Many people go to the meeting with only the vaguest idea of what they are to pray for. Let one worker get up and tell of some new converts, or of some who rose for prayer in the evangelistic meeting, or of some house-to-house visitation, and there will be plenty of subject-matter for the united petitions of the meeting. Among the greatest obstacles to profit in prayer meetings are the long preambles, the formal conclusions, and the hackneyed iteration of the same petitions time after time; let our prayers be short and direct.

In some remarks on the subject, Mr. Moody ventilated his long-standing grievance against badly ventilated meeting places. In New England, he said, many of the prayer meetings are held downstairs in places that look as though they had not had a sweep of fresh air through them for ten years. Have new hymns introduced once in a while. Let there be no prosy reading of long chapters, and do not have the same men every time to lead the prayers. If a man is in the habit of making long prayers, let the leader of the meeting tell him honestly and frankly that he must not do it. If told in a proper spirit, he ought not to feel hurt; if he does, it is better to offend one man than spoil the whole meeting. My experience is, that those who make very long prayers in meeting do not pray much at home. Do not allow any man to take part in the exercises who has not got a clean record in business, or who is known to have any stain on his moral character.

THE SERVICE OF PRAISE.

Mr. Moody called Rev. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, to the stand to open this topic. He said, the foundation of all praise that is worth anything is in the indwelling word of Christ. We have not much to sing about until that word dwells in us. Song is born from Heaven; the devils do not have much to sing about. Infidelity has no hymns, except those it has stolen from the Church of Christ. The beginning of the worship of God, so far as we know, was at the Red Sea after He had delivered Israel. Christian song began on the plains of Bethlehem where the angels came down to tell the story of redeeming love. When God puts gladness into the hearts of men, then they cannot but sing. The cause of most of our poor singing is our poor living. I have known churches that had to hire others to sing for them. I have known a church that hired an infidel to sing their praise, when they hadn't enough religion to sing themselves. I would as soon think of hiring a man to eat my breakfast for me as to praise God for me. You will find that wherever there have been mighty revivals of spiritual religion, there have been great revivals of sacred song. The Apostle gives this prescription: "Singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." There are many people singing who had better be in sackcloth and ashes in the dust before God, weeping for their sins. There can be no joy in their song, and it is enough to give a man the horrors to hear the mocking laughter of those who have no joy within them. "I will sing with the spirit and the understanding also." The Spirit of God should tune the song. There is many an old-fashioned hymn without much poetry in it, and many an old tune that was not very musical, perhaps; but the Spirit of God was there, and they did their work. I like very lively hymns and tunes, but I like solidity in song.

Mr. McGranahan said that, as it was an essential to harmony in orchestral music that the instruments should all be in tune, so one important element in Christian praise is oneness of spirit—all being tuned to the great keynote of sympathy with Christ. Then the song ought to be in line with the particular truth inculcated at any particular service. How often in the professed service of God the contrary is true, and, instead of saying "Let us work with God," it would be correct to say, "We will suspend the service for a short time and listen to the singing of the choir."

REMARKS BY MR. SANKEY.

I believe it is a good thing to have large chorus choirs to lead the singing in our churches. But I think it is as necessary to have Christian singers as it is to have a Christian man in the pulpit. If this rule were adhered to, the traditionary quarrels among choirs that we hear of would be at an end. I have been leading choirs for some twelve or fifteen years, and I have never heard of one unharmonious note. We have made it a point to have Christian singers, as far as we knew; we generally have a little talk at the beginning and prayer for God's blessing, so we all pull together. I think that the preacher should generally direct the course of the praise, and the singers should be clustered round about him, not away in some extreme corner of the building. I do not think Mr. Moody would get on very long without the choir round him. As to instruments, I do not for my part care to have a great organ of tremendous power; it often drives all the worship out of a congregation, and drowns the voices of the people. All these years in our evangelistic services with great audiences, we have used a small cabinet organ, and have found it quite sufficient. I have sometimes heard one of these large organs playing the congregation out with light operatic music, when there should have been something solemn and impressive, if it was needful to have anything at all. As to hymns and tunes, we strive to have variety; we hold on to many of the grand old hymns, but now and then we will have some new ones. Some of the new ones, I believe, will last, though a good many of them will die. Very much depends on the leader; he will largely influence the tone as well as the work of the choir. I notice that wherever plain, simple, Gospel hymns, with appropriate melodies, are used, the people join heartily in the song. I was once in a church where the choir did all the singing except in the last hymn, which was "He leadeth me;" then the people chimed in with heart and voice. I do not object in toto to paid choirs. Where much time is given by skilled musicians to helping in the service of praise, I do not know why they should not be moderately paid, always providing that the singers are Christian men and women. Let me say to Christian ladies who can play the organ, that they have a great responsibility in using their talent in the service of God, as one timid young lady did, in a town in the North of England, in connection with some services to be carried on after Mr. Moody and myself left. Let young ladies undertake this work "for Jesus' sake," and a rich blessing will come upon themselves as well as on the people. I wish we had a school at which young men and women with good voices could be trained for this kind of service.

HEBREW CHRISTIANS IN NEW YORK.

As if we had not had a full meal of talk already, Mr. Moody introduced to the meeting Rev. Jacob Freshman, of New York, who labours there among his kinsmen in the flesh—the Jews. Mr. Freshman thoroughly vindicates his name when he speaks about Gospel work among God's ancient people. He is "fresh" and "manly," and it was interesting to watch the eagerness with which Mr. Moody followed his narrative. There are some 80,000 of the seed of Abraham in the Empire City, and to these, as far as time and strength will allow, Mr. Freshman and his helpers are carrying the message of salvation through the promised Messiah. During the three years he has been at work in New York the Lord has given him a good measure of success. A church is now building which it is hoped to open towards the end of the year, and which will be the first Hebrew Christian church on the American continent. Mr. Freshman is labouring in the Gospel in faith, without any guarantee of salary from anyone, though he has to pay his helpers. He looks to the many Christian friends of the Jewish people for support, and from all that one can gather of his interesting work, he is well worthy of the sympathy for which he looks. He spoke on subsequent occasions during the closing days of the Conference, and always with unction, earnestness and power. At the close of Mr. Freshman's first address, Dr. Pierson, who had evidently been moved by the narrative of his Hebrew brother, started a subscription on the spot; as Mr. Freshman afterwards stated, in thanking the friends for their generous response, the sum collected was nearly two hundred dollars.

J. B. GOUGH AND WILLIAM NOBLE.

These two brethren, well known in both hemispheres for their ardent and successful advocacy of the Temperance reformation, addressed a crowded meeting on the evening of Wednesday, Aug. 12; it was considerably the largest gathering of the ten days. The main attraction, no doubt, being the veteran worker in this good cause, Mr. Gough. Both had arrived two days previously, and Mr. Gough was the guest of Mr. Moody during his stay. He is now, as he told us in his address, sixty-eight years of age. The weight of years added to hard and incessant public labour are telling upon him, though he seems to have lost little, if any, of the fire of his most vigorous days. The scribe is not yet born who can effectively describe the oratory of Mr. Gough; to be appreciated, it must be both heard and seen. Mr. Moody hinted at this when he requested that nobody in the dense throng should obstruct his neighbour's view; he had heard of someone who said that Mr Gough "spoke with his coat-tails." His inimitable gifts of mimicry and of fervid language, and his fertility of illustration, are still at his disposal; in the course of his address, while he expatiated now on the horrors produced by drink, and then on the more ludicrous side of the question, he touched as with a master hand the founts of laughter and of tears. A large portion of his argument was directed against the stronghold of so-called "moderation," and some of the replies to supposed objections were very powerful. He was especially effective in showing that total abstinence is the principle which is at once a sound, safe, and sensible one. He was very pathetic in his appeal to young men to join the ranks of abstainers from the delusive and treacherous alcohol, and so escape the sad experiences that fell to his own lot in early life. I cannot but think that the burning words of the eloquent old man must have strengthened many a wavering one and carried conviction to the minds of not a few, who, perhaps, had not even been passively neutral in the great fight with intemperance which is raging in every State of this broad and beautiful Continent. When Mr. Gough had closed his address, Mr. Moody prayed with much feeling that his bow might long abide in strength, that his words might be blessed to every drinking man in the audience, and that the time might soon come when there should not be a single drunkard in the lovely vale of Northfield.

Mr. William Noble spoke but briefly before Mr. Gough rose, but he had a warm reception, and made an excellent impression while he told something of his work at Hoxton and of the general condition of Temperance affairs in the old country. I learn by recent letters from Mr. Noble that he has already, by the blessing of God, seen fruit to his labours on this side during his present visit, and that arrangements have been made for his visits to various parts of the States. He gives three lectures at Chatauqua, the famous Summer Educational Parliament of America, held near the shores of Lake Erie.

NINTH DAY, THURSDAY, AUG. 13.

THE subject of Conference on the ninth day was

THE LORD'S SECOND COMING.

In briefly introducing it, Mr. Moody said that both pre-millennial and post-millennial views were held by equally good men, and there was need for brotherly forbearance in discussing it. He personally had derived much comfort from the thought of Christ's pre-millennial return to set up his kingdom on the earth; if any brother present could not receive that view, let him not get angry, but let him be willing to receive any light that could be thrown upon it.

Rev. W. W. Clark, with the aid of two charts hanging on the wall—one defining the several dispensations of law, and grace, and coming glory, and the other marking the historical developments of human history—gave a running synopsis of the outline facts relating to our Lord's First and Second Comings. The Bible, he said, contains three glorious and outstanding truths—Christ crucified on the cross, Christ seated on the throne, and Christ coming in the clouds of heaven—past, present, and future. The Old Testament reveals Him as the coming One; the Gospels as the One who has come; the Epistles and the Apocalypse as the One who is to come again. The present dispensation will end by the resurrection of the righteous dead, when the trumpet sounds. At the same time the living believers will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. We are inclined to spiritualise away this truth, but may it not be the case that the translations of Enoch and Elijah without tasting death were designed as examples of what we are to look for at the Lord's appearing? With God nothing is impossible. After the rapture of the saints there comes the great tribulation, and then there will be another coming of Christ to judge the world before the thousand years of peace. During the great tribulation the Man of Sin will be revealed, the Gospel proclaimed, and the Spirit poured out upon the whole earth, even after the Church is gone. The Gentiles shall be brought in, and the Jews shall return to their own land, and there be prepared for millennial blessing. After the Millennium Satan is to be loosed for a season, and then to be cast into the lake of fire, to be tormented day and night for ever. After some remarks as to the sequence of the different judgments mentioned in the New Testament, Mr. Clark touched on the power which this doctrine of the Lord's second coming is fitted to exercise on the heart and life. It was when his attention was directed to this glorious truth that he was constrained to relinquish a course of life devoted to worldly gain, and give himself heart and soul to the service of God in the Christian ministry. In the first few years of that ministry, when he gave this doctrine great prominence, his labours were more richly blessed to others than in later years, when he had preached it more seldom. If we lived in daily and earnest expectation of Christ's return, we should be brought into closer communion with Him, and closer heart union with one another.

Dr. Pierson said he had been for more than twenty years a zealous opponent of the doctrine of the pre-millennial coming of Christ. He had been led, in examining the question more minutely and consecutively, to reach an opposite conclusion, and now he was as fully convinced of his former error on this point, as he was convinced of the truth that the Lord Jesus Christ died for sinners. He then alluded to the bearing of this doctrine on the work of Foreign Missions, in which he felt a deep and special interest. Our enthusiasm with respect to the evangelisation of the world will depend on our conception of what is the Divine programme of the present dispensation. There are many who believe that the world at large is to be permeated by the Gospel, and is to be absolutely christianised in that way in this dispensation. Where, in the whole Bible, is there to be found any suggestion of this? I myself, said the Doctor, held and taught this for twenty years, but it is plain to me now that the Bible teaches no such thing. I cannot find a single intimation that the Church is to increase simply by the assimilation of the worldly elements to itself. It may be true that the world and the Church are being brought nearer, but it is because the Church is becoming more worldly, and the world is become more churchly, without becoming more Christian. God's word to his Church is not to become assimilated to the world, but to come out of it and be separate, so as to escape being a partaker in the plagues that will overtake it. God's purpose with respect to the Gentiles in this age is to take out of them a people for his name. During the coming dispensation the Jews will be the great evangelisers, and on them will rest the diffusion of the Gospel during the millennial period. The greatest inspiration with regard to the advance of foreign missions has come to me through seeing the truth of the Lord's coming again. Moreover, it has greatly impressed me that almost all the men I know, who are earnest workers in evangelisation, not only in this country, but in others, are those who tenaciously hold the doctrine of the pre-millennial advent of our Lord.

It would be somewhat invidious, perhaps, to repeat the list of living persons holding these views, given by Dr. Pierson; but one name mentioned was that of the late P. P. Bliss. The allusion to him led Mr. Moody to remark that it was after being stirred up about this subject on one occasion, that Mr. Bliss sat down and wrote the words and music of the hymn—

> Down life's dark vale we wander,
> Till Jesus comes;
> We wait, and watch, and wonder,
> Till Jesus comes."

This hymn was accordingly sung with all the feeling prompted by the vivid realisation of its truth that had been inspired by the words of the speakers. Another hymn sung during the session, "We shall meet with our loved ones again," would, perhaps, have been more appropriate to the topic of the following day—the Resurrection—but its bearing on the Second Coming of Christ is close enough, while its singularly pathetic beauty both of sentiment and melody makes it a constant and enduring favourite.

A few words from Mr. G. C. Needham and Mr. Moody closed the morning's meeting. Mr. Needham said that as the hope of Christ's Second Coming has reference to a Person, it is a definite one, and has no element of vagueness about it. It is a most comforting hope to all Christian mourners. In it lies the germ of the future glory of Israel; and it is the hope of the whole creation, which now groans and travails because of the burdens that oppress it. Mr. Moody said the New Testament teaching did not encourage the idea that the world was gradually to grow better and better during this Gospel dispensation. We are everywhere taught that in the last days there will come "perilous times," when men shall have the form of godliness, while denying its power. That is exactly what we see to-day. People stumble over the mystery that attaches to the manner of the Second Coming of Christ, in power and glory. Surely it cannot be more mysterious than the manner of his coming in humiliation. This subject of the coming glory of Christ and his Church ought to lift us out of our worldliness, and fire us up to go into the vineyard with fresh courage and inspiration to work for Him. Let us come together again in the afternoon, and inquire further into it. Dr. Erdman and Dr. Gordon will be here to answer questions, and help in removing difficulties that anyone may feel.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

The people were not slow in responding to Mr. Moody's invitation, and the afternoon hour of meeting found Dr. Erdman in possession of the platform, ready, as seems to be his wont, to answer the queries and solve the doubts of all and sundry. Are we not in the Millennium now? somebody asked, not very seriously, one would suppose. The Doctor speedily disposed of the query by a single remark: At the beginning of the Millennium the devil is to be chained; nobody will venture to assert that he is chained now. Will there be conversions during the Millennium? The great bulk of them will be at the beginning of the thousand years. Will the rapture of the saints be before the conversion of the Jews? Emphatically so. If there is to be no deliverance from the present state of things, except by the Second Coming of Christ, may we not say that the Church is a failure? That does not follow. The question to be considered is, what God's purposes are during this dispensation. His plans and purposes certainly will not fail. What will be gained by the personal reign of Christ that cannot be secured by the work of the Spirit? All that He sees fit to be gained by it. It would be a misnomer to speak of the "reign" of the Spirit. Jesus is the King, and there can be no real kingdom without a king. Why does He stay away so long? We are not in his secret counsels, but He has told us to watch for his return, and He must be sincere in what He says. On the more practical aspects of the question Dr. Erdman said that he had known of more conversions through his preaching of the Second Advent than in connection with any other doctrine of God's Word. If the churches generally could be roused to declare and emphasise this truth, there would be a mighty revival. Question: If men really believed in the immediate coming again of our Lord, how could they build structures that will stand for 1000 years? Answer: We must obey the command, "Occupy till I come." It did not form part of Dr. Erdman's reply, but it occurs to me to suggest that the uses to which buildings may be put will not terminate with the Lord's appearing. May they not be used then to greater purpose even than now?

Dr. Gordon, at the opening of a short address, had also some personal testimony to give as to the practical influence on his early ministry exercised by a strengthened belief in the great hope of Christ's return. One of the most eminent and godly men in the last generation said: "The discovery of the truth of the Lord's Second Coming was to me almost a second conversion." It is the key that opens all the later Scriptures. First of all, we have the express and repeated statements of the Lord Himself, "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself." He often exhorted his disciples to watch, and He would scarcely have done that if He had wished to convey the idea that the thousand millennial years would elapse before his return. The Apostles taught the same thing. It is true there is first to be the preaching of the Gospel to all nations, but it is to be "for a witness." The attitude of the early Church was one of constant expectation and looking up, in accordance with the words of the angels to the disciples, "This same Jesus shall so come, as ye have seen Him go up into heaven." The upward look ought to be our attitude to-day. I am glad there is no passage in Scripture that tells us to look for death; I think some Christians make too much of it. It is true, our Lord has taken away its sting, but it is still our enemy, and we ought to look for and long for the time when even that last enemy shall be destroyed, and there shall be no more death, because the living Lord of life has come. We sometimes say that nothing is certain but death; we have all got to die. I would rather say that if anything is certain it is that we have not all got to die. Death is one day to be swallowed up in victory.

Touching next on the point referred to by previous speakers, as to the condition of the world at our Lord's return, Dr. Gordon said it did not look much like universal conversion to find that, at this advanced period of the Gospel age, only five million dollars were given last year for the evangelisation of the world, as against fifteen hundred million dollars for rum and tobacco! After some remarks as to the manner of Christ's coming, the speaker passed on to consider the practical bearing of the subject. The teaching of the apostolic writings is that it directly tends to strengthen the Christian virtues of watchfulness, patience, sobriety, and charity. All of these things are specifically linked with the fact of the Lord's return. Then it is, when the Lord returns, that servants are to be rewarded; and who does not wish to be rewarded? We read of four crowns to be given for faithful service, and all to be bestowed at the Lord's coming—the crown of joy, the crown of righteousness, the crown of glory, and the crown of life. Someone may say that the passage, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," refers to death, when this crown will be bestowed. It does not mean that at all. The words mean that if we are faithful even to the point of being willing to die for our Master, He will confer on us the crown of life when He comes to reward his servants. Let the word of our Lord and Master be ever present with us—"Watch." Let no one and no thing dissuade us from this attitude of soul. The false bride says, "I sit as a queen; I am no widow;" that is the attitude of the worldly Christian who has his portion already, and does not want the Bridegroom to come back. But the true Bride waits and watches for the return of her Lord. As to the time appointed for the return we may not curiously speculate, but if we are attent to hear his voice we shall hear Him saying, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with Me."

HOME MISSION WORK.

At a very interesting gathering of men in East Hall this evening, under the presidency of Rev. W. Reed, of Springfield, reports were given of varied efforts in home mission work. Mr. Ensign, of Chicago, retold the story of Sunday-school planting and progress in the far West, and pleaded for its further extension in these dry and thirsty places of the American continent. A hundred more men are needed to engage in this work; 800 dollars would pay the yearly salary and travelling expenses of each.

Rev. W. Southgate, of Worcester, urged that the spiritual interests of the young should be more generally recognised and attended to in the ordinary church services. Get hold of the boys and girls, and keep hold of them for Christ. Give the young converts some definite work to do. Let there be a class for the training of Sunday-school teachers, led by the pastor of the church.

Dr. Dowkontt, of the New York Medical Mission, spoke of five classes of people that are sought to be reached in connection with the work—infidels, drunkards, fallen women, Roman Catholics, and criminals. Visitation is carried on in places where even policemen scarcely dare to go. One main object of the mission is to train Christian young men for foreign service as medical missionaries. Dr. Dowkontt hopes that some of the Mount Hermon boys may by and by enter on this important branch of Christian service.

Mr. J. Collins, of New Haven, Conn., told of the work in which he had been engaged in that city for the past eleven years. The Gospel Union Mission directs its efforts specially to a lower class than is touched by the Y.M.C.A. Much interesting work is carried on among the children, 1600 of whom have been gathered into the schools. Mr. Collins is a most earnest and able worker, and I would commend his labours in the Gospel to the prayerful remembrance of English Christians.

Mr. Morse, of the Y.M.C.A , having spoken of the remarkable progress that has attended that branch of Christian work throughout the United States, earnest prayer was made for all the missions represented, and that not a few of the young men present should be thrust forth as active labourers in the Lord's vineyard.

THE LAST DAY.

A MEETING AT MOUNT HERMON.

WHATEVER else the visitor to Northfield these ten days may forget, he is not likely to forget the morning of the tenth and last day, when the whole Conference was bodily transferred across the river to the Boys' School. Mr. Moody had set his heart on it. It had been arranged for a previous afternoon, but the weather proved unpropitious, and it was postponed. "I want you all to go over," said Mr. Moody. "Unless you do, you will feel for all coming time that your education has been neglected." He said that conveyances would be provided, and they would see how the Northfield people would rise to the occasion. Seeing some of his neighbouring farmers in the meeting, he slyly remarked to them that of course they would all be forward with their teams to help, and of course nobody would charge anything for the use of their horses or vehicles.

So the appointed morning dawned, and everybody was astir earlier than usual, as the work of transportation was to begin by half-past seven. Sure enough, the teams came trooping in from all sides; some of them were not over elegant, but they had been made as comfortable as possible, and a four miles' ride in a country wagon would have at any rate a spice of rusticity about it that the more popular buggy could not supply. One or two Northfieldians (rumour hath it that they were worldly-wise Unitarians), not well versed in the doctrines of free grace, affected to ignore Mr. Moody's pledge that the whole thing was to be done without money and without price, and there was some little haggling about prices in their case. Mr. Moody soon closed the controversy by having the recreant teamsters sent to the right-about. As it transpired, their services were not missed, for everybody that wanted to go was landed safely on the heights of Mount Hermon by ten o'clock, when the proceedings were to commence in the Recitation Hall. The morning was a delightful one, and the short but varied and picturesque ride was evidently much enjoyed, and all seemed in the best of good spirits with this break in the programme. By ten, the hall was quite filled, and one more laurel was added to Mr. Moody's fame as an energetic and thorough-going organizer. Of course, his own teams, and nearly everybody else's in the place, were in requisition. One could scarcely have dreamed that a little country town like Northfield could have mustered such an imposing cavalcade of horseflesh and vehicles, but it would appear that its inhabitants, without exception, are "carriage folk." Happy Northfield!

The crowd being seated, Mr. Moody called the assembly to order, and at the same time called for the singing of Mr. Towner's stirring song, "Move Forward." "That," quoth the evangelist, "is what we want to do at Mount Hermon." This having been sung with proper spirit, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, who had arrived some days before, thanks to Mr. McGranahan's convalescence, rendered with heartfelt pathos the anthem, "For God so loved the world." Mr. Moody then called on Mr. Camp to offer prayer. Mr. Camp, be it understood, is a well-known New Haven maker of clocks, who gave the evangelist 25,000 dollars to found the Mount Hermon Schools, as a thankoffering for blessing received at a preceding Northfield Conference. A fine photographic reproduction of his strongly marked and now venerable-looking features hung on the wall back of the platform where he sat. As he led the meeting in earnest simple petition that the richest blessing of God would rest on the institution and all connected with it, I could not help feeling that it was in accordance with the fitness of things that the virtual founder of the school should be there to witness its rapidly growing success.

MR. MOODY ON MOUNT HERMON.

After another Gospel song, from Mr. and Mrs. Towner, Mr. Moody plunged "right away" into the facts and figures relating to Mount Hermon. About five years ago, he said, Mr. Camp came to Northfield, and we were speaking of the importance of doing something among the boys like that we were trying to do in the seminary for girls. He was a wise man (for himself), for he said to me, "I will give you 25,000 dollars to buy the land, and you will carry out the work." So he did, and we commenced, but that was only a beginning. We have since then gone on from step to step. Our plan is to enable earnest young men of some promise who have not had early advantages to take a short cut into the Lord's work. When I was about twenty-one years of age I thought I would like to go into the work of the Christian ministry. But I found it would take me four years to get ready for college, another four years to go through college, and three years more to study theology. That would carry me on to the age of thirty-two, and I thought I should by that time be almost an old man. Besides, if I had gone to school at twenty-one, I would have had to learn with boys eleven or twelve years of age, and I had too much pride to do that. I thought we ought to have a place where youths could begin at the bottom round of the ladder without feeling that they were degraded by being put on a level with boys much younger than themselves. I think we have now almost reached the point where we will be able to receive 200 such young men. Applications are pressing in upon us from different parts of the world from young men who want to be prepared for the Lord's work. The thoroughly educated ministry is all right, and we need them all, but there is, in these days, a great deal of what we call irregular work to be done. It seems to me that many ministers are, so to speak, educated away from the common people. My idea is that here we shall give young men a good square English education, and a training in Bible knowledge, even if they do not know much about Latin and Greek, so that the common people may understand them, and they shall not be too far out of line with the people themselves. Now, I want some of you to-day to give me 6000 dollars with which to put up a house, which we will call the House of the Theologians. I will invite Dr. Gordon, and Dr. Pierson, and other leading ministers, in turn, to come here for a month in the summer, and bring their families with them. These friends will instruct the boys from time to time in different branches of theological study, and in this way I reckon we will get the honey out of all the different denominations. I do not propose to pay them any salary, so that it won't cost very much. Now I think this house will be as good an investment as anybody can make, and I hope someone will enable me to build it, so that we can have a Theological Chair endowed with all these gentlemen as Professors. Here is Mr. Freshman, a converted Jew: I would like him to come up here sometimes and tell the boys something about the Hebrew Scriptures. By getting these and other friends to come, we can have twelve theological professors instead of one. We have got the land, and I have no doubt the ladies will help to furnish the house, so that we shall not want for anything. As you have seen, we are now building a large kitchen and dining-room where we can dine 300 at one time. We have also a large dormitory building which has sleeping accommodation for 200. We designed at first to take little boys, but we find it takes a good while to find out how they are going to turn out, so now we have decided to take youths from sixteen, or thereabouts; when a lad has reached that age, he generally shows what there is in him that can be turned to some account. Our boys have two and a half hours' work on the farm every day. They milk the cows, make the butter, do the washing, and cultivate the farm. We want to teach them to do everything, so that if they should be placed in the position where it is required, they can put their hands to any sort of work. I believe God is going to give us a great blessing in this institution. He seems to smile upon our efforts.

Having ended his preamble, Mr. Moody called for short speeches. The first to present himself was Mr. Wishard, one of the college secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. At the Harvard Conference of college students, he said, they were very glad to welcome four of the Mount Hermon "boys" as delegates, whose red-hot testimony greatly stirred the audience. In the name of the ten thousand college students in America in connection with the Y.M.C.A., he heartily returned the greeting. Then, addressing himself specially to the students, he reminded them that they were living in a most wonderful period of the world's history. As we look around on the vast and complex Christian organisations, it seems as if we were on the verge of some mighty movement. When God lays hold of the strategic points of power all round his world, it looks as though He were going to rise up and make a short work in the earth. It is a great thing to be living and working in such days. When I was a lad I recollect hearing some of the old scarred veterans of the war telling over again some of the stories of that great conflict. As one would repeat the thrilling details of some decisive battle, others of them would say, with an air of pride and exultation, "I was there!" "I took part in that charge!" "I helped to storm that fort!" and so on. Their whole being seemed to be thrilled with the memories of the life and death struggle in which they were actors. We, as Christians, are engaged in the greatest warfare that ever the world knew. Be it ours so to act our part now, that when the great review day comes, we shall be able to look back on our past struggles and victories, and say, "I was there!"

Dr. Pierson said: I do not think I have ever in the whole course of my life found anything that has interested me more than these schools. I regard them as a new departure in the matter of education. Speaking as a college-educated man, I cannot help saying that I look with grave suspicion upon the present college system in this country. Our colleges may be divided into four classes. First, there are the distinctly sceptical institutions, and I have no hesitation in calling them so. It would be invidious to mention names, but a gentleman well known to me went to one of our great State universities. One of the professors of Natural Science, when some question came up touching evolution, said: "Gentlemen, I tell you frankly, I do not believe in a God." What can be the result of placing young men, in the most plastic and formative period of life, under such instructors as that? Yet I know Christian families which send their sons to these colleges. Is it any wonder that before they graduate they are permeated through and through with the poison of infidelity? Then there are other colleges that are divided up by cliques and secret societies. I will not enter into the question of secret societies; I never belonged to one, and never mean to. But the inevitable effect is to break up a college into cliques. One of the greatest minds in this country, and one of the holiest men I ever knew, would not permit his name to remain on the college rolls of a secret society. The young men composing it were a choice, he had no fault to find with their moral character, but he found the energy and time that should have been expended in bringing others to Christ was frittered away. There is a third class of colleges which are marred by political patronage; the Professors are appointed with regard to their political leanings. On the other hand, there is a fourth and decidedly Christian class of college. I know of one where they have a revival all the time. They always have a college prayer-meeting on the eve of "Commencement," instead of the literary exercises that are so popular. That meeting is usually marked by a great outpouring of the Holy Ghost. I made up my mind, years ago, that no son or daughter of mine should ever go into any educational institution where the Word of God was not prominent, and where any purely secular branch of study took precedence of the salvation of the soul, as preparatory to a useful life. I want Brother Moody to know that if there is anything I can do to help him in this great work I will gladly do it. I want to be identified with a work like this, where the Bible is at the bottom and the top, and all through. Dr. Pierson, in some further humorous remarks, said he gladly accepted the proffered professorship of theology, with all its emoluments. At the same time, he would be happy to pay for his own board and lodging. He said that in a work of this kind Mr. Moody would be a great discoverer of latent talent, as Sir Humphry Davy discovered Michael Faraday, a poor and obscure boy who ultimately became more famous as an electrician than his master himself.

Dr GORDON, who came next, said he did not feel that he could decline the honour of a professorship in Mount Hermon College. He at once proceeded, like Dr. Pierson, to give his "inaugural address." In passing, he paid a high tribute of admiration to the late Professor Wayland, of Brown University, two of whose sons, Judge Wayland and Dr. Wayland, of Philadelphia, were on the platform. That Professor, said the speaker, was not only a great man intellectually, but a great Christian worker. I never heard any man present the Gospel more simply. I remember hearing that in his declining years, every Wednesday afternoon, as long as he lived, he held an inquiry meeting. He had young people going all over the city trying to see if they could find any one whom he could lead to Christ. He was, indeed, a model for all Christian teachers. I am glad to see that attention is being paid in Mount Hermon to the linking of physical labour with intellectual training. I took the usual three courses of preparatory, collegiate, and theological study; but I never cease to praise God that I had previously taken an agricultural course of three years on a farm. There I got a physical development that has carried me through a good deal of hard work ever since. The young men here ought to count it a high privilege, and not a task; they will find the great benefit of it if they should be placed in positions where they will have to labour with their hands. Manual toil is the best supplement to intellectual culture that can be had. Addressing some closing words to the younger boys, Dr. Gordon told a story of Adam Clarke, the great commentator. In his youth he was employed in a linen-draper's shop. On one occasion a customer bought 20 yards of cloth. The piece measured only 19½ yards, and the master of the shop wanted Adam to help him in stretching it to the required length. The boy bravely declined to connive at the dishonesty, and he was discharged. This trial was overruled for good, as the boy's mind was turned in another direction, and he became a famous expounder of the Word of God.

Then came the most sparkling and amusing speech of the meeting, from Dr. WAYLAND, Editor of the Philadelphia National Baptist. The doctor is a tall, spare man, quite undemonstrative in manner, but evidently possessing great reserve power. He said: I have rarely had more enjoyment and profit in my whole life than during the last few days. It is a grand thing that there is a school here where young men are being taught that the greatest aim in life is not to get rich—honestly if they can, but to get rich anyhow—but that the great thing is to serve God and bless humankind. I congratulate our friend and prophet Elijah—Mr. Moody—that he has come to this brook Cherith. His young school of prophets are living on "Camp" fare (a playful reference to the founder's name), but they seem to thrive on it. The great thing for Mr. Moody to do will be to make as many like himself as he can, to send out from this school a thousand "D.L.s," and from the Mount Pisgah School, on the other side of the river, a thousand "D.L.esses." Probably many of these young prophets here will look across the river sometimes and sing—but all that may be trusted to the future. There are a great many things which Mr. Moody and his co-professors will no doubt teach them. I hope, when everything else is taught, they will be taught something about the English language. I see upon the platform the emaciated (!) form of Dr. Pentecost. He has told me that when he was younger and smaller than he is, he applied to a missionary society to be sent abroad as a missionary to the heathen, but they would not send him because he did not know Greek. I feel almost paralysed to imagine what the dire results would have been if Dr. Pentecost had gone out and had not been able to teach the heathen savages the Greek language. But after these young men have learned Greek, and Syriac, and Hebrew, and all the rest, I hope Mr. Moody will teach them English. I was very much interested in what Dr. Gordon told us about Adam Clarke. To think that a young man who could not make nineteen and a half yards into twenty should become a commentator! So far as my acquaintance with commentators has gone, they generally endeavour to take half a pint and make it fill a barrel. I hope Mr. Moody will teach his students the art of condensing, of putting a great deal of sense into few words. There is one despised profession that I have not heard anything about, and to which I belong. If there should be here any extraordinarily good young man, very fond of self-denial, perhaps Mr. Moody will raise him up to be an Editor. His course of training will consist largely in living on spare diet—a crust every few days and a cool draught from the Connecticut river. Then he must be taught to do something when he has not got anything to do it with, and to pay his bills when he has no money to pay them with. It is here, of course, that genius comes in. Genius has been described as the ability to eat soup with a one-pronged fork. There were some generals in the American army who would have won victories if they could have arranged their own forces and the forces of the enemy to suit themselves. The great thing about General Grant was that he made up his mind to win victories with the materials that he had. I hope from these schools many young men and women will go out filled with useful purpose and with a generous humanity. I am pleased to hear about their being representatives of various nationalities. I have seen some little diversity of colour—white boys and red boys; one of these days we shall, no doubt, see black boys and yellow boys. There will be a recognition of the one tie that binds us all together—the reception of the Spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ. May this hall be remembered, along with the memorable halls of story, as one of the halls of God.

> "May I but stand where Moses stood;"

Judge Wayland, a brother of the former speaker, contributed his quota to the speech-making, and then Mr. Sankey sang out with his accustomed vigour, "What are you going to do, brother?" prefacing the song with some pertinent remarks about the wisdom of rich men like Mr. Camp being their own executors, and thus making sure that their money was well applied. Mr. Freshman had a brief innings, during which he cleverly managed to put forth another plea on behalf of his work among Jews in New York, and succeeded in extracting from Mr. Estey (of Brattleboro, and of American organ fame) a promise to give one of these instruments to the new Hebrew Christian church soon to be opened.

In a neat speech, Professor SAWYER, Principal of Mount Hermon School, gave an outline of the proposed course of study. What you see now, he said, is only the beginning of things. What kind of boys have we here? Some people seem to think that this is a sort of Botany Bay, and scarcely a place for respectable boys to be at. That is a sad delusion. I have known and been connected with a good many schools, and had intimate knowledge of some. If the boys were not present, I could tell some things about them which would induce you to believe that we have here about the best boys in the world; but I do not want to speak of their obedience and industry and kindness, and so on, right here before them. What kind of boys do we want? We want strong boys, in the first place. We do not want lazy boys, or invalid boys, or boys that require to be coddled and petted. This is a place for good, solid, hard work, and more than one kind of work. As Mr. Moody has said, we do not want boys under sixteen. Then the fact that a boy is neglected or homeless is not in itself a ground for his admission here. Neither is the fact that a boy has entered on wrong courses a reason for our receiving him. The design of the school, in brief, is to train officers for the army of the Great Captain. For that we want good material, strong bodies, good minds, and willing hearts. We do not want to enter into competition or rivalry with schools of other kinds; but if a young man comes here with little education, what will we do for him? Our fixed course of study is not yet elaborated, but it will include training in reading if necessary, in writing, spelling, and enough arithmetic and book-keeping to enable him to conduct any ordinary business without much trouble. The Bible, of course, will be at the root of all our study, and in the departments of history and biography we will give special attention to the Life of Christ. Beyond that we will, when desired, provide opportunities for training in mathematics, and there will be an advanced course of Bible study, with some member of the theological faculty in the chair. Professor Pierson will, I suppose, lead our students into the history of Christian missions. If any wish to study Greek and Latin, we shall endeavour to give them the opportunity, but there must be, from first to last, a training that shall fit them for practical Christian work. If Dr. Wayland had not referred to the English language, I should have said something about that. We want to impart to every student such a training as will enable him to write the English language legibly and grammatically, and to use it with effect. We shall not forget physiology, hygiene, and sanitary science. Our boys may go to work among the poor and ignorant, many of whom do not know how to care for their own bodies and the bodies of their children, or how to attend to the sanitation of their dwellings, and so forth. But above all, as I have said, the Bible will be the foundation and groundwork of our study. As students, I repeat that we desire to have young men with good intellects, sound bodies, and consecrated souls, who will be ready to go into places where perhaps others would not go, and there to do the work of the Master.

Mr. MOODY supplemented his opening words by remarking that another important thing they wished to keep in view was the cultivation of musical talent. Professor Towner had been training the boys this summer, and in addition to his services, they hoped to impress into the service Professor Sankey, Professor McGranahan and other friends. Perhaps next year they would have a musical convention. They wanted to bring out all the musical abilities possessed by the boys, so as to make them more useful in their Christian work. I may say here in a sentence, that several times during the meetings of the Convention a small male choir, organised by Mr. Towner, sang such well-known pieces as "By grace ye are saved through faith," "Be glad in the Lord and rejoice," "I've found a Friend," in a way that proved them to be capable of good service in this department. Several of the young men have voices that promise, with care and training, to make a mark in the world of Gospel song.

Last of all came a few words from the venerable Mr. CAMP, who expressed the joy he had experienced in helping on so good a work. He trusted and believed that the young men trained within these walls would be instrumental in spreading the knowledge of God and of salvation throughout the world. Then the doxology was sung, the benediction pronounced by Dr. Pentecost, and we betook ourselves once more to our buggies, carriages, wagons, and what not, to find ourselves back in Northfield just in time to escape a driving thunder-shower.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.

This was the last set subject of conference on the afternoon of the last day. In opening it, Dr. Gordon treated on the fact that in the Old Testament there are several passages conveying a recognition of it. Coming to the New Testament, we have in the resurrection of Lazarus a type of what is to be at the Second Coming of the Lord. When Jesus heard of the death of his friend, He abode still two days in the place where He was. "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years." For nearly 2000 years He has remained away from his Church on the earth. At the end of that time may we not look for his return and the resurrection of his sleeping saints? Jesus said to Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life." Scripture never uses redundant language, so that there must be a reason for the repetition. Is it not to be explained by the rising of the righteous dead, and the transformation of those who are alive at the coming of the Lord? "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me (that is 'he who is living and believing in Me when I return') shall never die." As it was the Lord Himself who raised up Lazarus, so we read (1 Thes. iv.), "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." He will not send an angel; He will come Himself. I remember hearing of a boy who was dying. His mother was cheering him. "Be patient," she said; "in a little while an angel will come and take you home." He said, "I do not know the angel; I am not acquainted with him; I think I shall be lonesome if an angel should come." "Then Jesus will come." "Well, I am acquainted with Him; I shall be all right if He come." In 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53, we have another remarkable passage that refers to the rising of the dead and the change of the living. We have the use of the double phrase "corruption" and "mortality." It plainly means this: the corrupt bodies that have gone into the grave and seen corruption shall be raised in incorruption; at the same time those who at his coming are living in mortal bodies shall be clothed with immortality, so that they shall never die. I once heard Mr. Spurgeon pray, "O Lord, prepare us for death, if any of us should be called to die during this week, and prepare us to be translated if Thou shouldest come in thy glory before the week is ended." That is a Scriptural prayer.

There are those who deny the resurrection of the body. Books have been written by scholarly, learned men to prove that every man has his resurrection when he dies. Just as the butterfly emerges from the chrysalis, so, when this body is struck with death, out of it will emerge another body, not material, but purely spiritual. This simply amounts to the old Platonic doctrine of the immortality of the soul. We, as Christians, do not question the immortality of the soul; but we believe Scripture goes a step further. We contend that the body will be raised, and the two will again be united. The disembodied spirits are now waiting for their bodies before they can be perfected. The figure that Paul uses is a very different one from the Platonic illustration of the chrysalis and the butterfly. He says a seed goes into the ground, and that which comes up is not some spiritual intangible imitation of it, but something that is exactly like it, and of the same substance. The Scripture undoubtedly teaches that the thing that was sown in corruption should be raised in incorruption; sown in weakness, it should be raised in power. Some will say that it is impossible. A story is told of a German princess who was a sceptic on the subject of the resurrection. She wanted to prove that it was a myth, and she asked that her body might be put in the grave with a strong stone sepulchre placed over it; the stones were to be clamped with iron clamps, so that nothing should ever be able to get them apart. It so happened that a little crack somehow was made between the stones, and a tiny seed fell into the crack. It sprouted and began to push the mortar apart; ultimately it burst the stone asunder, and there it stands to this day. Many persons visit the spot to see where the stones were burst asunder by the germinating power of a seed; as though God would show, by a special sign, that He has power to burst asunder the bars of death, and that He will prove it to the shame and confusion of those who deny it. I believe in a literal resurrection, and that it is connected with the Second Coming of our Lord. Paul tells us that he was striving to attain unto the resurrection from the dead, pointing to the first resurrection. There are two expressions used: the resurrection of the dead, and the resurrection from the dead. The latter phrase is a very strong one; it is literally "the out-resurrection from out the dead," indicating that some are left behind. Solemn thought! shall we be among the company of those that first rise, and so be prepared to greet their advancing Lord, and realise the words: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years."

Mr. Moody interposed with a practical admonition arising out of the subject:—Some of you are already past the allotted span of life, and perhaps you have not thought much about this subject. Will you all make this prayer: "Oh, God, if it be true, show it to me"? I cannot conceive of anything more important than this. There are four great foundation-stones of my faith: first, Christ came into the world and lived in it; second, He died for my sins; third, He rose from the dead and ascended on high; and fourth, He is coming again. Take these four things away from me, and you may have all the world. If I have not a sure and certain belief in all these four, I am of all men most wretched.

Dr. Pierson said that one of the most beautiful things about the doctrine of the Resurrection was its perfect consistency with other doctrines of Scripture. The two main truths in the Bible with regard to the believer are Regeneration and Resurrection: see how they agree. What is the doctrine of Regeneration? That the Holy Ghost comes into a man's soul and transforms it. What is the doctrine of the Resurrection? That the transformed soul is to live in a transformed body. The two truths are like the two opposite pillars of an arch. The Doctor having stated that he had given long and careful study to questions of natural science, proceeded to argue from settled facts in physiology and chemistry that the body that will rise cannot be composed of the actual elements that made up the body that lived on the earth, but it will be virtually identical. This fact need cause no trouble. The particles of our bodies are continually changing through the process of waste and repair, but we still remain to all intents and purposes the same individuality. There is no more precious doctrine in the whole Bible than the doctrine of the Resurrection. It involves the redemption of the body as well as the soul. I praise God for that. We sometimes teach our children that they have souls, but I cannot find any scriptural authority for it. God breathed into man at the first, and he became a living soul. The soul is the man, and the soul has a body. Sir William Hamilton says, the greatest thing on earth is man, and the greatest thing in man is his soul. God has redeemed our souls, and the body will yet have to share in the redemption. What is our true attitude towards the body? Not that of idolatry or of worship, as some have done, or of contempt, as it has been with others. Let our motto be abstinence from all things that are sinful and unlawful, continence in all things that are lawful and right. The body must be the handmaid of the soul; the soul is to be supreme, to dominate the physical, and make it a willing servant. Another thought is that the life here and the life beyond find their mysterious link of connection in the resurrection of the body. If we are believers, our redemption is assured, but we cannot expect that God will not take notice of the way in which we live in the body, and the use we make of it. Are we not justified in believing that in some measure according to the way in which we treat our bodies now, will be their glorified condition? Some bodies will be much more glorious than others, because they had been properly brought into subjection and cared for, and devoted to the noblest ends. There are some even now whose bodies seem to become transformed; you see the beauty of godliness in their very faces, which seem to be lit up with a heavenly glory. The characteristic of the resurrection body will be that it will form a perfectly transparent medium, through which the glorified spirit may be seen. This suggests to us the converse and awful truth that the resurrection bodies of the wicked will also faithfully reflect their spiritual life: one of the most terrible thoughts in connection with the doom of the ungodly and the impenitent.

We speak of our birthdays here on earth, but the true idea is that the day when we pass out of this world to be with Jesus will be our birthday; it will be the entrance of the soul on its true life. President Knight, of Wabash College, had a glorious woman for a wife; she was a great comfort and blessing to him. When she was about to die, his heart was almost broken. As he stood by her bedside weeping, she stretched out her thin hand and put it in his, and said: "My dear, do not weep for me; it breaks my heart to see you weep. Why, don't you know that I am just going to close my eyes on your face, and open them on the face of Jesus?" With that she closed her eyes, and opened them, as she said, "on the face of Jesus." About a year afterwards he wrote on a sermon these words: "No, it is not dying. I shall simply close my eyes on the faces of those I love here, and open them on the face of Jesus. Thus, by the wonderful chemistry of grace, death, the great enemy, is transformed into the means of my inheritance." He lay down his pen, went to lie down on his bed, fell asleep in Jesus, and awoke in glory.

Mr. Moody having remarked, by way of interlude, that these glorious truths were enough to set our souls on fire, Dr. Erdman gave a brief closing utterance, in which he dwelt especially on the close affinity and likeness that would exist between the risen saints and their risen glorified Lord.

THE CLOSING MEETING of the Conference, held in the evening, was a crowded one. The time was occupied with brief speeches from some whose voices had not often been heard during the previous days. Their remarks were mainly an expression of the spiritual impulses they had received from the meetings and the communion of saints. Those who spoke included Dr. Williams, of Cambridge, Mass., Rev. W. Southgate, of Worcester, Mass., Mr. E. Oakes, evangelist, Father O'Connor, of New York (who made an interesting sketch of work among Roman Catholics in that city), and Mr. Jacob Freshman. Then there came some final words of congratulation and of exhortation from Drs. Gordon and Pierson. Last of all to speak was our loved chairman and host, Mr. Moody, who said it was a painful duty to declare the Convention closed. During these ten happy days we had been carried away on the mountain tops. Now we would have to descend into the valley, where there were many devils to be cast out. Let each one seek to do what he could; not desiring to do some great thing, but to do with all our might the first thing that comes to our hand. Then, as we are found working and waiting and watching, shall we receive from the Master his "Well done!" when He comes again. It is hard to part, so we will not say "Farewell!" There is a glorious morning soon to dawn; we will say, "Good bye, we shall meet each other on that morning." All stood and sang, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost; as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen." Mr. Moody spoke the words of benediction, and the Northfield Conference of 1885 was ended. And yet not ended, in one sense. During my stay in the Connecticut Valley I often observed that when the whistle of the railway engine sounded, the shrill and penetrating blast was taken up by a wonderful echo, that seems to haunt these hills, and reverberated from peak to peak, till at last it seemed to die away in the far-off distance. These notes, inadequate though they are to represent the spirit and unction of ten memorable days, may serve as a kind of echo to ring out around the globe some of the profitable and stimulating thoughts that were uttered, and thus prolong the strain.

Very early in the morning after the Conference the guests began to scatter, east, west, north, and south; others went later in the day. A small contingent elected to spend another day or two within the charmed precincts of the vale of Northfield, and to ruminate on the all-important matters brought before them. A number of the speakers and other visitors proceeded to Crescent Beach, near Boston, where a four days' Y.M.C.A. Conference was to be held the following week.

A PRAISE MEETING.

As all the leading singers remained over Sunday, Mr. Moody arranged for a praise meeting to be held in Recitation Hall in the afternoon. All the world knows that he is no vocalist himself, but he makes up for it by utilising to the last degree the vocal abilities of others. Sunday afternoon came, and the hall was filled to the full: a great part of Northfield must have been there. Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, Mr. and Mrs. Towner, the male choir from Mount Hermon, and some others impressed into the choir, formed a cohort of sacred melodists not often found in one place at one time. For a solid hour and a half we had a continuous stream of Gospel song, except when broken for a few minutes by the voice of prayer and a brief exposition of Psalm ciii. from Mr. Moody. A solo by Mr. Sankey, a duet by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan; a quartet by Mr. Sankey, Mrs. Studd, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Coe; a solo by Mr. Towner, and a duet by himself and his wife; a piece by the male chorus, with a congregational hymn ever and anon, followed each other in rapid succession, and when the time for closing came, all must have felt loth to leave such a feast of sweet sounds, garnished with such glorious and comforting truths.

A NORTHFIELD GOSPEL WAGON.

But we were not allowed by Mr. Moody to depart without contributing a more substantial thank-offering. At the morning service in the Congregational Church, he broached a scheme for getting the more distant dwellers on the Northfield heights conveyed to Divine service on the Lord's day. Many of them do not attend simply because they are too infirm to walk and they have no means of conveyance. The fertile mind of the evangelist suggested the idea of procuring a Gospel chariot or wagon that would make its rounds regularly at these remoter spots on the Sabbath morning, and bring the inhabitants to the house of God. Having stated his case at the morning service, in his own blunt and irresistible way, he moved for a collection towards the object in view, and a goodly response was made. This success only emboldened him to make a second and similar appeal at the praise meeting. A collection was again taken, and though I do not happen to know the precise amount altogether subscribed, probably it will be sufficient to set agoing, among the hills, two or more of these Gospel wagons, so that all may be without excuse for absenting themselves from the place where weekly prayer, and praise, and exhortation are wont to be made.

NEW ENGLISH CHURCH, BERLIN.—St. George's Church, situated in the Schloss-park of Monbijou, is nearly completed. It has been built after designs by the Crown Princess, and is to be opened on her birthday, Nov. 21. It is in pure Old English style.

NORTH BERWICK.—Services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission were held here every Sabbath afternoon during August, upon the Links, attended by 300 or 400 children, and nearly as many adults in addition. At the first meeting the Countess of Aberdeen was present with her family; and, at the concluding service, a gentleman presented the children with beautiful shells, each bearing a text of Scripture. Leaflets were distributed at all the services, and many joined the Scripture Union.

"FAINT, YET PURSUING."

THE STORY OF AN AFFLICTED WORKER.

"Let your light so shine."

The writer of the letter from which the following extracts are taken is one of the Lord's afflicted ones. She suffers from very painful spinal complaint, but is a trusting, rejoicing servant of the Most High, faithful in little things, poor, yet abiding in his sure promises.

DEAR SIR,—I had done my tracts when you sent me the packet. I live near a park, and have many a congregation of old men who meet there daily to pass the time and chat. Most of them have saved enough to keep them without work when old. But, alas! they cannot read enough to understand it, nor do they like reading, unless it be The Sporting News, and Bradlaugh's papers. I went out to them and read them a tract. They all gave heed, while I stood before them leaning on my crutch in pain, and spoke to them of God's love to sinners. One said to me—

"Do you think God loves you?"

"Oh, yes, sir!" I answered, "He does, and I know it. The Lord leads us and guides us to Himself, which is love, manifested in his Son Jesus Christ. You can see how God loves us, for He sent his Son to be offered up on the cross for sinners whom He wants to love Him and live holy lives. To such He gives grace to come to Him, and faith, so that we are saved through the love of God in Christ. Not only does He save us from eternal death, but He gives us life eternal, and the peace of God that passeth all understanding. So you see, sir, God loves even those who do not yet feel their need of Christ."

"Well," said the man, "if He had let me be so afflicted as you are, I could not think He loved me, or cared for me."

"Oh, my poor friend!" I said, "you would, if you had learned to love Him because He first loved you. I am content to wait his time, in pain or out of pain, for much more He suffered for us."

Now, a good number of men had come round me. I could not see them till I turned to go. This was the way every time I stood and read or spoke to them; but there was a young man, with a look of despair on his pale face. He stood behind me, and saw the men and women take my tracts gladly.

I feel myself a cumberer of the ground if I do nothing. I pray daily for the whole of God in the world, for I cannot help with Church means, only in tracts and by prayer."

[Would that all Christians so "helped"! After receiving pecuniary help, and more tracts for her work, she writes some days later:]—I had reason to believe that the word spoken in the park, and heard by the pale-faced young man, saved him from a desperate evil deed—taking his life—so he said. For many days I looked out for him, he was no constant visitor there; he was a gentleman, it was plain. I shall know him above. He was there one day, watching for my offer of a tract, just as a man watches for a letter in which there is life or death. "I was waiting to see if you would offer me a tract," he said, as he almost snatched it out of my hand, and opened it to see its title. "I wondered if you would miss me. Oh, don't think you see no good," he said with a sickly smile, and eyes full of despair. He thrust the tract in his pocket, lifted his hat, and was soon lost among cabs and 'buses. I stood looking after him, feeling sure that that tract had a high destiny. He had made it a sign if I should offer him a tract, and I said to myself, "Will he kill himself?" then came the words, "A brand plucked from the burning." For many days I looked and wailed, but he never came, and only eternity will reveal the work of that silent messenger of love to sinners.

[Referring to the kind of tract suitable for her giving away, she writes:]—I do not like to see Temperance put in place of true religion in the heart—no one can be a true Christian unless he is temperate in all things. Sin makes havoc among the rich. When I was a nurse I have seen men and women, truly sober, drinking nothing but water, but alas, they were gourmands, and shortened their lives with over-eating. Yet they thought the poor extravagant if they saw them eat of more than one dish. I am speaking of what I saw daily, yet I do not put Temperance in place of faith in the blood of Christ.

[Many of the words of this suffering child of God are full of the wisdom of truth. Her work for Him is of that "whatsoever-thy-hand-findeth-to-do" sort that we can say to the idlers and dreamers in the Lord's vineyard, who want "some great thing" to do, "Go, thou, and do likewise," "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much."]

JUVENILE HOME HEATHEN.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Through our Father's care I arrived home safely on Tuesday evening, after three months' absence in Canada and the United States.

I was greatly delighted with the prospects of the boys sent out last year. They have manfully grappled with all the difficulties (and in some cases hardships) incidental to commencing life in a strange land—especially such recently settled country as the North-west Territories. We cannot put a limit upon their prosperity in the future. I have no doubt that many of them will be wealthy men by-and-by.

The 100 boys we took out this year were soon fixed in desirable situations, and in years to come (if we are spared) we shall see the full benefit that we have conferred upon them, in giving, what many of them never had before, "a chance in life." Instead of swelling the ranks of "casual labourers," struggling for a few hours' work at the dock gates, or "old offenders," preying upon society when at liberty, and a heavy burden to this community when in confinement, many of these will be steady settlers upon their own farms, covering the vast and fertile prairies with crops of grain and herds of cattle for the food-supply of the mother country.

The work at home has been most lovingly cared for in my absence by my dear friend, Mr. Austin. The health of the boys, which was some anxiety before I left, through smallpox having crept in, has been splendid. Many of the cases received have been rescues of the most touching interest from not only distress, squalor, and vagrancy, but from vice and crime.

There are thirty vacancies to be filled up here and at Greenwich. We need only to "let down the net" a few nights on our London streets to enclose a multitude, but our net will not bear the strain, so we must "beckon to our partners to come and help us."

The receipts in my absence have fallen about £400 below expenditure, and it is now time for us to prepare for our winter's work. The class of boys we deal with often needs six or eight months' training to fit them for emigration to Canada into respectable homes, to do any credit to their training on this side. To send neglected boys gathered from the streets, before they have acquired proper personal habits, is not only a cruel wrong to the families into which they are received there, but suicidal for juvenile emigration work in the future.

Besides, it must never be forgotten this is a Home Missionary work amongst our youthful home heathen. Every place filled up in the Homes means another precious boy under Gospel teaching, prayed for and pleaded with, so that another soul may be won as a jewel for the Saviour's diadem. The sooner these vacancies are filled up the better, as every week's instruction is invaluable, when the time to influence these boys and give a direction to the course of their whole lives in the future is so very short.

It would be most sad for us to be crippled for means at this season, just as we are commencing our winter's campaign. We have a great work in hand, fraught with unspeakable blessing to hundreds of dear young lives, and it is incumbent upon all of us to make great efforts to sustain it, as we have already had to make great efforts to build it up to its present proportions.—Your grateful partner, J. W. C. Fegan.

THE GOSPEL IN MADAGASCAR.

THE following information is taken from letters we have just received from Rev. J. Peill, of the London Missionary Society. In April the usual half-yearly meeting of missionaries, native evangelists, and pastors was held in Antananarivo, the capital. Great numbers of the people, representatives of the churches connected with the L.M.S. and Friends' Foreign Mission Association, attended. A sermon was preached by the writer, enforcing boldness in maintaining the truth at all hazards, faithful denunciation of wrong-doing, and humble, dependent walking with God. After this, various subjects connected with mission work were spoken of and discussed, such as, the proper conduct of worship in the house of God; how most effectually to lead the young people in the Sunday-schools to give their hearts to Christ; how best to spread his kingdom among the heathen.

The Rev. J. Sibree read a paper on "The reading of the Scriptures and prayer in the churches."

The financial report of the Native Missionary Society for the previous six months showed that during that time £121 8s. had been contributed, a special effort having been made as the funds were getting low. A native missionary gave an account of his life and work during the past four years in the south-east coast of the island.

In May a conference of missionaries, occupying two days, was held. Rev. T. T. Matthews, the chairman, read a paper on "The present spiritual condition of the churches," looking at the dark as well as the bright side of the subject.

The question of "Hindrances" to successful work was considered, when the Rev. W. Montgomery spoke of "Hindrances arising from ourselves," such as want of faith, want of the Holy Spirit's power, lack of deeper consecration, and more earnest prayer for success.

Rev. R. Baron spoke of "Hindrances arising from the natives," such as social difficulties, the existence of slavery, the feudal state of society, or the relation that the people hold to the Government.

"Suggestions for the future" were then considered. The practical outcome of the two days' Conference seemed to be a greater sense of the need of more change in the workers than in the present modes of work.

In reference to the war, Mr. Peill says, "Just lately, I have been having a round of school examinations in my district, and I find that the work in this respect is very little injured by the war; in fact, both as regards churches and schools, all goes on much as if there were no war. For some months now we have heard nothing of the French doings on the coast.

"But the people still go on preparing lest invasion should come, and are sending off fresh troops to the various coasts held or threatened by the French. The camps have really become towns now, and there are churches and schools diligently carried on in them, so that this long suspense may be a means of causing many soldiers to hear the word of God who might not have done so at their own homes. In the large camp of about 20,000 men near this place (Ambòbimànga), the Gospel was regularly preached every Sunday; and altogether, both as regards attendance at the Sunday services, Bible-classes, and schools, my experience is that the war makes very little difference.

"There is, of course, a great strain upon the little nation now in its fight for independence. The citizen soldiers are liable to be called out at any moment, and sent off to any part of the island. Much distress results; this, unfortunately, is the inevitable consequence of war everywhere. May God in his great mercy grant a speedy termination to this sad affair!

"Lately, a great number of new governors have been sent to the various coast towns and chief centres of population. Many of these are quite young, and are preachers or evangelists in our churches. They are fully trusted by the Native Government. This new policy of putting young, educated men of enlightened views and sympathies to the fore ought to advance the cause of Christian civilisation throughout the island. A young man, for five years evangelist in this town, has been sent off in this way as Lieut.-Governor of Fianarantsoa, the capital of the Betsileo Province to the south. We miss him here much, but he will doubtless be useful there.

"The prayer-meetings are kept up well, and many earnest prayers are made for peace. I was specially struck by an address on Sennacherib and Hezekiah, delivered by one of our native preachers at one of these meetings. The spirit of trust in God that breathed through it, the absence of all boasting or revengeful feeling, the confession of sin worthy of greater punishment, were really beautiful. And on the whole these are characteristic features of the patriotic prayer-meetings, so far as my experience goes. Along with a firm determination to defend the Fatherland from invasion is a deep humility before God in many hearts.

"At present the great item of interest at the capital is the arrival of the Italian Consul from Tamatave. He has come to ratify the treaty between Italy and Madagascar, made while the Malagasy Ambassadors were in England. The treaty is a very simple one, consisting of three articles, and gives Italian subjects all the advantages of 'the most favoured nation.' It was signed in London, in July, 1883, by the two Malagasy Ambassadors on behalf of Madagascar, and by Count Nigra on behalf of Italy. The Consul has come in ratification of this treaty, and generally to emphasise the good relations existing between the two nations.

"Several of our missionaries are leaving for home this month:—Rev. J. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Parrett, the former for twenty-three years missionary printer in Madagascar, Rev. J. Capsey, B.A., and Mrs. Cousins and family, wife of Rev. W. Cousins, our senior missionary. We hear of a Dr. Allen coming out to reinforce the Medical Mission. Unless further help arrives soon our mission will be very much reduced, as we are already far below our normal strength."

From the monthly Chronicle of the London Missionary Society we also find that "on Feb. 3, Mr. Peill preached in the village of Ampàrafàravàto at a service in which seven churches joined. Mr. Peill was the first European who had ever entered this chapel. Ampàrafàravàto, which is about five miles north of Ambòhimànga, is one of the few towns in Madagascar which Europeans may not enter. It was formely sacred, as the residence of Kèlimalàza, one of the most famous of the Malagasy idols. An evangelist has been resident there for some years. At first he met with very rough treatment. Lately, although not openly resisting him and his work, the people have persistently refused to co-operate at all heartily with the surrounding churches in any kind of Christian work, and their church has been all along inaccessible to the missionary of the district.

"When the Prime Minister was at Ambòhimànga during the Malagasy New Year festival, Mr. Peill wrote to ask if there was any longer any reason why he should not enter the church at Ampàrafàravàto, seeing that it was now outside the village, and that he often passed along the road between it and the town. He soon had a reply that he might enter the church whenever he pleased. The village itself he could not enter, as that was especially reserved in the Anglo-Malagasy Treaty. At first the people of this conservative village would not credit the news. Mr. Peill left them plenty of time to grow accustomed to it, and then went on February 3 to the above-mentioned service in the chapel. The villagers received him very hospitably, and they had a splendidly-attended meeting. All the churches around are delighted at the change, and the people at Ampàrafàravàto itself have acquiesced more readily than one would have supposed, the better disposed of them being glad of it."

A ROMISH CONVERT.—The Rev. Arthur Galton, at one time of the Brompton Oratory, and recently a Professor at Oscott College, has seceded from the Church of Rome.

TEXTS AND TOPICS FOR OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.

BY MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

THE announcement of this subject drew a large number of the workers to the "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff-highway, at the last monthly meeting, as open-air preaching is an important feature of their work.

After tea they adjourned to their "preaching corner" for three quarters of an hour, previous to Mr. Kirkham's address, where he and his helpers soon drew a crowd around them, which listened with great attention. This was followed by the workers' meeting inside, at which the Secretary gave a brief sketch of the character of the work.

Mr. Kirkham then said: People very often wonder why some open-air preachers differ so much from others. How is it that, directly they begin, their only gift seems to be that of dispersion, while others (with no deeper zeal or worthiness) hold their audience from the first word. The answer is found in their way of putting things, coupled with the use and modulation of the voice. Some begin in a high key, and continue in a monotonous tone. It is not the voice that is at fault, but its use. John Wesley, remarking upon open-air preaching, said "For God's sake don't scream."

As to methods of gathering your congregation. A good thing to have is an uplifted banner, a harmonium, and good singing—something to catch the people. If you can get a soldier or a coloured man to address the people they are sure to draw a crowd.

When gathered, how to keep them. You may have whatever you like, but if your preaching is wanting, dispersion will be your forte. Preparation is essential; have something to say; do not bring it all out at once, and then be obliged to stop; speak leisurely, and do not let off all your skyrockets at the beginning. Have something stronger to say than you have yet said.

The preacher does well to distinguish character—describe the character of the wicked, and that of the righteous.

Take a subject that happened in the open air, and then you have one in harmony with the occasion. For instance, this is a question I frequently ask: "What was the first open-air subject ever preached?" Once I was answered correctly. God was the preacher, Adam the audience, and the subject "Where art thou?" Could there be a more telling subject? The Bible is full of similar ones.

From every hamlet and town in England there is a road to London, so from every text of God's Word there should be shown a way to the cross.

Begin at a point of agreement, not at a point antagonism.

To encourage open-air preaching at all times of the year, and under difficulties, Mr. Kirkham remarked:—

Preaching in a fog is not failure; the air being humid the voice is conveyed.

Preaching in the snow is not to be discouraged; there has been good work done in the snow.

Referring to the Scripture narrative, he said, "Killing a lion is difficult at any time; to kill a lion in a pit is more difficult still; but to kill a lion in a pit with snow at the bottom is praiseworthy indeed."

With similar remarks to these, Mr. Kirkham greatly interested his audience, and we trust his useful hints will benefit those who heard him, and those who read this report of a very profitable meeting.

CRIME IN BERLIN.—According to the Public Criminal Commission there were, in 1884, 24,366 cases of crime. Amongst these were 361 of immorality, 68 of perjury, 349 of suicide, and 188 of attempted suicide, 8 offences against the Emperor, 21 Socialistic mis-deeds. Altogether 1439 more cases than in the previous year.—Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger.

MRS. PICKETT'S MISSIONARY BOX.

[This rather singular production came from beyond the seas in a magazine. Its garb was mean, its native land could only be guessed; but, the lesson it contains being too good to be lost, its owner has had it printed, with the hope that those into whose hands it may fall may receive a blessing through it. The grammar, spelling, &c., are so altered that, should it meet the eye of its own parent, she would scarcely recognise it. It may be had at Mr. Fegan's Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., 6d. per dozen.]

"THAT missionary box," said Mrs. Pickett, surveying it with her head on one side, as it stood in state on the best parlour mantel, "that missionary box is worth its weight in gold two or three times over to me. You would never believe it, Mrs. Malcolm, the things I have been learning ever since Mary Pickett brought it home, or rather the fellow to it, and set it on the dining-room shelf, and told me she had brought me a present from the meeting."

"Do tell me about it," said the new minister's wife, with girlish pleasure at the prospect of a story.

"I've half a notion to," replied her hostess. "You've got a real drawing-out way with you, Mrs. Malcolm. Some way you make me think of Mary Pickett herself, that was the beginning of it all, she is a missionary to Turkey now—my niece, you know. You have got her coloured hair, and you are light complexioned like her, and you laugh something like her, too. Mary Pickett always was a master hand for laughing; I remember how she laughed that afternoon when she came in with those two boxes and set mine on the shelf there; she knew I was not the missionary kind, I don't know but she did it just for a joke. It was five years ago, you know, and I was scraping along with my boarders, and rents were high and living higher, and I had hard enough times to make both ends meet I can tell you, though it was not half as hard times as I thought it was. I was that down-hearted that everything looked 'criss-cross' to me, and I had got to have hard feeling against every one that appeared to get along easier than me. I had almost given up going to church at all, although I was a professor, and I won't say but that I had murmurings against Providence—the fact is, I know I had. And so it was work, work, from one week's end to another, and I never thought of anything else. Then Mary Pickett came home from school, where she had been ever since she was fifteen, for it took all the money her pa left her to get an education so as to teach; and she got a place in a grammar school, and came to board with me. She had heard about missions at that school till she was full of them, and the very first meeting-day after she came, she walked out into the kitchen, and said,

"'Aunty, are you not coming to the missionary meeting down at the church? I'll meet you there after school.'

"If you will believe me, Mrs. Malcolm, I was that riled that I could have shaken her. I said, 'Pretty doings it would be for me to go "trapsing" off to meeting, leave the ironing and the cooking, and sit alongside Lawyer Stapleton's wife, hearing about—who knows what! Folks had better stay at home and see to their work;' but nothing I said ever made Mary Pickett answer back, she just laughed and said 'Good-bye,' and I stayed at home and pottered over the kitchen work, till I was hot as fire inside and out; and about five o'clock she came back with those two boxes.

"'I've brought you a present, Aunt Mirandy,' she said, setting it down; and when I saw what it was, I just stood and stared, it was not that one, but one just like it, and it had a motto written on one end, 'What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits to me?'

"'Well, you are smart!' I said, and Mary, she just dropped into a chair and laughed till I could not help laughing too. 'Great benefits I have,' I said, standing and looking that box all over. 'Guess the heathen will not get much out of me at that rate.'

"'I suppose that depends on how much you render,' said Mary. 'You might try at a cent apiece awhile, just for the fun of it. Nobody knows who's got this motto, you know, and even a few cents would be some help.'

"'About as many as grapes off bean-vines I'd get,' I said, for I was more than usually low-spirited that night, and I just made up my mind I would keep count just to show myself how little I did have, those few cents won't break me, I thought, and I really seemed to enjoy thinking over the hard times I had, while I was setting the table, with Mary helping; and I kept saying little mean things about how I supposed she wanted me to put in a cent for a smoky stove, and for the bread that was not light, so that I knew all the boarders would be grumbling at supper and a great deal more that she never took any notice of. Mrs. Stapleton said once that Mary was a girl of great tact, and I guess that I know it better than anyone else.

"Well, the box sat there all that week, and I used to say it must be rather lonesome with nothing in it, for nothing went in till next missionary meeting day. I was sitting on the back steps getting a breath of fresh air when Mary came home, and I called out to know what they had been talking about to-day. Well, she came and sat down alongside of me, and began to tell me about the meeting; and it was all about India, and the widows there, poor creatures, and they being abused and starved, and not allowed to think for themselves: you know all about it better than I do; and before I thought, I said, 'Well, if I am a widow, I am thankful I am where I can earn my own living, and no thanks to nobody, and no one to interfere!'

"Then Mary she laughed and said that was my first benefit. Well, that rather tickled me, for I thought a woman must be pretty hard up for benefits when she had to go off to India to find them, and I dropped in one cent, and it rattled round a few days without any company. I used to shake it every time I passed by the shelf, and the thought of those poor things in India kept coming up before me, and I really was glad when I got a new boarder for my best room, and felt as though I ought to put in another cent. And the next meeting Mary she told me about Japan, and I thought about it till I put in another, because I was not a Jap. And all the while I felt rather proud of how little there was in that box! Then one day when I got a chance to turn a penny selling eggs, which I was not in the habit of doing, Mary brought the box in where I was counting my money, and said:

"'A penny for your benefit, Aunt Mirandy,' but I said, 'This is not the Lord's benefit,' and she answered, 'If it is not his, whose is it?' And she began to hum over something out of one of the poetry books that she was always reading:

"'God's grace is the only grace,
And all grace is the grace of God.'

AMONGST THE COSTERS' CHILDREN.

IN these days of agitation and excitement, when great schemes for the reclamation of outcast humanity are being launched on every hand, and philanthropists are bestowing their hundreds here and their thousands there, there is great danger lest unassuming workers and unostentatious work should be altogether overlooked.

These thoughts were forcibly pressed upon my mind after a recent visit to the Costermongers' Cottage Mission in Catherine-street, Vinegar Ground. Turning out of the City-road I found myself in a narrow and dimly-lighted street, on either side of which were the houses inhabited principally by "costers," while down a still narrower entrance I saw the massive looming form of a model dwelling-house. The squalor of the scene, the ragged forms that passed me by, the language I heard, all made me feel I was in the midst of modern heathendom.

Halfway down the street, however, the light of a bright lamp was shining from a house, and thither I directed my steps. Truly a lighthouse in the midst of an ocean of iniquity! Humble as are the mission premises, with no larger hall than a room, which was once a shop; unassuming as are the workers—Walter Penrose, the superintendent, himself a converted coster—yet I could not help thanking God for both, for without them the spiritual destitution must have been greater still. At the present moment many of the poor people are under notice to leave their homes, which are required for the building of a new Board School, and so the overcrowding, and, consequently, the shameless and terrible immorality, must be increased.

I was to address the children. Packed into that one small room were from eighty to a hundred, to look upon whose faces made one's heart bleed. The dirt, the hunger, the weariness, combined with the eager interest and attention, the manifest desire for better things, the fervent singing of the hymns—all made one long that some of those to whom our Lord has entrusted wealth might have been there to see and hear!

Many of the boys before me, lads under twelve in many cases, had, I was informed, already been trained to thieve, and one could only imagine what must be the home of that poor girl about fifteen before me who was already suffering from a black eye, and upon whose face there was a look which one could hardly bear to gaze upon.

Mothers' meetings, Gospel and Temperance services, attendance upon the sick, and relief to the suffering, are regularly carried on, while now and then free teas are held to help gather in the wanderers, and speak to them of Him who died for them. The treasurer is the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, 2, Pall-mall, East, S.W., and the work is conducted by Mr. Walter Penrose, Catherine-street, Vinegar Ground, E.C., by whom the annual report will be forwarded on application. F. C.

SALVATION SCENES AT THE CLAPHAM CONFERENCE HALL.

[Mr. Oscar Owers and Mr. Herbert Francis have been preaching here. The following sketch is from "Open Doors," published in connection with the Hall at Clapham.]

IN our day the publication of what the Lord is doing is one of the greatest means used by Him for the attraction of multitudes, and is working mighty things. Moody and Sankey's labours increased and multiplied according as the story of their movement was spread abroad. Finding this to be so, "so much the more they published it."

We who witness such wonderful things desire, too, to make them known. But description fails.

Look at a group, where a man sits with folded arms and determined mien, looking straight before him, ignoring the presence of the wife sitting at his side, who stretches across to speak with a friend standing close at hand. The woman pleads with her loved one to listen; the friend raises his heart to God, and waits a favourable moment. It does not come. The man rises, and, with a rush, leaves the place. His wife follows, slowly and sorrowfully.

So many are now kneeling in soul-distress that none have time to glance at the disturbed group. Its members, nevertheless, are becoming visible again. Now they are just inside the door. The resolute man is capitulating. He will sit down and wait for his wife. In a contemptuous kind of way he remarks—

"She likes those things."

Her eyes are glistening: "He has been a long time like this," she says.

"Don't try to force him," we advise.

"I don't," she replies, "but he can't get away; it was his own wish to return now. The work must be begun!"

"You are mistaken," he puts in. "I never was farther from being converted. I don't see things as you do at all," he said, turning to us.

"What do you object to?" was asked.

"Oh, the whole of it! Why should you want to save me? What good will you get by it? I am quite easy and contented in my mind."

"Indeed you are not, friend. You are both puzzled and miserable. We want you to be happy, and to live for ever."

"You are very kind. I can't conceive what you have to say to me."

"Well, I'll tell you what I have to say to you: For many years we've been praying for you; and we want to get what we have asked of God, that He may be glorified in hearing and answering prayer, and have joy over your salvation."

"How can you have been praying for me, when you did not know me?"

"Yes, we did know you; but not by name. You are one of a great family, the many members of which bear a strong resemblance to each other. Every one of them is loved and sought for. To-night we want you to come to Jesus. Other times we have claimed other men for the Lord. To-night we claim you. After this we will take hold of others. This is your last chance. We feel that it will be impossible to do any more than we have done for you; henceforth you will be left alone."

"No, indeed I shan't!" he cried. "Jesus never forsakes those He calls."

"Then you hear the call?"

"Ah, that's it! I don't like to give up; I am proud. That's about what it is, wife," turning to his partner.

"But you will do it—and now? Come!"

The hesitating man was at length on his knees. It was best to leave him to the Holy Spirit alone. He stood up:

"It is done," he said solemnly.

The pair left in silence; and we raised a note of praise in their absence. None but the Lord and ourselves knew for whom the bells of heaven were rung that evening.

The crowded hall had quite altered in appearance since we had left the platform. As we had looked on the meeting, it was an ordinary assembly, seated in ranks across the floor and down the sides. This order was now all broken up. Twos and threes were kneeling in various parts. Men and women were standing opposite little companies, Bible in hand, and "telling them the way of God more plainly."

The accents of supplication were humming in the air. Some sound of melody was raised, and eagerly joined in for a short "Praise the Lord;" and yet no discord, nor any confusion, was manifest. There was a fire burning which would not be suppressed, and ever and anon its flames burst out. One standing in the midst watched the smouldering embers, and where he saw opportunity he fanned the glowing fuel until it became a conflagration.

"Any who desire to have our prayers offered for them, will they hold up the right hand?"

And they rose to their feet, lifting the hand, at first slowly and timidly, and then boldly and firmly.

The leader counts "one, two, three," and so on, until the numbers are tens, when he is overcome, and pauses, while the petition is offered, which these souls desire, and he is constrained to cry out in joyful "Hallelujah to the Lamb, that was slain on Mount Calvary, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Hallelujah! Amen."

Here the scene changes again, but it does not close. Now, gathered in the aisle are some young men, and they are disputing. One of them is very angry. He complains that he has too many opponents.

"My opinion is as good as theirs," he says. "I do not believe a word of Christianity. It is all rubbish. No one will convince me; I am perfectly happy in my belief. I won't enter this place again."

And he goes out to the gate, where late at night he is seen, still talking earnestly with one of the disputants. Thus, Satan shows his presence among the sons of God.

"I'd give anything if I could get up the steam as your preacher does," said a well-dressed man, who had been frequently in the audience. "He feels what he says. Now, I don't. I tell my hearers, when I preach, all that he does; every word he says I endorse. I can preach the Gospel as well as he" (and better, he was nearly adding, but he didn't say it: he no doubt thought it). "There's nothing new, no power nor eloquence in what he says; in fact, he is quite illogical, and is not a good speaker. I am a practised elocutionist, and naturally an orator, so there is nothing in that way deficient in me. But somehow, I haven't the 'go' in me. If people won't believe, why, they must leave it alone. If they won't be saved, they must be lost. I can't get up a sensation as if I cared one way or the other. My duty is done, when I've preached. A man is only required to preach, not to persecute people into being converted. He is not responsible for those who refuse to accept his message. I am a lay preacher, and I have plenty of work. I wish I had the secret of your success here in waking up the people, and getting them to express themselves the way they do here. I come every night to look on. The thing fascinates me. It is unaccountable. These men rising and 'confessing Christ,' as you say! I don't mind the women so much, they are mostly hysterical; but the men, I can't but be struck with their truth and earnestness."

We laid before him the fact that he was a dead soul, and could not impart what he had not got. He evidently had been to his first "inquiry meeting." We had many earnest conversations with him subsequently; and believe that he is slowly feeling his way to the source of light, and life, and zeal.

As we left the hall, when the work of that evening was done, an excited young man came up, and complained that "every fellow he met in the corridor had asked him if he was saved." He considered it an intrusion and impertinence, and he would "never come to the place again."

"My friend," we replied, "do you not walk about your shop asking customers if they have got what they want? Would you not think it very wrong if you neglected that question at the door, 'Can we do anything more for you?' That's your way of doing business, and ours is like it. I am glad to hear that all our people here do their work so well, and don't let you pass without inquiring if you have got the one thing needful."

The young man left us with a troubled face. We knew we should see him again soon. On the following Sunday he was again in the hall, and not alone. "My sister was curious to see this place," he said, "so I brought her."

We passed on, and left the two talking, and making, no doubt, jest of our doings. But there came over both a very great change. We saw little but their bent forms for several minutes. They were subdued into solemnised hearers, then into "anxious souls," and finally "took Christ as their Saviour," standing up and declaring they would give themselves to Him.

How glorious to hear such as these join in the chorus:

"Not my own, no, not my own!
All I am I give to Thee,
All I have, and all I hope for,
Thine for evermore to be."

These are the scenes we have in our Conference Hall, which was formerly The Marble Rink, "where Satan's seat was," where men "drew iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope."

When the Lord gave us this Hall, we scarcely dared to imagine that it was to become such a place of blessing. The privilege, the honour, the joy, the rejoicing, are more than we can describe; and so we can go on to—

"Sound his praises, tell the story
Of the Lamb that was slain.
Sound his praises, tell the story
Again and again."

PAST AND PRESENT.

By Rev. WILLIAM ARTHUR.

IN the year 1836 I found myself in Rome with my wife. I said, "We must not leave this place without having a prayer-meeting." "We can't have one." "We must have one." "We haven't any place." "We have this bedroom." "The police will be upon you." "We must consider." So I sallied out to get some to come to our bedroom in our Hotel d'Angleterre. The first man that accepted my invitation was Thomas Henry Tarleton, the originator of the Y.M.C.A. work in Europe. The second man that accepted the invitation was Dr. Treat, of Boston, the Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions. The next was Dr. Forbes, clergyman of the Church of England, since for many years the English chaplain in Paris; and the only other person was Mr. Hale, an American clergyman, then officiating as chaplain at the American Embassy in Rome. Seven of us met in that bedroom in the Hotel d'Angleterre.

We spent nearly two hours in very earnest prayer. We did not know who might be overhearing us, or what might follow. But during the meeting there fell upon me this impression: It is very strange that here, in this little room, at such a short notice, there should be met together the representatives of the leading Missionary Society in America, the representative of the largest Missionary Society in Protestant Europe, the representative of the Young Men's Christian Associations, the representative of the clergymen in America and in England. And of those seven there were two Christian women. And there are things that come into a man's mind, we don't know how, and somehow they form a part of it, but from that time I always went about feeling that I should live to see the Gospel freely preached in Rome.

Well, Sir, I have paid other visits in the interim to Rome, but two years ago I entered that city as one of a deputation from the Evangelical Alliance, in company with Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser and others. It was pleasant, when I reached the platform in Cincinnati, to see the faces of Bishop Simpson and Brother Sargent and others; but will you pardon me if I say that it was even pleasanter to see fifteen men of different Christian denominations gather to welcome a deputation of the Evangelical Alliance to Rome? And one of the first things they said to us was, "We are going to give you a reception to-night in the Hotel d'Angleterre"—in that very hotel in which our prayer-meeting had been held twenty years before. And there, that evening, within a few yards of the very room where the prayer-meeting was held, we were welcomed by fifty men who were all employed in working for the spread of the Gospel in the city of Rome, and working in as perfect freedom and protection by the law as in the city of Cincinnati. Dr. Prime, of The New York Observer, was there, and Dr. Vernon also.—From an Address delivered at Cincinnati.

RITUALISTIC PRACTICES.—Lord Ebury, as President of the Prayer-book Revision Society, has issued an address, in which the attention of all who value the Protestant religion is earnestly invited to the present position of the Church of England. The unprotestantising of the Church, he says, has been to an alarming extent accomplished. As a remedy for this evil it is suggested that there should be removed from the Book of Common Prayer those words and phrases which are capable of being perverted to a Romish sense, and also the "Ornaments Rubric," which is, according to the Bishop of Liverpool, "a barrier to true peace in the Church."

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND AT MILDMAY.

ON Friday evening a meeting of Christian workers was held in Room No. 6, for prayer and consultation respecting the mission to be carried on by Mr. Hammond from Sept. 20 to Oct. 4, principally among the young.

After some very telling remarks by the Chairman, Mr. JAMES E. MATHIESON, on the importance of early conversion, and on the necessity of preparing the young for the troublous times which may be coming,

Dr. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON referred to the work of Mr. Hammond in Glasgow in 1861. He had then just finished his studies in the Scotch universities, and began a work in his (Dr. Paterson's) church, in which scores and hundreds were converted to God, and which was continued for five months, though Mr. Hammond had left. The evangelist had not at that time devoted himself specially to children, and these meetings were for adults. The speaker confessed that he, as well as others, was disposed to look critically on the work, but when he saw the results in the after-meeting he could doubt no longer. Dr. Andrew Bonar at first also hesitated, but when he saw two of his own children among the inquirers, and led to the Saviour, he was satisfied that God was in it.

Mr. SAMUEL TYLER said that Whitsunday, 1867, was indeed a Day of Pentecost at Surrey Chapel. They had heard how Mr. Hammond had been blessed in America since his work in Scotland in 1861, and at John-street (Mr. Baptist Noel's) then and recently, and, therefore, they invited him. In the early prayer-meeting he read Mal. iii. 10—12, and they were assured that the promised blessing would be poured out; and so, indeed, it proved. The children, in great numbers, were broken down, and were built up in Jesus Christ. He had now a letter in his pocket from a highly valued missionary in China. She was the first child (then twelve years old) to whom he spoke in that inquiry-room; she accepted Christ, became an exemplary and useful Christian, and ultimately went out in connexion with the China Inland Mission. He could not forget the remark of Mr. Noel, who came into the vestry, and on seeing many Church members not attempting to speak to the anxious children, said: "Brethren, do not let it be said of Surrey Chapel as of Nazareth, that Jesus could not do many mighty works there because of their unbelief."

[Mr. Tyler will be remembered by many as prominently connected with the Children's Special Service Mission in its earlier days. He has been for many years an elder at Christ Church (Rev. Newman Hall's), as previously at Surrey Chapel.]

Mr. BARTLETT counted it a high honour and privilege to speak of the work at the Metropolitan Tabernacle eighteen years ago. Eight thousand children were gathered within the building, and half as many were outside, for whom there was no room. He had known hundreds of children who were saved at that time, and many of them were now married and training their own little ones for heaven. Mr. Hammond had peculiarities, but God gave them and uses them.

Mr. T. J. HUGHES recalled the fact that when Mr. Hammond was at Mr. Noel's chapel in 1867, Mr. Spiers told him he was going to take his Sunday-school children to the meetings in vans. They went and God blessed them; and out of that He raised up the Children's Special Service Mission. The speaker's own son was then saved, and he at least had been an instance of the stability of the work.

Mr. MORGAN said that Mr. Baptist Noel proved himself a man before his time in his recognition of God's hand in sending out Mr. Hammond and many other evangelists, whom Mr. Noel had invited to his chapel. The speaker mentioned the testimony given by a merchant of Toronto, with whom he met on board ship, and who was enthusiastic in his description of Mr. Hammond's services in that city. Also the testimony of Dr. Brookes, who at first refrained from taking part in the meetings at St. Louis, but when he spoke to strong men who were broken down by the power of God, he entered heartily into them.

Rev. Mr. BAX, Baptist minister, expressed his entire sympathy with the mission.

Mr. HANKINSON, Secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission, spoke very warmly of the work which he recollected eighteen years ago, and of the mistaken ideas regarding children's services which the C.S.S.M. had had to encounter. Some Sunday-school teachers thought they were going to supersede Sunday-schools. Some Christians were more intent on watching the children than on watching over them. He earnestly exhorted them not to watch for their halting, but to watch for their souls, that they might give account of them with joy and not with grief

Dr. EDMOND expressed his entire sympathy. Mr. Hammond would preach in his church next Sunday morning. The Doctor told a story of Ralph Erskine who was heard with great profit by one who went a second time to hear the preacher and was disappointed. He told this to Mr. Erskine, who replied, "The first time you went to hear the Gospel and got blest, the second time you went to hear the man and got nothing." We must not make this mistake with regard to Mr. Hammond.

Rev. D. B. HANKIN, of St. Jude's, Mildmay, observed that it was sometimes said that preachers aimed at nothing and hit it. He might say the same of some Sunday-school teachers. But, as the preacher's aim should be the salvation of his hearers, so the Sunday-school teacher of his class. He should have been delighted to ask Mr. Hammond to occupy his pulpit, and hoped the ecclesiastical law which prevented it would soon be done away. He delighted in the prospect of a combination of effort by all denominations in that hallowed spot; it would have rejoiced the heart of his venerated predecessor Mr. Pennefather.

Mr. GIBBARD HUGHES, previously referred to by his father, said that he did not see anything particularly peculiar about Mr. Hammond. When he heard him at Mr. Noel's, after the first five minutes he did not think about the man; his mind was absorbed by the Jesus whom he preached. He showed how He had suffered for him, and he had never thanked Him. That broke him down, and he came to Christ at once.

A gentleman, representing the Wesleyan body, expressed their full sympathy, and asked if they were to bring their Sunday-school children on Sunday afternoon. This gave Mr. Mathieson an opportunity of explaining that all the schools were coming to the meeting on the Sunday afternoons.

ST. MALO AND ST. SERVAN SAILORS' REST.—In their half-yearly report the committee express their gratitude to God for enabling them to continue a work evidently appreciated by the sailors, 1931 of whom have enjoyed the Rest during the past six months. Two shipwrecked crews of forty-three and eighteen men found shelter in the Rest while waiting a passage to England, and expressed themselves most grateful for the kindness shown them. Books, maritime, daily and other papers, illustrated and other periodicals, chess, draughts, &c., tea and coffee, and the use of cheerful and tastily arranged rooms are among the attractions which have doubtless kept many sailors from the numerous houses of dissipation which exist here as elsewhere. Books, periodicals, and newspapers (illustrated or otherwise) will be most thankfully accepted by Mr. John Amy, Agent of the London and South-Western Company, St. Malo.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.—The women of Wyoming, U.S., have for fifteen years possessed and exercised the right of voting. Many magistrates and governors of this State have borne witness to the good effects of this measure. Governor F. E. Warren, writing to a member of the Massachusset's Legislature, says: "I have resided in this State for fifteen years, and all my observations and experience oblige me to say that the 'election level' has never been 'lowered' by the votes of women. On the contrary, women choose candidates with more care than do men, and the two political parties see themselves obliged to bring forward their best men, in order to obtain the women's votes. As a man of business, public officer, and Governor, I have seen women at work in elections, and I have never seen a single case of domestic discord as the result. Their influence is beneficial. I did not help to make the law which grants them the right to vote, but I cannot help recognising its good effects.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP IN JAPAN.

THE Rev. D. M. L. Gorden, of Kioto, furnishes a very interesting account of the Dai Shimbokukai, or "Great Fellowship Meeting" of the Christians of Japan held in the city of Kioto, beginning on May 7, and lasting four days:—"This was the fourth meeting of the kind that has taken place; the last one having occurred in Tokio two years ago, at the time of the memorable revival. As was to have been expected, this meeting was larger than any of its predecessors, the delegates numbering over seventy, and representing nearly fifty churches, while the number of Christians present unofficially brought the aggregate to near 500. The meeting was held in a temporary building erected for the purpose on the river-bank. The delegates were provided with tables, on each of which was a little pyramid marked with the corresponding delegate's number, and in all the discussions the delegates referred to each other, and were addressed from the chair not by their names, but by their numbers. The formality resulting from this was less than might have been expected, and it no doubt added to the dignity and decorum which marked all the proceedings. In this and some other respects the meeting compared very favourably with similar ones seen in America. The delegates were generally men of manifest ability and experience. The addresses, as a rule, were able, and the prayers and exhortations bore witness to a good deal of spiritual life. In many hearts there seemed to be an intense longing for greater spiritual blessings, and if these were not received during the meeting in the fulness hoped for, many felt, at least, the blessing of 'hungering and thirsting after righteousness.' The spirit of union was very marked, and although no missionaries took part in the exercises, those present were very cordially received as advisory members. On Sunday, Christians connected with the Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian, Dutch Reformed, Methodist Episcopal, Canadian Methodist, Congregational, Episcopal, German Evangelical, and doubtless some other Churches, united in celebrating the Lord's Supper. The meeting proper closed on Sunday, May 10, but the Christians of Kioto took occasion of the presence of so many pastors and preachers to hold Sekkiyokai, or preaching-meetings, on the 11th and 12th. These were held in a large theatre, and lasted from 2 to 11 p.m. each day, with a short intermission for supper. There were eight or ten sermons daily, only one or two having been preached by Americans. Hearers were admitted by ticket, and nearly 5000 tickets are said to have been issued during the two days, though not more than 1200 or 1500 were present at any one time.

Mr. Learned gives another account of this remarkable meeting in addition to that of Dr. Gordon. He concludes by saying: "It was also exceedingly pleasant to see the depth of Christian experience and of spiritual culture to which many have attained. And not least worthy of mention was the strong spirit of Christian union which was manifested. Several of the Tokio delegates on their way home stopped at Nagahama, on the east side of the lake, and assisted the evangelist there in a large preaching-service. We rejoice in hoping that a similar spirit of union and co-operation and Christian fellowship may always characterise the Japanese Christians; and we hope that this Alliance may always be filled with the spirit of fellowship, and be guided by the Holy Spirit to the building u of Christ's kingdom in Japan." — Evangelica Christendom.

SENEGAL.—Here, under the auspices of th French Foreign Missionary Society, the Gospel i preached, schools are conducted, and a Church ha been formed, under the care of Mr. Taylor, a well educated earnest Christian, the son of liberate slaves. Several Musselmen have been brough under Christian influence, whose children atten the mission school.

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

OR the twenty-third time this annual gathering of believers and Christian workers met the City Hall on Tuesday, Wednesday, and hursday last. The attendance, interest, and pparent results were highly gratifying. The ea of the large hall was fairly filled at the day ttings, and the building was packed every ening. The subjects of Conference were aith and Feeling, Fellowship and Godly Fear, ruitfulness and Final Glory.

Amongst those present were the Master of olwarth, Dr. Bonar, Dr. Thomas Miller, Major olquhoun, Mr. Oates, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., lasgow; Rev. Dr. A. A. Bonar, Dr. W. G. laikie, Dr. Clemance, London; Dr. Elder umming, Glasgow, and others.

TUESDAY.

In the forenoon, W. E. Malcolm, Esq., of urnfoot, presided. After Dr. Baxter, lairgowrie, had opened the proceedings with ayer, the Chairman read a portion from Heb. ., and in touching terms referred to brethren ho had fallen asleep in the blessed hope since e previous gathering—notably, Mr. Brown ouglas, of Edinburgh, and Dr. Mackay, of ull.

Dr. Andrew A. Bonar then introduced the topic r the day, "Faith." In doing so, he said, "The aster never entered into any formal definition analysis of faith, nor will I on this occasion; ut I wish to present you with a practical illusation of faith at work. There are here on our rogramme six topics, but there is really a venth, for they are all streams from a common untain, and that fountain is the Lord Jesus—s person and work. Let us go back in thought me eighteen centuries, and fancy ourselves in phesus, where we pay a visit to the aged postle, now almost ninety years of age. We ask im how he first became acquainted with Jesus, d what led him to believe on his name." The peaker, in his own inimitable way, gave a raphic and, in its grand outlines, thoroughly criptural picture of John's intercourse with esus from the day he saw Him on the banks of e Jordan till the closing visions given to him Patmos, and, in conclusion, remarked that to tain great faith, we must learn more of the reatness of the Saviour. Let our souls be er engrossed with our great Redeemer, and mple faith in a great Saviour is the immediate sult.

Mr. McLaren, Edinburgh, then offered up rayer, after which Rev. Mr. Dawson, of St. ohn's Episcopal Church, Edinburgh, introduced e subject of "Feeling," basing his remarks n 1 Peter i. 8. He dwelt on the essential nnection between faith and feeling, and referred the obstacle which most inquirers have to ntend with—the lack of feeling. He touched n the fact that among Christians of the old hool doubt was once counted humility, while ven the primitive Christians required to be xhorted to rejoice evermore. It is one thing be saved, and another to know it. A man scued from a sinking ship may have doubts nd fears even when in the lifeboat.

Presiding in the afternoon, Dr. Blaikie intro-uced the subject for conversation—viz., "The lace which feeling ought to hold in our expeience." Referring to the place which feeling as in our experience, he remarked that feelings aried very much in different individuals—e.g., the egro and the Scotchman, the Presbyterian and he Wesleyan. Feeling, however, ought to be ought and exercised, and its development ought be sought more in this part of the country than had been, and that for the following reasons: 1) It is one of the fruits of the Spirit ("The ruit of the Spirit is love"); (2) It is one of the ewards and solaces of religion; (3) It is a ource of strength; (4) Feeling is associated with mpressive testimony. It is only those who feel the truth who can proclaim it with power. The other speakers were ex-Professor Martin, Dr. Baxter, Mr. Colvin, Mr. J. Balfour, Dr. Bonar, Mr. Wells, and Mr. McLaren, Edinburgh.

Mr. J. Balfour afterwards presided at a meeting for prayer for the salvation of our children.

At the evening session, Rev. Dr. Clemance, of London, delivered the opening address on "Christian Service," basing his remarks on Acts ix. 6. The first condition of Christian service is life—life not in form only, but the absolute yielding of heart and soul to Jesus. (2) Jesus Christ must have entire control of the life and work. The true disciple must be able to say in respect even to his business, his sphere of service in the world, "God has guided me here." (3) Actual contact with busy city life will show us many ways of doing the will of Christ. The two things needful are (i) for Christian people to understand their priesthood; (ii) the exercise of their kingship unto God, swaying the people by speaking the truth, by demanding righteousness, and by practising philanthropy and love.

Mr. Oates, Glasgow, then gave a powerful address to young men, based on Luke vii. 11, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." He illustrated it by touching incidents from the experiences of young men going to our great cities. Our spiritual work can never get higher than our spiritual life.

Mr. G. Campbell Fraser, Aberdeen, gave the closing address, full of fervour, from Jeremiah xiv. 17, "I have not desired the woful day, O Lord, Thou knowest." Each of us is either moving on towards the woful day of the Lord, or moving on from that woful day of Christ on Calvary. Which?

WEDNESDAY.

In the forenoon Mr. Stuart Gray presided, and Dr. Clemance gave the opening address on "Fellowship," which we published in full in our last issue.

Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, followed, with an address on "Godly Fear," dwelling chiefly on the idea that whenever the soul has seen the glory of God, it has been filled with self-abhorrence and Godly fear. This position was illustrated from lives of Bible characters. He then referred to two things that hinder Godly fear: (1) A sinful habit; (2) Distrust and unbelief as to what God can do.

At the afternoon meeting, Dr. A. Bonar presided, and introduced the subject, "On doing work for the Lord reverently, in singing, in prayer, in the family and at prayer-meetings." In doing so, he touched upon the reverence enjoined on the priests under the Law. They were not to touch the ark, nor yet the shewbread, with their hands. He then referred to various phases of irreverence in the worship in the sanctuary. Dr. Blaikie, Mr. Wells, and Mr. Guest also took part in the conversation.

Following this, Mr. McKay, of Prestonpans, Mr. George Miller, Army Scripture Reader, and Mr. Moody, the Soldier Evangelist, gave touching accounts of reminiscences of their work among the soldiers in Egypt chiefly, but also in India and elsewhere.

In the evening Mr. Alexander, Free Church missionary, from Madras, gave an interesting address on "Missions to the Heathen." At the outset he touched on the greatness and the openness of the field for missionary enterprise. He then dwelt on the variety of methods needed to win souls, saying that preconceived notions must often give way before the realities we meet on the field. In India, he said, the agents of the Church are face to face with organised heathenism. Every convert from Hinduism becomes a ruined man, an outcast from his fellows and his friends. Heathenism in India is trying on the armour of Western civilisation and organisation, hence education in missionary enterprise is much required. The two forces the missionary has to contend with are revived Hinduism and Secularism. Referring to the progress already made, he said the mind of India is in a state of flux. While the name of Christ is revered by all educated men, the offence of the Cross is the stumbling-block.

Major Colquhoun gave a brief account of the McAll Mission, specially in Lyons. There are ninety stations in France, one-third of which are in Paris.

Mr. Wain, Buckhaven, then spoke on Naaman the leper, referring to (1) his leprosy. His standing with his Master, his valour as a soldier, his being the divine instrument in delivering Syria—were all of no avail to cleanse his leprosy. (2) His cure—which he almost missed by the barriers he placed in his own way.

THURSDAY.

In the forenoon, after a few introductory remarks by the Chairman, Mr. James Balfour, of Edinburgh, Mr. Guest gave an address on "Fruitfulness," basing his remarks on John xii. 24; xv. 8. Fruitfulness in the Christian life was in its origin a gift, just as faith, or any other grace of the Spirit. There is a necessary connection between fruitfulness and our reward, the first resurrection being a blessing in store for none but fruitful disciples.

Mr. D. K. Guthrie gave an address on "Final Glory." Apart from Christ, his person, his work, his word of promise, we have no hope of glory. "Christ in you, the hope of glory." The men of the world believe in a glory of their own, and they seek after it. Let us have our hearts set on the glory to be revealed in us. He then insisted on two of the features of this glory: (1) It was a hidden glory. Any attempt to describe it would be a presumption. (2) It admitted of degrees. The sole condition on which our degree of glory would depend will be our fruitfulness now. Finally, he touched on the present advantages to be enjoyed by the confident expectation of this glory. (1) It would help us to bear our burdens more easily (2 Cor. iv. end); (2) It would promote in us a fitness for the glory (1 John iii. 2).

In the afternoon the Lord's Supper was dispensed in the City Hall. Dr. Blaikie presided, and he and Mr. Guest gave brief addresses at the Table.

At the evening meeting Mr. McLaren presided, and Mr. Wain gave an address on "Christian Fruitfulness," based on the words "Bringing forth fruit to perfection," and stirring addresses in the form of testimonies were given by various gentlemen from Edinburgh and Cambridge Universities.

GRANGETOWN.—Messrs. Canker and Finch have for the past six weeks' been holding very successful tent meetings in this district of iron workers. The tent has been generally well-filled with earnest and attentive listeners, and the Holy Ghost has been felt in his power. On Thursday and Friday evenings (25th and 26th ult.), meetings were held for the special teaching of holiness, and for building up the new converts in the faith.

MISS PRYDE'S HOME IN PARIS.—It is difficult to estimate the blessing of such a home for English governesses in a city like Paris, where every care is taken of the inmates, situations found for them, and a continued interest taken in them. Bible classes are held during the week, and on Saturday evenings an address given by the clergy of different Protestant denominations. There were between thirty and forty governesses present at one of these when I was there a few days ago. The address is 23, Avenue du Bois de Boulogne. It is an Institution worthy of warm support.

TENT WORK.—Dear Sir,—Since you published a short account of tent meetings in villages in Somersetshire, I have received offers of service from different well-known evangelists. Will you allow me to state trough your columns that the tents are fully supplied with preachers from the Evangelisation Society, whose labours God has greatly blessed. Many pray God to send forth labourers, but here they stop, never asking themselves what they can do towards it by way of arranging meetings for those labourers who are waiting, yea, longing to enter any doors that may be opened to them. Some say there is too much preaching. That may be true, if it is the preaching alluded to in Gal. i. 1, 8—10, but if it is that of Rom. i. 1, 15, 16, then it is not true, as the following will show:—A man about sixty years of age, in the tent says, "I never heard such preaching in all my life." Another, a regular attendant at the church, said, "I cannot understand this sudden conversion." A lady said, "The preacher actually said his sins were forgiven!"

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE National Temperance Federation will hold its annual meeting at Manchester, October 14.

AT the choir competition at the Albert Hall, the Portsmouth Temperance Choral Society gained a prize of £15.

MR. G. A. SALA, who is in Australia, writes that he finds the Temperance movement in full vigour throughout the colonies.

DURING last session were presented in favour of Sunday closing 966 petitions, 75,057 names, and against, 2 petitions, 236 names.

AT Greenock it has been arranged to hold a series of direct veto meetings during September. A number of able speakers have promised their help.

EASTERN AFRICA is in danger from the drink plague. The British Consul at Mozambique is doing his best to prevent the introduction of spirits on that side the continent.

THE Ashton-under-Lyne magistrates have just adopted an admirable and simple plan of dealing with applications for new licenses—viz., refuse every application that can be refused.

AT Ashton-under-Lyne two publicans have been fined for selling spirits watered below the legal standard. Teetotallers will think the mistake was they did not carry the process far enough.

CANON FARRAR recently said that knowing what is to be seen and heard at public-houses, were he a working man, he would sooner cut off his right hand than send his little son or daughter for beer.

AUSTRALIA.—The New South Wales' Drink Bill is £4,229,587, or £4 11s. 10d. per head. The preceding year it was more by 6s. 2d. per head. The reduction is attributed mainly to Temperance work.

AT Exeter Barracks a few days since, a soldier, leaving the service on completion of his twenty-one years, signed the pledge. Though a capital soldier he had not a single badge, and drink had been the cause.

AT the Middleton Division Licensing Sessions there were reported in the division 27 clubs at which intoxicants were sold, to the great injury of members and their families, and the increase of drunkenness.

A FAMILY wine-merchant in a country town lately refused a subscription to some religious object, saying, "Your Blue Ribboners and Bands of Hope have ruined my trade, and I have nothing to give away."—Sunday-school Chronicle.

WREXHAM publicans know how to make Sunday closing "a failure." At the Brewster Sessions it transpired that on Sundays they freely invited "friends" to spend the day with them; the said friends being then able to obtain drink as "lodgers."

THE International Temperance Conference at Antwerp, was opened, September 11, for three days. Amongst the topics arranged were: Licensing Laws, Revenue from Drink, Influence of Temperance Societies on Drinking, Crime, and Morality; Coffee houses; Inebriates' Homes.

AT Capetown a local law prohibits publicans from selling drink to persons twice convicted of drunkenness. To meet the case, the authorities supply the necessary photographs. A toper waiting his glass while the barman looked through his album would be an interesting sight.

THE remarkable immunity of the Jews from the ravages of epidemics was a subject of wonder centuries since. In the South of France lately, out of a considerable Jewish population in infected districts, only seven fell victims to cholera. In connection with this it is to be noted they are a remarkably temperate race.

A TYNESIDE brewer has written to the Bishop of Rochester that he is about to sever his connection with the Church of England, and transfer his annual subscription of three guineas a year to the Liberation Society. "I am a brewer," he says, in explanation, "and your Church is now a huge Teetotal Society, and bent on the destruction of an important and honourable branch of industry." This is a good testimony to the Church of England.

DR. W. B. RICHARDSON has been showing, by statistics, that publicans, with all the advantage of having, as a class, fine, warm, comfortable houses, nevertheless die much faster from disease by alcohol than the rest of the people. In England, for instance, the public record tells us, 138 publicans die in proportion to 100 of the whole community who are employed in seventy leading occupations. For eighty deaths of gamekeepers there are one hundred and thirty-eight deaths of publicans. Even railway-drivers and servants, who are exposed to so many dangers, die at the lower rate of one hundred and twenty-one to one hundred and thirty-eight publicans.

MR. C. RUSSELL, Q.C., candidate for Hackney, E., has secured the Temperance vote. He will vote for the direct veto, and against compensation to publicans deprived of their licences by a popular vote. He maintains that a license lasts from year to year, and is not a vested interest.

WESTERN TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—The forty-eighth anniversary was celebrated last week at Reading. It commenced on Saturday, the 15th ult., when a united meeting for prayer and praise was held. On Monday the annual sermon was preached by the Rev. S. Sturges, vicar of Wargrave. The Conference assembled on Tuesday, in the new Town Hall, under the presidency of Mr. G. Curtis. The report stated: "In 1860 the number of affiliated societies was 42. Last year at Salisbury we were able to report 388 societies in affiliation, which number has been increased since the last Annual Conference by 39 societies, now making a total of 427 societies." Mr. W. J. Palmer was elected President for the ensuing year. It was decided to hold the next Conference in Bath.

OUR TRAMCAR MEN.

FOR some months past, as is well known, there has been special prayer at Mrs. Reaney's Afternoon Service for our tramcar and 'bus men; this, however, was only introductory to the starting of an agitation, led by Mrs. Reaney, on behalf of the men in favour of shorter hours, and every other Sunday "off duty," a movement, which, under God's blessing, will prove an effectual Amen to the many prayers already offered.

For the success which has already attended the efforts put forth, we cannot but be devoutly thankful.

The Press has been very powerful in its advocacy of the cause, almost every paper, weekly and daily, serious and comic (with the notable exception of The Daily News) having taken the matter up, in addition to papers in the provinces. We must specially mention The Daily Telegraph, The Echo, and The Pall Mall Gazette.

Already the employés of the North Metropolitan Tramways Company appear to have considerably benefited by the agitation; but, as Mrs. Reaney says in a letter which she has since addressed to the men, "We mean to fight it out." Hence, although it may be a work of months, perhaps longer, we are sure our friends will watch the battle with great interest; but they need have no fear as to the result. In order to act as the voice of the tramcar men, Mrs. Reaney, and one other from Stepney, became shareholders in the North Metropolitan Tramways Company, this being the company which runs over our East-end lines, and being also the most influential of our London tramway companies.

Since the half-yearly meeting of the North Metropolitan Tramways Company, Aug. 5, and the issue of the letter to the tram men, Mrs. Reaney has, at the invitation of the Chairman and Directors of the Company, had a long interview with them at the Head Office, and, although not yet in a position to make any public communication on the subject, there is good reason to believe that something will be done.

In reference to public meetings, Mrs. Reaney wishes us to state here that for the present, at all events, it is not her intention to take part in any public meetings in connection with this agitation, believing that the responsibility rests with the shareholders, and it is to them the public must look, in the first instance, for the remedy; in addition to which we would say that the double-shift system, as advocated at the recent meeting at Mr. Charrington's Hall, would not find a single supporter among the tram men.

SUNDAY WORK.—The investigation ordered by Prince Bismarck about Sunday labour is now going on through the whole empire. Let us hope that the numerous working men who really want their Sunday will not be afraid to express publicly their opinion.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE BAPTISTS IN BERLIN have now 700 members, and as their chapel only has room for 450, they intend opening another one in some other part of the town.

ITALY.—At the last District Conference held in Florence by the Waldensian Church, Professor Geymonat urged the desirability of making use of lay agency in the work of evangelisation.

BORDEAUX.—In July an adult negro, formerly a slave in St. Louis, Senegal, was baptized, on a confession of his faith, in the "Evangelical Chapel" at Bordeaux. About two years ago, Mr. Taylor, a black man born at Sierra Leone, an earnest Evangelist, sent him to the care of certain friends of the freed slaves, by whom he has been instructed in Gospel truth, as also in watchmaking, which he has rapidly learnt. His conduct has been quite consistent with his profession. He is about to return to St. Louis, where it is thought he will be very useful.

ZURICH.—In August a statue of Zwinglius was set up in one of the squares of the town. It represents the reformer standing, leaning on his sword, holding his Bible against his heart. The festival, which was largely attended, partook at once of a religious and of a patriotic character. A Zurich religious journal expresses the opinion of many pastors of the National Church when it shows the inconsistency of many who celebrated the fête with enthusiasm, who have broken with the views of the Reformers, with evangelical Christianity, and with the Bible as the Book of God.—Journal Réligieux.

LESSONTO.—The political situation here is very unfavourable to missionary work. The difficulties arise from the absence of any universally recognised authority. The war has left the magistrates without much influence; as to the chiefs, their power, beneficent when exercised under the firm and vigilant control of Moshesh, or of Mr. Griffith, has become impotent to maintain order, and vexatious to those over whom it is exercised. Excess in drinking by the majority of the chiefs completes their inability to govern wisely. It is very desirable that this state of things should cease, especially as the unsettled condition in Lessonto is said to be exciting dissatisfaction in the Free State. It is hoped that Colonel Warren may receive a commission to interfere in Lessonto on his return from Bechuanaland.—Journal des Missions.

BRITISH COLUMBIA has a population of about 3500, a considerable number of whom are Indians and Chinese. Most of the Indians are Roman Catholics, the Chinese retain their own religious ideas, the whites are divided up into Roman Catholic, Church of England, High Church, and Reformed Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist, the last named being the smallest. The state of religion along the North Pacific Coast is exceedingly low; multitudes never enter a place of worship, infidelity, scepticism, and utter carelessness abound. There are, however, a faithful few. In Washington Territory a good work was accomplished last winter, in several of the small towns, by Rev. A. P. Graves, D.D., an evangelist from the Eastern States. He is now labouring in Victoria, Vancouver Island, the capital of this province. ROBERT LENNIE.

SLAVERY.—Many of our readers are interested in the rescue of fugitive slaves. It is well known that a body of plundering Moors will attack a village, destroy all the old and young who may be too feeble to endure the hardships of a long journey, and then take the rest and sell them into slavery. Sometimes a quarrel will arise between one chief and another; they fight, and the conqueror takes all his opponent's people and sells them. At St. Louis, Messrs. Taylor, Jaques, Morin, and Mabille, French missionaries, supported mainly by friends at Bordeaux, have a home for those who manage to escape from slavery. Many have been taught useful trades, and some have been led to receive Gospel truth; seeing that the climate of Senegal is so inimical to Europeans, it is hoped that many of these may become useful missionaries to their own people. The slaves are told that Europeans are a race of sorcerers eager for the flesh of negroes, and that to fall into their hands is far worse than their present condition. The Mahometans tell them heaven is the sure reward of obedience to their masters, and hell the certain punishment of escape. To help such poor, unhappy, deluded-creatures is surely a good work.—Journal Réligieux.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SEPTEMBER 17.—I JOHN II.

v. 1.—"If any man sin."—The tense here denotes "past, isolated, single action; not present, continuous, or future action."—Sp. Com.

v. 2.—"He is the propitiation for our sins."—"He is Himself the propitiatory offering, as well as the priest." "The propitiation itself is spoken of as something eternally valid (He is), and not as past (He was)."—Prof. Westcott. "But also for the whole world."—"The supposition that "for the whole world" is an elliptical expression for "for the sins of the whole world," is not justified by usage, and weakens the force of the passage."—Prof. Westcott.

v. 5.—"In him verily hath the love of God been perfected."—"The fundamental idea of 'the love of God' in St. John is the love which God has made known, and which answers to his nature."—Prof. Westcott.

v. 8.—"Which thing is true in him and in you."—Namely, its being both an old and new commandment. "Old" as seen through the gloom of "the darkness" of the old dispensation. "New" as seen in the full light of the Gospel "true light" which "already shineth."

v. 12.—"Your sins are forgiven you."—Perfect tense, "have been forgiven you."

vv. 12-14.—He first uses the present, "I write" (or "am writing"), but on repeating his grounds for writing, to give emphasis to the exhortation "love not the world," &c. (to which this is an introduction), he uses the past, "I wrote," pointing particularly to what he had already written in the previous part of the Epistle.

v. 18.—"Antichrist."—"One who assuming the guise of Christ opposes Christ."—Prof. Westcott. As "Christ" means the anointed prophet, priest, and king, Antichrist involves the assumption of these three offices also: teaching, sacrificing, ruling, must be found together.

"Even now have there arisen many Antichrists."—More literally, "many have become Antichrists." As "Christ" includes members as well as head (1 Cor. xii. 12), so does Antichrist include all who are his.

v. 19.—"They went out from us," or rather, "went forth from us."—The expression "may describe either removal or origin."—Professor Westcott. He prefers the latter, and adds: "This trait in the Antichrists indicates one ground of their influence. They professed to speak with the voice of the Christian body."

v. 22.—"He is Antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son."—Better rendered in R.V., "This is the Antichrist, even he that denieth the Father and the Son." "The term (Antichrist) expresses the embodiment of a principle, and is not to be confined to one person.—Professor Westcott. Augustine says, "Whosoever by deeds denies Christ is Antichrist."

SEPTEMBER 18.—I JOHN III.

v. 1.—"That we should be called the sons of God."—Strictly it should be, "In order that we should be," and points back to the last verse, which ought to have been the first verse of the new chapter. There "born of Him" means born of "the Son." In reference to the gift of the Son enabling us, as "born of Him," to be called the sons of God, the Apostle now exclaims, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, in order that we should be called the sons of God." Professor Westcott says, "There is nothing against the tenour of Scripture in saying that Christians are born of Christ." Rom. v. 14, &c., treats Adam and his posterity as a type of Christ and his. See also Heb. ii. 13: "Behold I and the children which God hath given me," a quotation from Isaiah viii. 18, which refers primarily to Isaiah and his sons. Having shown Jesus Christ the righteous as our advocate with the Father for justification, the Apostle now shows Him, as the "righteous" One, (ver. 29) to be the source or head from which we derive the new nature for sanctification.

v. 3.—"Purifieth himself, even as He is pure."—See below on ver. 7.

v. 7.—"He that doeth righteousness is righteous."—"The doing righteousness reveals the character, and does not create it. The man who is 'righteous' is recognised by his actions."—Prof. Westcott. "Even as He is righteous."—Augustine points out that "even as does not always, or necessarily, imply parity or equality."

v. 9.—"His seed abideth in Him; and he cannot sin, because he is begotten of God" (R.V.).—The first "his" refers to God, and if emphasised (as it should be) gives the key to the whole passage, God's seed cannot sin either in itself or in its reproduction in His children. Much as the old nature may impede, a family likeness will be produced, which will "manifest" the distinction between His children and "the children of the devil" (ver. 10).

v. 16.—"Hereby know we love, because He laid down his life for us" (R.V.).—The omission of "of God" after love is justified by MS. authority, but it should have been "the love," and "he" should have been emphasised, as it is a demonstrative pronoun: "This one laid down his life for us."

v. 20.—"Knoweth all things."—An allusion to John xxi. 17, "Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee," uttered by Peter when his heart condemned him.

SEPTEMBER 19.—I JOHN IV.

This chapter, along with the closing words of the last, and the first eight verses of chapter v., is devoted principally to the subject of the Holy Spirit, his work and its counterfeit. This taken in connection with the fact that all the allusions to the "Father" in this Epistle are (with one exception) contained in the first two chapters alone, with the first verse of the third; and also the fact that the subject of the third chapter is Christ the source of righteousness to His people; all go far to indicate an intended arrangement of the subjects of the Epistle corresponding to the allusions they contain to the three Persons of the Trinity.

v. 2.—"Confesseth that," &c.—Or, as a reading almost better attested has it, "confesseth Jesus Christ come in the flesh." This reading is adopted by Tregelles, and preferred by Professor Westcott. According to this, the Person of Jesus, as Christ come in the flesh, is the subject of the confession, rather than the fact that He has so come.

v. 9.—"Towards us."—Literally, as in R.V., "in us." "Not simply 'towards us,' as the objects to whom the love was directed, but 'in us,' in us believers as the medium in which it was revealed, and in which it was effective (that we may live through Him)."—Prof. Westcott.

v. 16.—"God is love."—This bears the same relation to the section of the Epistle in which it occurs (see above) as did the two previous statements—"God is light," i. 5 (referring to the Father), and "He is righteous," iii. 29 (referring to the Son). It is "through the Spirit" that "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts" (Rom. v. 5).

v. 17.—Because as He is, so are we in this world."—It is not "as He was" which is our standard for walk (ii. 6), but "as He is" which is the measure of our acceptance (Eph. i. 6).

v. 18.—"Fear hath torment," or "punishment," R.V.—It means fear is connected with punishment, suggested by reference to the day of judgment.

SEPTEMBER 20.—I JOHN V.

v. 1.—"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ."—i.e., The anointed Prophet, Priest, and King, receiving his teaching, trusting in his propitiation and intercession, and both obeying Him now and expecting his coming kingdom; such a one gives evidence that he has been begotten of God.

v. 6.—"This is He that came by water and blood."—There seems little doubt that this refers to the baptism and to the death of the Lord Jesus. His baptism was a pledge of his subsequently dying, "I have a baptism to be baptized with," and his death redeemed that pledge, "not by water only, but by water and blood." On both occasions the Spirit was given: at his baptism to Him personally, when He became "the Christ;" after his death to Him mystically, when on the day of Pentecost his disciples were baptized with the Holy Ghost. So that "the Spirit," "the water," and "the blood" all attest his being the Christ or Anointed One of God.

v. 7.—"There are three that bear record in heaven," &c.—This verse is now generally omitted in all critical editions, as supported by no reliable authority. It was probably the marginal note of some fanciful scribe which found its way into the text.

v. 10.—"Hath the witness in himself."—"The witness of God (which was previously spoken of) is no longer merely external to him, but by virtue of his faith he has it in himself; the external has become internal to him."—Huther.

v. 16.—"Not concerning this do I say that he should make request" (R.V.).—The verb here is one used of our Lord's own prayers, and implies more the demand or claim of one who has a right to be heard. Whatever the sin unto death may mean, it prevents the prayer of him who prays for such an offender being offered with any claim to be heard.

v. 18.—"He that was begotten of God keepeth him."—The reference here seems to be to the Son of God Himself. So Professor Westcott, who says of the soul so kept: "He does not depend on his own strength or vigilance; he has an active enemy, but he has also a watchful guardian."

SEPTEMBER 21.—2 JOHN.

v. 1.—"The elder unto the elect lady and her children."—"The general tenour of the letter favours the opinion that it was sent to a community, and not to one believer."—Prof. Westcott. "The contents of the Epistle . . . . are no less opposed to the opinion that the Epistle was written to one particular woman, than they are in favour of the opinion that it was directed to a Christian Church."—Huther. Some go further, and think with much probability that the Third Epistle was written to a member of the same church, and that in it he refers to this Epistle in the words (3 John 9), "I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes," &c., which looks as if Diotrephes was the official head or Presbyter-Bishop, and his hostility to the Apostle would account for his writing to the faithful members of the Church in a mystical and enigmatical manner.

v. 4.—"I found of thy children (certain of thy children, R.V.) walking in truth."—This evidently shows that many of the members of the Church had left the truth, it may be under the influence of Diotrephes, for the teaching of Antichrist.

v. 9.—"Whosoever transgresseth"—("Whosoever goeth onward," R.V.; or "taketh the lead," margin, R.V.).—This latter is the most probable meaning. It seems to refer to the position of a teacher, one going on before the flock.

v. 10.—"If anyone cometh unto you, and bringeth not this teaching" (R.V.).—This seems to confirm the view that the reference is to a professed teacher, and not to an ordinary Christian.

SEPTEMBER 22.—3 JOHN.

If Gaius be, as some suppose, a member of the Church addressed under the mystical name of "the elect lady" in the Second Epistle, it adds the greater interest to this Epistle.

v. 4.—"Greater joy have I none than this, to hear of my children walking in the truth" (R.V.).—A closer translation than A.V.; "the truth" is better supported than "truth."

v. 7.—"Because that for the sake of the name" (R.V.).—"The name is used absolutely (Acts v. 41: comp. James ii. 7). From the context it is evident that the name is 'Jesus Christ,' or, as it is written at length, 'Jesus Christ, the Son of God.' This name is, in essence, the sum of the Christian creed."—Prof. Westcott.

v. 10.—"Casteth them out of the Church."—This plainly shows that Diotrephes held a position of ecclesiastical authority.

SEPTEMBER 23.—JUDE.

v. 1.—"To them that are called, beloved in God the Father, and kept for Jesus Christ" (R.V.).—MS. authority decidedly favours the change from "sanctified" to "beloved," but it is probable that "in" here means "by," as A.V. had it. However the preposition is rendered, it would be better to carry it on and understand it after "kept," so that it would be "kept in (or by) Jesus Christ."

v. 3.—"The faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (R.V.).—A strong refutation of the Romish notion of development.

v. 5.—"Though ye once knew this"—("though ye know all things once for all," R.V.)—The latter is the best attested reading. It seems to take up the idea expressed in the third verse, and apply it thus: "You have received the faith once for all, so I cannot advance anything new, but I may remind you of what you already know."

v. 9.—"Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses."—This, if taken literally, refers to something not mentioned in Scripture, but probably familiar to Jewish tradition. It has, however, been ingeniously suggested that "the body of Moses" may be a mystical designation of "Israel," as the Church is the "body of Christ" (compare "were all baptised unto Moses," 1 Cor x. 2.); and, if so, the scene in Zech. iii. 1—3 would be referred to, where the very words, "the Lord rebuke thee," are found.

vv. 22, 23.—The exact reading of the text and order of the words are in much confusion, but R.V. gives what is now generally accepted as the reading most supported by evidence: "And on some have mercy who are in doubt; and some save, snatching them out of the fire; and on some have mercy with fear; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh."

Letters to the Editor.

LADY HELPS NEED NOT EMIGRATE.

DEAR SIR,—As a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN, and in reference to a letter from Sophia Strongi'th'arm (Sept. 3), permit me to ask if it has occurred to those good women who so strongly advocate female emigration that there is also here, in England, "a great demand for domestic help." I will not say for "servants." There are hundreds, I think I may say thousands, of ladies—middle-class women—who would gladly welcome to their households women equal in position to themselves, but who, from force of circumstances, find it necessary to work for their daily bread. I cannot help thinking that many of those ladies who, agreeing with Sophia Strongi'th'arm that "household work is no degradation," are willing to go abroad as domestic servants would prefer finding honourable and comfortable employment in their native land.

All of us who have practical household experience know well that the work which is made so much of by our "servants" may, in most instances, by forethought, method, and wish to do (for "where there's a will there's a way), be accomplished in less than a third of the time, and that the ordinary domestic duties are a pleasurable occupation to those who bring willing minds and hands to their performance. On these points I speak feelingly and from considerable experience.

There are many poor ladies who would think themselves almost rich with the wages of an ordinary servant for an income, and surely we who require assistance would give as much or even more to those who would help us better. I for one would gladly welcome on these terms such Christian women to assist me in the care of my children and household, and could promise them in addition a comfortable home and no degradation, and surely I am not an exception.

I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, J. H. D.

[We certainly think it is better to let the younger women emigrate, if those of maturer years can find employment at home. But, although the "lady-help" idea has been before us for some few years, we have not heard that it has made much way.—ED.]

LOW-TONED LITERATURE.

SIR,—It is time that the attention of Christian people was called to the serious responsibility which they incur by their patronage of low-toned journals. I have long wondered how so many professedly Christian people can reconcile it with their duty to support such papers, and specially such as are notorious for their "incessant sneering at every developement of vital religion." Surely, if Christians would reflect, that every penny they subscribe towards the support of such journals, adds to their share of responsibility for the evil influence which these exercise, they would not so thoughtlessly take part in doing the work of the enemy.

Some may think that the amount paid is so small that it can scarcely be taken into account, forgetting that such papers stand or fall according as they are supported or not by the pennies of an approving or disapproving public, and that it can be no little thing, in God's eyes, for a Christian to take even the smallest fraction of a part in promoting or encouraging what leads to evil. Others may argue that they must take in such papers in the interests of their business, or because they contain the most news. But surely neither the claims of business, nor the Athenian craving for news, nor any other thing, can for a moment justify a Christian encouraging the continuance of papers which ridicule and scoff at sacred things, or putting the interests of his business before those of his soul.

Few things have shown more clearly the lamentable amount of worldly conformity and perversion of conscience which exists among professedly Christian people, than the fact that many of those who have denounced the recent well-timed exposure made on behalf of our innocent maidens, are content to go on year after year supporting a press which is opposed to everything like vital religion, and at variance with all that is truly spiritual. Truly we have need, in these days of easy-going, self-indulgent Christianity, to remember that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God."

Yours, &c., J. FORBES MONCRIEFF.

ABOUT FLORIDA.

DEAR SIR,—Your kindness in putting my letters about Florida, its mission work, agricultural prospects, &c., in THE CHRISTIAN, has led to so much correspondence that I have, partly on this account, returned home for a short time, to see and communicate with those who are desirous of emigrating thither, whether for mission work or agriculture. I feel that a most useful work is to be done in finding a sphere where many can confidently leave our overcrowded country with a prospect of really doing well, and I shall be glad to hear from anybody desiring information on this subject.

When leaving these shores last spring it was with the fullest intention of remaining away uninterruptedly for a year, to carry on the Lord's work amongst the coloured people, in which I have been greatly encouraged during the past four months. I should feel deeply indebted to you if you could kindly insert this explanation of my return to this country, otherwise it might be misunderstood.

I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,
JOSEPH HANNINGTON.

Notices of Books, &c.

FOUGHT AND WON. By RUTH ELLIOTT. 2s. 6d. Woolmer. A capital tale of grammar-school life. The characters are well sustained, and the style is vivacious and telling.

MAY'S CAPTAIN. By HELEN BRISTON. 1s. 6d. Woolmer. A well-written story, which will be much enjoyed; full of brightness and healthy sentiment, and shows how great is the influence of even a little child.

THE SURE HARVEST; or, The Annals of Ennersleigh. By Mrs. C. W. COOTE. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A very pleasing country tale, showing how consistent Christian example is used of God to win many careless hearts to Him.

RAMBLES AND SCRAMBLES IN THE TYROL. 2s. 6d. Woolmer. A very interesting book, as its title would suggest. At this season, when so many tourists have returned from visiting the spots here described, they will be glad to have this graphic and well-illustrated memento of their travels.

THE NEW GODIVA. 3s. 6d. Fisher Unwin. A remarkable book with a remarkable title, dedicated to Mrs. Josephine Butler. It deals in a masterly, unflinching manner with the social questions of the day, at the same time sparing the sensibilities of the most sensitive reader. It is a timely work of no mean ability and of great value.

UNDER THE SHADOW OF HIS WINGS. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A selection of passages of Scripture and hymns as "comforting words for the weary." They are wisely and appropriately chosen, and, being printed in a clear, bold type, will doubtless prove a welcome bedside companion to many upon whom the Lord has laid his afflicting hand. May it accomplish his object in drawing souls nearer to Himself, and in yielding the "peaceable fruit of righteousness."

THE RECORD OF RUTH. 2s. Elliot Stock. A very curious book, purporting to record the life of a Jewish maiden in the time of our Lord, who was betrothed to Judas Iscariot, but became a firm follower of the Man of Sorrows. The author ignores the fact that Judas was a disciple, but narrates some imaginary incidents in the life of Christ, which, while showing the beauty of his character as a man, hardly presents the soul's idea of Him as the Lord from heaven.

A SCHOOLMASTER'S RETROSPECT. By M. C. HIME, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d. Simpkin & Co. How to deal with "Our Boys" has long been a vexed question. Much depends upon their school training as to how they will "turn out." The thoroughly practical remarks here set forth, and the sound common sense they contain, claims for this excellent little volume an important place in the mind of every parent and schoolmaster in the land, ay, and of every schoolboy too, for he would here see that his "master" is not his enemy, but a true friend to those who would make him so. Of course, there are schoolmasters and schoolmasters, but not many who for sixteen years have had one or more sons of the same parent in succession in their school. Such a fact demands attention to this fresh production of his able pen.

HYMNS OF THE PRESENT CENTURY. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This forms the eighth of the "Companion for a Quiet Hour" series, and will be read with great interest by many. Some of the hymns are of a peculiarly beautiful character. They are translated from the German into English verse by Rev. J. Kelly.

We have also received the following books:—

Holness:
The Story of a Little Crab. 1s.

Fleet Printing Works:
Heart and Brain. 6d.

Hodder & Stoughton:

Parlane, Paisley:
The Churches in Asia. By Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville 1s. 6d.

Cassell & Co.:
The World's Workers. 1s. 6d.

The following are a few of Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s new and forthcoming works for 1885-6:—

The Royal River: the Thames from Source to Sea, illustrated by engravings from original designs by various artists.

The Story of the Heavens. By Professor R. S. Ball, Royal Astronomer of Ireland, one of the features of which is the attempt to explain in general language, and without any mathematics, some of the more abstruse, but profoundly interesting astronomical phenomena.

The Encyclopædic Dictionary, Vol. VIII. (Inter-Mel).

The following new volumes of the Fine Art Library:—Tapestry, Engraving.

Picturesque Canada. A delineation by pen and pencil of the Dominion of Canada, complete in two vols.

An édition de luxe of The Cathedral Churches of England and Wales.

The Deserted Village Series, consisting of favourite poems.

Popular editions of The Great Painters of Christendom.

The fourth series of Familiar Garden Flowers.

The second series of Familiar Wild Birds.

New and revised edition of Old and New London, in six volumes.

Cassell's Illustrated Universal History, four vols.

History of England during the Past Twelve Years, being Vol. X. of Cassell's Illustrated History of England.

The Peoples of the World, Vol. V., by Dr. Robert Brown.

Library of English Literature. By Prof. Henry Morley. Vol. III.

A KIND OFFER.—I have the superintendence of a Working Women's Home in connection with a jam factory. You will understand the class I have to deal with, and as it is a new and rising neighbourhood, without any Gospel or Temperance work whatever in it—on the contrary, much drunkenness and vice—I am willing to lend my schoolroom at the address given below, which is capable of seating thirty people, and providing fire, light, and accommodation free, for preachers, during the winter Sunday evenings. Travelling expenses we could not guarrantee. Trusting that Christian friends will come forward and help in this work, Faithfully yours, (Mrs.) E. ALLBERRY.

1, Station-road, Swanley Junction, Kent.

P.S.—I would be thankful for any old good books or periodicals for use among the young women in the Home. Would any friends send me parcels of same? The house is within two minutes' walk of the railway-station.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:
27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the PEACE AND THE NEW ELECTORS.

THE Peace Society has issued the following appeal to the new electors :—

"If we take the history of the last thirty years, we find that during that period the nations calling themselves Christians have slaughtered in war more than two millions of men, that it has cost them to do this work of butchery, at least three thousand millions of money, and that the preparations they are now making, during a time of peace, for future wars, cost them every year, in all ways, five hundred millions sterling, and that when there are millions of the people who are always living on the very verge of starvation! Is it not time that an end should be put to this system? There is no way in which this can be done, except by the people themselves, in all countries, taking the matter in hand. The Governments seem to think that to shed human blood on the largest scale, and to wring money from the hands of the suffering populations, to rival each other in armies and navies, is the noblest and most honourable thing they can do.

"Why is it that professedly Christian nations so often rush into this terrible work? Because there are certain classes, in all nations, who profit by war, and do their best to bring it about. Those who make the weapons of war, and who contract for the materials and means for carrying on war, naturally favour it, for they grow rich by it. Newspapers, whose circulation increases enormously while war is going on, are also tempted to promote it. Above all, officers of the army and navy, especially those in high command, know very well that if they fight, rewards and honours will be showered upon them in thick abundance.

"But what do the great bulk of the people get from these miserable enterprises? It is their children who, as common soldiers, have to endure the hardships and horrors of war, and to perish in agony by the hundred in the battlefield, or in hospitals, far away from their native land. It is they who have to suffer from the increased taxation which war invariably entails, from the disturbance of trade, the stoppage or lowering of wages, and the higher price of provisions, which generally accompany war.

"Why should the public, then, allow themselves to be fooled by loud talk about 'Imperial greatness,' 'national honour,' 'military glory,' and other vague and grand phrases, by which the men who delight in war try to dazzle their reason and impose upon their common sense. Even within the last ten years we have made wars which were absolutely unprovoked, in Afghanistan, Zululand, the Transvaal, and Egypt. These wars, we may confidently say, have cost, or will cost, at least fifty millions sterling, and an amount of bloodshed and suffering which defies all calculation. What good has come of these wars to any human being, except to the speculators and contractors who have had a share in spending the money, and the naval and military officers who have gained titles and pensions for fighting?

"We advise you, therefore, countrymen, when candidates come before you, to ask for your votes, to put such questions as these to them :—

"Will you support, in Parliament, a policy of peace and a reduction of the naval and military expenditure now weighing so heavily upon the people?

"Will you resist and denounce the custom, now so frequent, of allowing our diplomatists at home, or our officials, civil or military, abroad, to involve the nation in quarrels and wars, without its knowledge and consent?

"When differences arise between us and other countries, will you advocate the settlement of such differences by arbitration, instead of by the brutal appeal to the sword?

"Will you support any proposal that may be made to bring about a mutual and simultaneous reduction of those enormous armaments, by which the people of nearly every country in Europe are ground to the earth, by taxation and military service?"

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of MRS. BROUGHTON, NORTH THORESBY, LOUTH.

In July of last year I received particulars of this case from the patient's husband, a grocer at North Thoresby. It arose through seeing an article relative to my treatment in the Christian Age. The patient had been affected six months with violent cough, shortness of breathing, and excessive weakness and pains in the side. Loss of flesh had been going on all over the body.

Her case would have been pronounced decidedly hopeless by her medical attendant but for the fact that hereditary tendency to disease was wanting.

I advised this patient fully by letter, and received a letter recently in which Mr. B. says: "I am very pleased to say that after six months' taking your medicine Mrs. Broughton has quite recovered, and is now stronger and better than she has been for years."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

J. THEOBALD & CO.'S SPECIALITIES.

IT is some months since we last advertised the celebrated but every day since have we had inquiries from persons, asking if they could still have them. We have, therefore, again imported an immense quantity, and offer them once more at the former low prices.

THE NORWEGIAN HOUSE SLIPPERS are made of felt throughout, and trimmed with imitation fur, machine sewn, strong, comfortable, good looking, and equal to many slippers charged 3s. and 3s. 6d. for. The immense feeling of relief that is experienced on putting on a pair of easy slippers after a hard day's work, whether to the prince or the peasant, accounts for the immense numbers we sell. Ladies and gentlemen buy them because they are good looking enough for drawing-room and boudoir; and poor people buy them because, in addition to this, they are so wonderfully cheap. Although we offer a reduction if several pairs are taken, yet if you doubt their genuineness, do not send for more than one pair first. They can be had in either scarlet or black, carriage free, at the following prices—Boys', Girls', and Ladies', 1s. 6d.; Gentlemen's, 1s. 9d. If three pairs are taken at a time, 2d. per pair less. Six pairs, 4d. per pair less. Exact length of foot must be sent with all orders, and to procure at these prices, orders must be sent within 28 days.

MANNA CAKE.

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. Hayward, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

WORKS BY REV. E. P. HAMMOND, M.A.

(COPYRIGHT.)

"We notice that Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, London, are publishing Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND'S Books for Children. They are of proved excellence; and most of them have gone through several editions in this country. At last advices Mr. HAMMOND was continuing his Meetings with good results."—New York Evangelist.

JESUS, THE LAMB OF GOD:

SHOWING HOW HE DIED ON CROSS FOR CHILDREN; AND HOW LITTLE ONES HAVE LEARNED TO LOVE AND TRUST HIM. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may all. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the ery youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to nteresting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetngs. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to hrist, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

TELLING HOW JESUS GATHERS THE LAMBS TO HIS FOLD. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal ddresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most ffective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. he book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted nder his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

ANECDOTES AND APPEALS: WITH VERY NUMEROUS INSTANCES OF THE EARLY REGENERATION OF THE YOUNG. Sixth Thousand.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Limp cloth, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Many testimonials have been received, speaking of the blessing this book has een to its readers in this and other countries where it has been, or is now being, anslated.

"It has been circulated among missionaries in various lands. Many have been ught by it to lead children to the Saviour. Repeatedly we have had occasion to raise God for his seal of acceptance to this book.

"Many a precious work of grace among the children, often extending also to the dults, has been directly traceable to the influence of the truths and facts gathered these pages."—Preface to English Edition.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"This work consists of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, which are for the most part original. . . . This is really a new Hymn and Tune Book, and one which is sure to become very popular. It is a Gem. The Hymns are suitable for Special Meetings, Family Worship, and Children's Services."—Oldham Chronicle.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath-schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

BARBICAN EAST CENTRAL MISSION TO THE JEWS.—At this time of the year, when so many friends of Missions are from home, we feel our responsibilities in connection with our work among our brethren pressing upon us rather heavily. It is a fact well known that Jewish believers and inquirers are sadly persecuted by their unbelieving friends, and are, as a rule, thrown out of employment. To help such distressed ones, and in some instances to teach them a trade, is our constant anxiety and care. Will some of the Lord's Stewards, for the sake of Him whose kinsmen after the flesh the scattered people are, help us in our present emergency, when our funds are entirely exhausted? Free-will offerings will be gratefully received, either by the Treasurer, EDWARD JARVIS, Esq., The Priory, 10, Kingsland-green, N.; or by the Missionary Superintendent, PAUL WARSCHAWSKI, 16, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington, N.

The Christian.

THE CHRISTIAN ATHLETE.

"And if a man contend in the games, he is not crowned, except he have contended lawfully."—2 Tim. ii. 5.

THE Apostle Paul frequently alludes to the public games in his epistles, drawing many practical lessons for the Christian life. In 1 Cor. ix., he refers to three classes of athletics—Boxing, Wrestling, Running—and in all these the contests must be according to the rules, otherwise there will be no reward.

(1) Boxing.—"So fight I, not as one that beateth the air." "Fight the good fight of faith." There is no "beating the air" in the good fight of faith. What is needed is first to recognise the adversary to be attacked, and then to aim straight blows. A boxer throwing his arms wildly about will never hit his adversary, but be severely hit himself. Unbelief, bad temper, discontent, selfishness, covetousness are among the many spiritual adversaries opposed to us. To meet unbelief, use such words as "Lord increase our faith," "He is faithful that promised." For bad temper, "When He was reviled, He reviled not again," "I am meek and lowly in heart." For covetousness, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," "Covet earnestly the best gifts." For discontent, "He satisfieth the longing soul." For selfishness, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content," "Even Christ pleased not Himself." This will be "striving lawfully," for faith in God's promises, and determined obedience to his precepts, will "overcome."

(2) Wrestling.—Here, again, we must be careful not to engage in a struggle with the wrong person. "Jacob wrestled all night with a man from heaven." The messenger came, apparently, to bring him the answer to his prayer, but he failed to recognise him, and engaged in the all-night struggle till his strength was gone. "We wrestle," not with God, "but with principalities and powers," &c. (Eph. vi. 12), and we strive lawfully when we stand firm, our loins girt about with truth, our feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. The effort of the enemy is to throw us down; the promise to faith is, "Yea, he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand" (Rom. xiv. 4).

(3) Running.—Certain qualifications were necessary to entitle a man to the privilege of competing in the games.

First.—He must be of pure Hellenic descent, and must produce evidence of his parentage.

Second.—He must have no political or moral offences charged against him.

Third.—He must practise so long in the gymnasium, under the eye of the appointed teachers.

Fourth.—He must only partake of the prescribed diet.

The race is not for life, but for a prize To be entitled to compete we must produce the evidence of the new birth, and have the witness of the Spirit, that we belong to the Father. We must have a conscience void of offence; we must exercise ourselves in godliness (see 1 Tim. iv. 7, 8; Acts xxiv. 16), and we must be careful as to how we feed our souls. The strength of many is injured by the intemperate use of newspapers, magazines, lending libraries, and by the neglect of the Word of God. "Make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof" (Rom. xiii. 14).

The Course is the course of Faith (2 Tim. iv. 7). Some are spoken of as having "erred from the faith" (1 Tim. vi. 20, 21).

The Start was made by the herald summoning all the competitors, and examining as to their qualifications. Says the Apostle (1 Cor. ix. 27), "Having preached to others," by which he means, having acted as the herald in starting others. The cross is the starting-point where all must assemble, and be stripped of the sin that doth so easily beset them, and lay aside every weight.

The Race.—The race is not to the swift (Ecc. ix. 11), but to the patient (Heb. xii. 1). How contrary to human nature is this race, and how impossible for the impatient to win it! The Apostle, in speaking of it (Phil. iii. 13, 14), counsels that there be no "looking behind." Many are looking around to see what others are doing, criticising this one's style, and that one's way of running, finding fault here and there, and too often getting off the course altogether. There is no way of going straight but by keeping the eye steadfastly fixed on Jesus; let us therefore not concern ourselves with the speed of others, but be content to please the Master, and observe the rules of the course. We are taught, indeed, one way in which we may be concerned with others. and that is, to help a fallen brother (Gal. vi. 1). We are running not against one another, but away from sins and old habits. If we lack faith and patience we shall be "overtaken by a fault," and be tripped up. It is according to human nature to rejoice in the fall of another, but it is according to the Divine nature to stop and lift up that which is fallen. As the race is not to the swift, this will involve no loss of time. Many may outdistance us in spiritual knowledge, and rise to marvellous heights of attainment, but let us run the race set before us. The Israelites became impatient on their journey to Canaan, and then they looked behind them and remembered the leeks and the cucumbers, and the fleshpots of Egypt; consequently they lost the prize of entering the land, and their carcases fell in the wilderness.

A Castaway (1 Cor. ix. 27) is one who is disqualified for the race. The Apostle here speaks of himself as one who has acted as herald and trainer, and says he does not neglect to keep himself in training, so that he, too, may be able to take his place in the race. His heart is set on the prize.

The Spectators.—"We are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses" (Heb. xii. 1). We are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men (1 Cor. iv. 9). We have friendly and unfriendly spectators. Ranged round the seat of the Judge are the hosts of runners who have passed along this way before us. With what interest they watch the efforts of those who are following after them, and who have to encounter the same obstacles as they themselves did. But the world also watches, laughing at every fall, rejoicing at every entanglement, and glad when the runners fall foul of each other; keenly observant of any weights that have not been laid aside, such as a grumbling spirit, a self-absorbed mind, a selfish manner, a greedy spirit. Angels, too, are among the spectators, watching with intense solicitude, and ministering as God has given them charge over us, "to keep us in all our ways." And does not the Lord Himself watch everyone with the deepest interest possible? It is more blessed for Him to give than to receive, and He is longing for the joy of giving as many prizes as possible. "So run that ye may obtain."

The Prize of the high calling of God (Phil. iii. 14). A crown of righteousness (2 Tim. iv. 8), an incorruptible crown (1 Cor. ix. 24). All will not have the prize, because all will not have run for it. If the heart is occupied with the prizes of wealth, position, popular applause, success in life, there can be no time or room for the prize of the high calling. If we mind "earthly things," we cannot have the mind that was in Christ Jesus. The idea of "the prize of the high calling" seems to be that the Judge, or President, of the race occupies an exalted seat, commanding a view of the whole of the course, so that He can observe every competitor, and see that all are "striving lawfully." He will disqualify any who have taken an unfair advantage, or have left the course, or obstructed another runner, or in any way violated the rules. Then at the close He will announce who are the winners, and call up each one before the whole assembly of spectators to receive the prize. How heaven will ring with shouts of approbation when suffering Abel, faithful Abraham, patient Job, brave Daniel, affectionate John, mighty Paul, and many more of modern times, are called up to receive the reward of their "patient continuance in well-doing." The steps up in response to the call will far outweigh the rough places stepped over, and the weary parts of the course. Let us ask ourselves, "Have we started in this race? Have we helped any to persevere? Have we lifted any fallen ones?"

The Joy of the Victor.—"My brethren, . . . my joy and crown," Phil. iv. 1 (1 Thess. ii. 19; Acts xx. 24; Heb. xii. 2). The hope of sharing the joy with Christ kept Paul patient and faithful. And what will the resurrection joy be? To see the downtrodden and suffering ones of earth all set free for eternity from everything that hinders a perfect following after Christ.

The Judge.—Jesus, the Author and Finisher of Faith. From the cross He starts us, on the throne He receives us. He has been over all the way Himself. He knows the power of temptation, therefore He is able to succour them that are tempted. Remembering who the Judge is, let us press forward, for we shall soon see his face, and win his "Well done." G. Soltau.

THE N.E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.—The annual meeting of our Bow-common branch was held on the 14th inst. There was a thoroughness about the proceedings that made them most enjoyable. The singing was heartiness itself, while the opening prayer brought our hearts in sweet accord to the mercy-seat. The general superintendent, Mr. Wm. Chorley, gave a short address after the reading of the gratifying report by Mr. Metcalfe. Then our friend Mr. Luck was followed by Mr. J. McCall, and subsequently Mr. G. E. Morgan gave a very suggestive address, and a number of other friends added brief testimonies. The report showed that the work has extended and proved a great blessing to the surrounding neighbourhood. The Band of Hope shows a steady increase, and the tract society, under the secretaryship of Miss Agatter, is doing a good work, having distributed from house to house, and in the open air, 34,000 tracts, and about 1200 various publications. Our sisters have taken them into the public-houses, and have even been asked for them over the bar. The children's meetings are well attended; several have been led to the Saviour, and there is a great improvement in their general condition and behaviour. Our Bible-woman and district visitor, Miss Jermy, gives good news of her work among the people, which is both temporal and spiritual in character.

W. Chorley.

IS IGNORANCE SAFETY?

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to Me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children."—Hosea iv. 6.

A VITAL question has been raised by the events of the past few weeks—viz., What is the duty of Christians with regard to testimony against sin? Are we to take note of the special characteristics of the days we live in, or are we to reiterate the foundation truths of the Gospel without any reference to the peculiar features of our own time? Some Christians go back to the sermons of Peter, and insist that, as he and John charged the Jews with the murder of the Son of God, that ought to be the sin of which we seek to convict men now. But the men whom Peter and John thus charged were actually guilty of this very sin. In order to convict any individual of sin, we must press upon his conscience the very sin of which he is guilty. When Paul preached before Felix, of the faith in Christ, he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, and Felix trembled. It is very doubtful if he would have trembled had Paul charged him with killing the Prince of Life, though this was the preaching that made the men of Jerusalem, who had really done it, cry, "Ye intend to bring this man's blood upon us." It is only by a process of reasoning that a man of the present day can be made to understand his complicity in the crucifying of the Lord Jesus, but he feels keenly a much less sin which he has himself committed.

Nothing has astonished us and pained us more than the way in which some Christians who claim to be teachers are acting in the present crisis. One writes:—

"It is the characteristic of the present day for good folk to lose their heads and run to extremes. There is nothing new in all this sin. It is as old as the Fall. The evil is the same in kind, though greater in degree and effrontery. The only safeguard for girls is ignorance; for boys, early marriage."

Would this good man have written in this heartless way if he had lost a daughter, as the papers tell us every day that other parents are losing theirs? Did Jesus Christ and his Apostles "run to extremes" when they rebuked and denounced the sin of their day? There was nothing new in it; it was as old as Sodom and Gomorrah; yea, "as old as the Fall. The same in kind, though greater in degree and in effrontery." Did they, therefore, teach that "the only safeguard for girls was ignorance, and for boys, early marriage"?

Why did not the Holy Ghost start a separate sheet, as we are advised to do, that "people might read the impure page, and keep it from the eyes of the virtuous whose ignorance is bliss," instead of putting the records and rebukes of sin into the Bible, making them an integral part of the Scriptures of truth?

What is the use, in a world like this, of "the virtuous, whose bliss and safety are in their ignorance," unless it be that "their willing souls may stay in such a frame as this, and sit and sing themselves away to everlasting bliss," where, however, they will miss the "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things," for blissfully ignorant people are not those who have well done, nor would they be of much use in ruling others.

Ignorance is neither safety nor bliss. A matron has just been rudely waked out of her ignorance and writes:—

"Sir,—Your remark at the close of 'An Anxious Mother's' letter, in your issue of September 10, leads me to ask how it is possible for these 'naturally and divinely constituted guardians and teachers of their children' to do 'the first and most effectual thing,' when it is the fact that certainly among the mothers (and I may add the grandmothers) of even the upper classes, the most lamentable ignorance prevails as to the perils which surround not only children of both sexes, but even infants in their cradles.

"I have of late discovered (and all who interest themselves in infant life will be able to corroborate me) that the seeds of vice are sown in the nursery by the ignorance, and even malice, of those in charge; that no infant is too young to escape from this danger, and that depraved instincts which seem unaccountable in after life may have been aroused ere even the child could walk.

"These are matters of which at least ninety-nine in every hundred mothers are positively ignorant; and on which doctors are silent.

"I would suggest that during the coming winter classes for the instruction of mothers and nurses in the simplest physiological facts should be started, where the whole truth will be stated without reserve concerning this most vital subject, for the salvation of the coming generation.

"Will not those who have gained experience in Homes and Hospitals for children of the poorer classes pass on some of their knowledge to those who live in smaller circles?—I am, Sir,

"Another Anxious Mother.

"Cadenabbia, Italy."

We can give no better reply to this "Anxious Mother" than the following counsel from one who has had a thousand times more experience, and, therefore, has a better right to be heard, than those who counsel ignorance, and who write about the Gospel as if the Gospel had any meaning except in a world where sin abounds.

"THE BIBLE, THE WHOLE BIBLE, AND NOTHING BUT THE BIBLE.

"Dear Sir,—We cannot ignore the disturbance of the social elements that is raging. The storm which has broken upon Christians ought not to have taken them so much by surprise. They are fully warned by the Lord of what is to be expected to happen in these last days. But Satan has succeeded in blinding their eyes to that which is going on around them. He induces them, under the pretence of propriety and modesty, to refuse to know the true state of affairs in the world; and this ignorance prevents them from doing much of the service of God to which they are called.

"There never need have been an Act of Parliament for the protection of minors if parents had been doing their duty. If Christian women had known what they ought to have known about the nature of sin—as detailed in the Bible alone, not as revealed in newspapers, nor described by novelists, but just as the law of God depicts it—they would have been an army of prevention, which would have been better than any cure that can now ever be done by human devices.

"I appeal to Christian mothers to read every word of the Bible to their children, and make them understand the moral bearing of its laws, how they effect the separation from physical as well as spiritual corruption of the people who keep them.

"Our Bible gives us all the instruction we need for the purification of our sons and daughters. It will do for us what it does for the children of Abraham. Their freedom from many of the physical evils, under which we groan, is due to their observance of a code of rules, that is our heritage, under other nomenclature. The field of service into which the Apostles admitted women is that of family duty (Titus iii. 4). If it was occupied as it might be, the labour of rescue work would be spared.

"It is evident that the first preventive effort—the dealing with children—is exclusively women's work; and it is equally plain that the rescue of their own sex is theirs exclusively also. That which devolves on Christian men is the recovery of their fellows, who transgress the laws of morals.

"It is hard to say it, and it is terribly painful to write it, but it is truth that wants to be laid to heart by every mother. Each son and each daughter that is not warned, and taught the nature of sin, as declared in the Holy Scriptures, and who offends in such things, their blood will be required at the hand of the mothers who neglected them.

"It is very remarkable that efforts to deal with these cases are almost confined to women who are neither wives nor mothers themselves, but whose sympathy with womanhood carries them out of themselves, and makes them assume to be the representatives of their sex. All honour to those noble souls who try to efface the stain of our disgrace! It is not too late for mothers to shoulder their burden. The way to do this is to gather together and confer, and pray for wisdom and love. We need much of both. He who giveth liberally and upbraideth not will abundantly grant what is asked.

"At the Conference of the Christian Women's Union, to be held in October, the subject of this true Bible teaching will, we trust, be fully discussed.

"All that is required is that we should use the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, to cleanse our children from the pollution that is in the world through lust.—Yours in Christ's service,

"Susanna Meredith."

Do the writers of such sentiments as those we quoted at the beginning believe that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, thoroughly furnished unto every good work"? Do they believe, with the wise man, that "every word of God is pure"? or, with the Psalmist, that "the words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times"? No, they do not. They would divide the Bible into Holy Scripture for the virtuous, whose ignorance is bliss, and unholy Scripture, which they would put by in a drawer. "O foolish, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken!" The people of Israel were commanded: "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." Under the new covenant it is written: "We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard."

Some preachers say they could preach from texts thirty years ago which cannot be preached from now. If Luther were alive, he would say, with more emphasis than when he uttered the words, "And so the poor Gospel goeth to wrack."

BURMAH.—Mrs. M. B. Tugalls, a member of the American Baptist Mission, has laboured for more than thirty years in British Burmah, most of the time alone, as her husband died more than twenty years ago. Besides her work among the Burmans and Karens, from among whom she has won many souls for Christ, her heart grieved over the English-speaking people, the employés on the railway and others, for whose souls no one cared, and her efforts for them have resulted in the founding of a library, and the gathering of them and their families there, for occasional social evenings and Bible-classes. It is proposed to send a box of books, texts, cards, &c., to Mrs. Tugalls this autumn, and if any friends will help to fill it, Mrs. Lundie, 6, Beech-street, Liverpool, will gladly communicate with them.

WANDSWORTH-ROAD. — On Wednesday, the 16th inst., a happy company gathered round Mr. D. M. Cameron to take possession of a piece of ground for the erection of an iron hall to replace the tent in which, for some months, his services have taken place. A tea-meeting was held, after which the congregation adjourned to the new site for a short dedicatory service. After this there was a crowded meeting in the tent, at which R. Paton, Esq., presided. After an earnest address, expressing gratitude to God for his goodness in making their way clear, he called upon Rev. J. Henderson, who, in generous and forcible language, welcomed this new agency into the locality in which his own chape is placed. So far from entertaining any feelings o jealousy, he believed that the more centres of ligh there were the brighter would be their rays Addresses were then given by Messrs. W. R Bradlaugh, J. E. Jack, Oscar Owers, Dr. Cronin and other friends. The intervals of song by the South London choir were much enjoyed. Messrs Bradlaugh, Creer, and Brunning will (D.V.) conduct services in the tent every week-night at eigh (except Saturdays) till Oct. 11; Sundays, 11 a.m and 6.30 p.m.

MR. MOODY AND HIS "BOYS" AT THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.

[FROM OUR OWN REPORTER.]

A PRIVILEGE is often enhanced when it comes unexpected. Such a privilege has fallen to my lot, and enables me to pen a short chapter on a phase of American social life that did not come into my original programme. The readers of these American notes will ere now have discovered that this Boys' School fills a large corner in Mr. Moody's capacious heart. I believe he thinks—indeed he does not scruple to say—that there are no such boys anywhere else in the wide world as those he has gathered into his Mount Hermon Seminary, from many parts of his own as well as from other lands. There is a popular tradition in Northfield (for which, of course, I do not strictly vouch) that every morning, soon after the rising of the sun, the Farmer-Professor-Evangelist may be seen, reins in hand, driving one of his conveyances "down town," through the long High-street Avenue, across the Connecticut ferry, and up the hill to the rapidly growing group of red brick buildings which has been so prettily designated Mount Hermon.

Mr. Moody is such a splendid sleeper that I question if he devotes much of the night season to dreaming, but when he does enter the shadowy region, I reckon his brain is busy devising some expansion of Mount Hermon, or formulating some scheme for the profit and pleasure of his wonderful boys. Just when or where or how he hatched the happy thought of taking some of them to the White Mountains for a week's outing I cannot tell, but I have the best possible right to tell how his generous design was carried out, for I had the happiness to make one of the party. With all the resources at his disposal, he could scarcely entertain some scores of hungry youths at an expensive mountain resort 160 miles distant, so he had to select. The choice fell on those who had been twelve months at the school, and whose record during that time had been exceptionally good. These tests reduced the number to thirteen, among whom were one Austrian, one Choctaw Indian, two Irish, and two English youths. The company was increased to twenty-eight by the addition of Mr. Moody himself, his eldest son, Willie, and his daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall and two sons, Mr. and Mrs. Studd, Mr. and Mrs. Towner, Mr. C. F. Davis, of Wandsworth, a son and a nephew of Mr. Sankey, and the writer.

We left Northfield on the afternoon of Friday, August 21, a week after the closing of the Convention. A ride of five hours brought us to Fabyan House, in the heart of the White Mountains. The course lay almost entirely along the winding watershed of the Connecticut River, and embraced, I believe, some of the fairest scenes in New England. At every turn of the track the fertile valley revealed some fresh and variegated combination of Nature's loveliest charms. At Bellow's Falls, a remarkably picturesque spot, the river was almost hidden from view by the logs that had floated down stream from the lumber regions above, and collected in the bends. I had heard at Northfield that some eight million feet of logs were then in process of being floated down towards New London for the various sawmills, where they are cut up and distributed. The men who guide the logs down the river are said to be marvellously expert in their calling; they wear shoes with pronged soles, and can steer themselves in any direction on a single revolving log, much as a squirrel preserves its equilibrium in its circling cage.

Shortly before reaching our destination, we passed Twin Mountain House, one of the famed resorts in the White Mountain range, and the place where Rev. Henry Ward Beecher long preached on Sundays during his vacation to the immense crowds that came from all the surrounding parts. Some of our party were hoping that he would officiate on the following Sunday, and were quite prepared to trudge the five intervening miles and back again, in order to hear the famous though scientific Brooklyn orator. At Fabyan's, however, we were informed that he has ceased to visit the White Mountains. He was wont to resort thither in order to escape hay fever, and it is surmised that he has discovered some easier and more accessible specific. When he preached at Twin Mountain House, excursion trains were run from all available points, and the Sunday traffic which this occasioned, with the inevitable incursion of a heterogeneous crowd was a source of much excusable vexation and annoyance to the peaceably disposed Sabbath-keepers of the country side.

Fabyan House, objective point of our trip, is beautifully situated in the heart of the White Mountains, and in full view of Mount Washington, the loftiest of them all—that is to say, when this crowning peak of the American Switzerland deigns to cast off its mantle of mist and cloud, and reveal its bold, towering outlines to the gaze of the charmed beholder. These mountains cover a considerable extent of country in the northern part of the State of New Hampshire, and are much frequented during the summer and early autumn months by Bostonians and the dwellers in other seaboard cities of the East. The scenery is very fine, the air is bracing, and the company is as abundant as the fare is good. As the season is short, the charges of course are high, averaging some four and a half dollars a day. In our case Mr. Moody had made a special arrangement with the proprietors.

Fabyan's is a large frame house, constructed in the shape of the letter T, and a walk through its spacious corridors makes quite a small Sabbath-day's journey. The dining-tables, which can accommodate 360 persons, are served by sixty young women, most of whom, I was interested to hear, are students at some of the popular seminaries in New England, or teachers in public schools. Being vacation time, they engage themselves as "helps" at these holiday houses, so as to swell their income, or help in defraying the expenses of their education. In some cases I was assured these young ladies were earning money, in this honourable way, to pay off mortgage debts on their fathers' farms. Male students adopt the same sensible method of combining change of scene with profit for the purse.

There are many of these gigantic hotels scattered up and down the White Mountain range. Fabyan's is specially patronised by the rich Jews from the large cities. With their families, they formed quite a distinctive feature in our migratory population. Since these scions of the Hebrew race were boycotted at Saratoga by Judge Hilton, some years ago, they have largely become patrons of the White Mountains, much to the profit of its exchequer, for in many cases they have an abundance of the world's wealth. One old man at Fabyan's, who did not seem particularly happy, was authoritatively reputed to be the possessor of eight millions of dollars, and it was asserted in my hearing that the number of millionaires then in residence could not be totaled on the ten fingers. From what transpired in the course of our stay, as I shall presently show, these Jewish friends do not, as a rule, appear to covet any more enduring possessions than dollars, and houses, and lands, so there is no reason why anybody should envy them.

Everybody who visits these New Hampshire mountains is expected, as a matter of course, to go up Mount Washington, whose tip-top stands 6293 feet above sea-level, and which is the highest American height east of "the Rockies." On the evening of our arrival a council of war was held to deliberate on the plan of the brief campaign. Some of the more adventurous spirits were keen for scaling the mountain afoot, and returning the same day. Any attempt, however, to cover the distance (nine miles each way, three of them being from the base to the summit) in one span of daylight was strongly discouraged by an experienced resident, who said it might be done, but probably it would be at the cost of three months' convalescence. The usual way of getting up is by the railroad, on which the specially constructed cars and engines crawl up the steep ascent in the way familar enough to Alpine tourists who go up the Rigi to see the sun rise or set. The Mount Washington Railroad, which, by the way, was constructed in 1869 by a friend of Mr. Moody's, was the first of its kind, I am informed, and the Rigi cog-wheel track was copied from it. The difficulty as to reaching the top was solved by Mr. Marshall generously undertaking to bear the large expense of transit by car, which is so high as to be almost prohibitory for slender purses.

Next morning (Saturday) the trip was made, and greatly enjoyed. One counts himself exceptionally fortunate if he secures a perfectly clear day, which is essential to the enjoyment of the magnificent prospect from the summit. No such fortune fell to our lot; when half-way up the mountain side we entered a cloud of cold damp mist, from which we only emerged when we had accomplished a fourth part of the downward journey, after a stay of three hours on the top. Then indeed we were splendidly rewarded. The vast and far-reaching expanse of mountain and valley, of forest and river, that burst on our astonished view was something to be seen and remembered with an ever-recurring thrill of wonder and delight, but something that cannot be described. The sensation experienced, both in going up and coming down, for the first time in these mountain cars, is awesome beyond degree. We seem to be forging our way up a sheer precipice as a fly crawls up the wall of a room, setting at defiance all the laws of gavitation. As we slowly but surely breasted the slope, the panorama grew wider and wider, and more grand, until, far up the height, with the lofty hills beneath our feet, and the spreading plains becoming dimmer to our view, we seemed to be soaring away into the regions of the infinite.

The ascent appears to be perilous, and one involuntarily conjectures as to what would happen if something were to give way. It must yet be perfectly safe, as hundreds of thousands of visitors have been transported up and down without greater damage than a slight shock, perhaps to the nerves of the unaccustomed or the timid. An unfortunate accident befell one of our party while on the top that threw a damper on our spirits, in addition to that caused by the dense and driving fog. Professor Towner missed his footing on one of the greasy, slippery stones, and received a very severe sprain in the ankle, which, it is feared, may cause him a somewhat prolonged and painful lameness.

One of the few objects of interest that could be seen under the circumstances was the Government signal station, where daily weather observations are made and recorded. In the winter time, when the snow is deep and the frost intense, this duty is a trying and not at all pleasant one. A story was told to us of an occasion, some twelve years ago, when only two men occupied the station. One of them died somewhat suddenly. The survivor telegraphed to the base for relief and the removal of his dead companion, but several days elapsed before help could be rendered. Meanwhile, the living man had to stick to his guns and was afraid to allow himself to fall asleep, in case he should be so benumbed by the terrible cold as never to wake again. When help, at length, came to hand, he was almost crazy with the prolonged strain on his system and the want of sleep. In the winter season, when the mountain is deserted by the tourist and the hotel-keeper, three men are now placed in charge of the dreary post.

Curiously enough, while writing this sketch I have come across a short poem in an American magazine on "The Wind upon the Summit of Mount Washington." I can, to some extent, appreciate these expressive lines:—

> "No man comes here with bearded sickle keen,
> Amid these shining acres of gray stone,
> To reap the harvest which the wind has sown
> So many ages; in this air, I ween,
> Nor cornfields ever wave, no maidens glean;
> But mightier harvests from this height are blown
> Of storm and shower; here with deep organ tone
> The tempest sounds,—this is the wind's demesne.
> Like some unfettered spirit through the hills
> He wanders, shepherding his rocky fold."

During our visit, the wind-guage was registering a velocity of sixty miles an hour. The attendant told us that the greatest wind-speed ever registered on this mountain was about 180 miles an hour, though a much larger figure has been reached at some of the Scottish observatories.

I was specially interested in visiting the office of the paper that is daily published from the summit under the singularly appropriate title of Among the Clouds. Surrounded by the familiar paraphernalia of a composing and printing establishment, I speedily felt at home, even at such an abnormal height. At Mr. Moody's suggestion I ventured to fill some sides of "copy" with a brief notice of the visit paid by the evangelist and his party. It was quickly set up, and we carried with us on our return journey copies of the paper containing a thirty-line paragraph, headed "D. L. Moody among the Clouds."

I fear this rambling sketch is already far too long; but, before closing it, I must devote a few sentences to the services conducted by Mr. Moody in the parlour of the Fabyan House on Sunday—the following day. As soon as the visit was arranged for, and with the evangelist's permission, the proprietors of the hotel, with true American enterprise, telegraphed a despatch to the Boston and other papers, announcing that he would preach on Sunday morning. When the hour of service arrived, the spacious room (which, on the evening of our arrival, was doing duty for a "hop" among the younger visitors) was well filled with an audience whose faces betokened a singular mixture of interest and curiosity. Mr. Towner had happily regained strength enough to be present, and to sing several pieces either alone or with the assistance of his wife. One piece, of his own composition, entitled, "Redeemed," he sang with unusual vigour and impressiveness, and it seemed to produce a marked effect. Mr. Moody's discourse on "Sowing and Reaping" was delivered with such freshness and power that it came home to me as if I had never heard it before. How deeply it took hold on the audience, to whom its startling presentation of eternal truth must have almost had the force of a new revelation, could be judged by their chastened demeanour and the whispered remarks as they passed out into the entrance lobby. The impression created by Mr. Moody's evening sermon on "Seeking first the Kingdom of Heaven" was much more marked even than in the morning. There was nothing in the first discourse that could have excited doctrinal divergence between Jew and Gentile. The evening sermon cut sharply into the question of personal conversion and faith in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of mankind. Mr. Towner sang "Almost persuaded" at the close of the sermon with wonderful feeling, and it is scarcely too much to say that the Jewish portion of our little community at least was pretty thoroughly turned upside down. Many of the Jewesses present were visibly moved; probably they had never before heard the Christian Gospel presented in its true light. The effect upon some of the men was very different. When there seemed a probability that their women folk would be drawn into personal converse, a leading Jew decisively drew them away, remarking that that was no place for women and children. They were inclined to argue as to the differences between the Jewish and Christian beliefs, and a good deal of talk ensued with Mr. Moody, Mr. Studd, and others. The conversation showed a wonderful ignorance even of their accepted Scriptures, and it would be hazardous to say how much was really effected. At any rate their minds were stirred on the subject of accepting or rejecting Christ, and the results must be left with God. The real secret of the indifference, not to speak of positive opposition, shown by many Jews to religious matters was indicated by the remark of one. Something was said to him about the Jews returning to their own land, and the idea was altogether tabooed. Said he, "I am in the provision trade, and it would not suit me at all to go back to Jerusalem."

Monday was spent in various excursions to points of special scenic beauty and grandeur. On the Tuesday Mr. Moody, with some others of the party, returned to Northfield, and, a few hours after, I also took a reluctant farewell, proceeding to Niagara, en route for Canada and the West. The boys were to remain some days longer, before setting their faces in the direction of their beloved Mount Hermon, and the duties of another year. When they return I warrant they will have some wonderful stories to tell of their week's sojourn among the White Mountains. A waggish young Englishman, who is one of the "boys," was appointed "scribe extraordinary" for the expedition, and he was specially charged to record all the healthful jokes that came within his ken. Americans are good at nothing if not at playing upon words and perpetrating witticisms. I am glad I am not called on to be the judge of how far they are, as a rule, worth preserving in a written or printed form.

PERTH CONFERENCE.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

THE ladies' meetings were again most happy gatherings, friends and fellow-workers warmly welcoming each other, and inquiring what good news of the Lord's work there was in the various parts of the great harvest-field from which each had come? Great regret was expressed for the absence of Mrs. Brown Douglas, and deepest sympathy felt for her in her present great sorrow. The kindly welcome so often received in former years from Miss Angelica Fraser was also missed at this time. Of all the old and valued friends who originated the ladies' meetings, only Mrs. Gordon, of Parkhill, was with us this year, and a very great joy it was to see her again among us, and hear a message from the Master by her lips once more, after years of absence!

The evangelistic meeting of women on Monday evening in the City Hall was as large as on former occasions, and was addressed by Miss Campbell, from Mildmay, a well-known friend of railway-men in London. Her subject was, "The one Word, or rather Name, 'Jesus,'" from which she gave, in a very earnest, simple address, a loving appeal to the unsaved, to come to this great Saviour as great sinners, and accept this great salvation.

On Tuesday afternoon was the first tea-meeting, presided over by Mrs. Meredith, President of the Nine Elms' Prison Mission, London, who opened the subject of Christian Work, after the example of the Good Samaritan, urging Christian women to "go and do likewise" among the most degraded, wallowing in the mire of sin, raising them with their own hands, and setting them in the clean place.

Mrs. Meredith then introduced Mrs. Gilmour, who pleaded the cause of the Indian Normal Training and Medical Mission Association, the oldest of such Associations in the field of India, of thirty-three years' standing, and quite undenominational, helping all the various missions, training native girls, and returning them to work on their own stations. Mrs. Gilmour urged many more ladies to go out to Zenana work. Might not a thousand go forth at their own expense to teach the millions of dark, secluded wives and mothers of India, who are pining for the light of life?

Miss Mason told the story of the House of Rest, Kilburn, London, which the Lord had given her the privilege of establishing twenty years ago, a tangible proof which she had asked of Him of his faithful care over all those who truly work for Him. A Seaside Home at Eastbourne has since been added for the restoration of health which has been spent in his service, for "He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust."

Miss Jordan read a letter from Miss Whately, giving interesting information of work in Egypt, and showed some beautiful sketches of the schools, and scholars in their bright Oriental costumes. Prayer and thanksgiving were also asked and presented for Miss Whately and her companions, who were in imminent danger in the late railway accident near Venice, and, though mercifully preserved in life, were much shaken in body and shattered in nerves.

Miss Campbell gave a very interesting account of meetings with the railway-men in London, and much good accomplished by going in and out among them as their friend, for Christ's sake.

On Wednesday morning there was a breakfast for the Secretaries of the Y.W.C.A. and all those interested in young women. Mrs. Malcolm, of Burnfort, the Acting President of the Association, presided, and read a portion of Scripture from James v., and made a few helpful remarks on the need of patience in this special work; fruit will be gathered, after patient waiting it may be. While the Students' Mission is gathering fruit among young men, let us ask God for a similar ingathering among young women.

Mrs. Gordon, of Parkhill, President of the Scottish Y.W.C.A., was warmly welcomed, and gave a most useful address on the duty of receiving one another, as Christ has received us to the glory of God. Our duty also as to being examples of purity was inculcated—purity in our homes, in our dress, in our reading, &c. Mrs. Gordon concluded by commending to our sympathy and help the servant girls who go from the country to find situations in Edinburgh, and for whom the want of a Home is much felt.

Miss Murray, Gartshore, the Hon. Secretary of the Y.W.C.A., read the report. Eighteen new branches had been added, and the other agencies at work were doing very well, specially the work among the herring-fishing girls carried on every summer since 1880, and this season by Miss Stewart and a Gaelic Bible-woman.

Mrs. Cuppler gave much interesting information as to the free registry in Edinburgh, and also warmly pleaded for a Servants' Home, much needed there for the efficient working of the association.

Miss Stewart gave a graphic account of the work among the fishing girls at Fraserburgh and Peterhead this season. A special worker is wanted at Fraserburgh, and also a coffee-house, and a larger supply of Mrs. Grimké's floral texts, much prized by the girls.

The Hon. Miss Kinnaird spoke on the protection of young girls, and recommended the perusal of a pamphlet on the subject, by Rev. William Arthur. The Y.W.C.A. have a Bible-woman at Paddington Station, who meets the girls as they come up from the country to London to find situations, for we have heard there is an organisation of evil to meet them at every station. The Bible-woman's assistance is much prized by the girls.

Mrs. Oatts, the President of the Glasgow Y.W.C.A., invited all who could come to the all-day meeting of the Y.W.C.A., on Oct. 10, to send in their names early, and, as far as possible, hospitality would be offered them by friends in Glasgow.

On Wednesday afternoon there was another tea-meeting, when Lady Fowler presided and opened the subject of Christian work by a very helpful word to timid workers from Exod. iii. 10.

Mrs. Oatts read the requests for prayer, and Mrs. Malcolm presented them before the Lord.

Miss Balthasar, from the Belleville Mission, Paris, then gave a most interesting detail of Miss de Brœn's work, and specially of the blessing on the Medical Mission under Dr. Macrae, many sick and dying ones being brought to rest in Christ.

Miss Campbell, Secretary of the Policemen's Christian Association, Glasgow, told of the commencement of this Association a year ago by Miss Gurney. Of the 2000 policemen in Glasgow, 200 belong now to this Christian Association. Could not Christian ladies in the country do something for the spiritual welfare of policemen? Miss Mudie, Montrose, read a letter from Miss Leigh, Paris, requesting prayer for the very important work she carries on among the English girls there. Miss Mudie also gave a message from her sister and Miss Geldard, asking prayer for themselves and the Lord's work they are privileged to carry on, with some tokens of blessing, among the villages of the Drôme Valley, in the South of France.

Mrs. Tait, of St. Madoes, Perth, gave a short account of the work of the Scottish Girls' Friendly Society, very important in a city where the tenth of the population is composed of young women.

With singing and prayer our meetings closed again for a season.

BOYS AND GIRLS TOGETHER.

SIR,—In the correspondence you have opened upon this subject, permit me to add my testimony to the importance of mixed companies of boys and girls in a department of God's work, when the conditions are such as to test the propriety of the association of young people in an extreme manner.

During the five years of the existence of the Cottage Home for Orphan and Destitute Children in connection with this Institution, about 150 children have been benefited for a longer or shorter period. During that time an average of twenty-five have been inmates of the Home under training for the Colonies. All have eaten at the same board, prayed at the same altar, played together in the same grounds, and have mixed together in work or play alike, on the principle of one family. Of course the dormitories, &c., are securely apart. Our experience has been throughout of such a character as not only to afford us much satisfaction, but much gratitude, along with the most confirmatory assurance that to train street children for their future life duties, the sexes should live together, and be taught together the principles and practices of a morality and behaviour which will sooner or later be tested when they have entered the homes of the colonists, where they will be expected to fall into the ways of the family life without exciting fears or anxieties, which sometimes attach to such boys and girls who may have been kept up and apart from each other in their training.

In our Cottage Home, boys and girls have been about equal in number, and no one has been discovered guilty of an immoral action, and when foul words have been used—a comparatively rare occurrence—they have been reported and corrected, and no girl has ever suffered from the freedom surrounding her, and the unmixed pleasures which this family life has conferred.

On the other hand, the rudest recent boys have soon discovered that the better behaved have maintained a supervision over them, and their rudeness has in a short time turned into vigilance, and they, too, have become protectors of the family morals. And the girls, some of whom are brought from the most deplorable surroundings, feel and appreciate their security, and are soon taught to forget much of what they elsewhere learned. Another source of security towards the girls, as well as an advantage in their training, is found in sisters having frequently their brothers settled in the Home, when they freely enjoy the benefits of each other's company as well as silently exercise a protecting care over each other.—I am, &c., DAVID SMITH.

OBITUARY.

ALDERMAN GEORGE CHARLTON.

IN the death of Mr. Alderman George Charlton, of Bensham, Gateshead-on-Tyne, the cause of Temperance has lost one of its oldest and most successful advocates, and the towns of Newcastle and Gateshead one of their brightest ornaments. Mr. Charlton was a Primitive Methodist local preacher, and took part in the Methodist Œcumenical Conference. He was well known as a public man in the northern counties, and in former years often took part in public meetings in London.

GEORGE FLASHMAN.

The death of the venerable George Flashman, of Dover, removes to his eternal home one of the best and most useful Methodists that ever lived. More than half a century ago he came to Dover, a poor boy "with half a crown in his pocket," as he used to say, and by Christian industry and integrity he established one of the leading business houses in the famous seaport, and became one of the most universally venerated citizens. He was the constant friend of the poor and of all good enterprises, and for many years the patriarch of Dover Methodism. He has filled every office that a layman can occupy, and leaves to his children's children the priceless heritage of a saintly character and a most beneficent life.—Methodist Times.

CRESCENT BEACH Y.M.C.A. CONVENTION.

OUR brother, G. C. Needham, writes:—We are growing, on this side, into the idea of Believers' Conferences, based chiefly on Bible study. It is well if such conferences are not unnecessarily multiplied, and the idea overdone. This is the great country for camp meetings, but a change in these has taken place, and the original purpose of bringing salvation to the sinner is considerably altered. The open grove is abandoned for the artistic pavilion or tabernacle, and tents have grown to cottages. Speculation, too, is rife with "ground lots," while trustees and managers do not forget "gate-money." In some quarters the literary has crowded out the spiritual, and pastime takes the place of prayer. But camp meetings classify themselves, and old-fashioned religion, deep, fervid, sturdy, is brought prominently to the front in many of them. Methodism is not yet dead, and her sons have not forgotten to blow the Gospel trumpet. While at the Unitarian and Spiritualistic camp meetings another Jesus is preached, the great orthodox denominations exalt the Son of Mary as the Son of God. Thus wheat and tares grow together, and camp meetings, once associated with the Gospel of Christ, are in recent years adopted by unbelievers as a means of promoting their vicious creeds. So the old characteristic idea vanishes away.

Meantime Christian Conventions increase, and evangelical believers of many schools emphasise their union in Christ, and their fellowship one with another. Two have already been noticed in your pages: the Believers' Meeting for Bible Study, held at Niagara, and Mr. Moody's Northfield Convention. The plans, aim, spirit, and results of these gatherings prove unquestionably their utility and power.

The Crescent Beach Convention, just closed, is also worthy of notice. Last year, the earnest secretary of the Boston Y.M.C.A., with a number of young men, camped out on the splendid beach, six miles east of the city. While there, he improvised three days' meetings, chiefly for Christian workers. The success of this effort led to the establishment of an annual gathering, keeping to the original object, and the first anniversary has terminated with decided satisfaction. Most of the speakers had come directly from Northfield, where they had given addresses, while the Towners had charge of the singing. The subjects discussed related chiefly to inspiration, methods of Bible study, doctrine, experience, and prophecy. The Convention took a decided stand for pure, evangelical religion. This is appreciated by many who know the difficulty in New England of full identification with old orthodoxy, and the Boston Y.M.C.A. stands on high vantage ground beyond suspicion. Advocates of anti-orthodox doctrines were present, sympathisers with universal restorationism, annihilationism, &c., but they received no public recognition by those in charge, and took no part in the proceedings. The weather was good, the congregations large, and the spirit of the Convention most excellent. The workers are nearly all back in their respective fields once more, grappling with the realities of stern work and earnest labours.

Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass.

REV. H. H. DRIVER, who went to New Zealand with the Rev. T. Spurgeon, has been very kindly received, and has accepted the charge of the Vivian-street Baptist Church. He was welcomed by a warm recognition tea-meeting, at which ministers of all the various denominations in the district took part.—Freeman.

SEA-SHELL AND SCRAP-BOOK MISSION.—It is surprising what gratification sick children in hospitals and in the homes of the poor derive from a box of sea-shells or a scrap-book of small pictures, Christmas and other cards. Shells or seaweed, boxes for the shells, scrap albums, text cards, and all kinds of small pictures, coloured scraps, &c., are always very acceptable. Ladies (and children under proper supervision) will find the making of scrap-books a very pleasant occupation. A specimen of the "Post-card Album" will be sent to any lady willing to make some up, for three stamps. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, Sea-shell Mission, 26, Tunstall-road, Brixton-road, London, S.W.

NEWMAN HALL.

JAPAN.—One of the ablest and most prominent men in Japan—Mr. Itô Hirobumi—has just returned from a visit to Germany, and it is reported that he has addressed the Mikado, urging the truth and importance of Christianity. Such has been the influence of Mr. Itô's report, that the chief officers in the Cabinet are becoming interested in the study of Christianity, and the former Court teacher of Confucianism is no longer opposing the Gospel, but also carefully reading the Scriptures. In a course of study recently prescribed for all the Shinto priests, the "Bible" and "Martin's Evidences of Christianity" are included.—Southern Cross.

In Memoriam.

MISS MARTHA FARNHAM.

THE subject of this memoir, who fell asleep in Jesus, September 3, and whose remains were interred at Nunhead Cemetery, on Wednesday, the 9th inst., the service being conducted by Rev. Marsack Day, was known to many by her untiring devotion in the work to which God had called her—that of reclaiming her fallen sisters from a life of sin and shame. For about eight years she has laboured in this work; her love for these dear girls and efforts to win them for Christ has been unbounded.

The work carried on at "The Little Home," 15, Fearnley-road, Camberwell, the only Home in the neighbourhood for these friendless girls, has been abundantly owned and blessed of God. Our beloved sister loved her work, she lived for Christ, and, as she spoke to these poor fallen ones, it was with a heart burning with love to Him who said, "Neither do I condemn thee," and a zeal to win them for Him, and lay her treasure at His feet.

During twelve months of extreme suffering, having fallen a victim to consumption, up to the last her love for these precious souls was unabated.

A few days before she died she sent for two of these girls, and asked them each if it was well with her soul. One answered, "I hope so," to which she replied, "Oh, that will not do—what should I do now if I only hoped?"

To others she sent sweet messages. To a dear Christian lady, rather given to doubt: "Tell her never to have another fear, no need for fear. It is out of grace into glory, and out of glory into God."

To another, outwardly very religious: "Tell her it is glory, oh, it is glory! Oh, it is glory! it is all rest, but there must be heart reality."

To Rev. Marsack Day: "Tell him, oh, do tell him, how lovely Jesus is; oh, it is wonderful! If I could tell everybody what He is to me now. Do tell dear Mr. Day, and thank him for all his love and kindness to us, and do tell him how precious Jesus is."

Such words as these were constantly flowing from her lips: "O how precious Jesus is, how lovely He is; I never had such rest—so real."

A sweet smile, a reflection of his lovely face that she seemed to bask beneath, lit up her face a little while before she passed home. So peaceful was the close that those standing around her bed knew not she was gone.

Friends in sympathy with this work will be interested to know that it will be still carried on by Miss Ker, who assisted Miss Farnham and myself, and we shall be pleased to give any information concerning it by application to 93, The Grove, or 15, Fearnley-road, Camberwell.

(Miss) E. A. COBB.

The following reference to our beloved sister was made by Rev. Marsack Day, in his sermon on "Modern Babylon":—

> Allow me to narrate a circumstance, with which I close. There is now lying not more than two gunshots from this church a lovely Christian maiden lady in the May of her life, yet in the very last stage of consumption—passing away, sweet, pure, bright, and happy, yet with one dark cloud upon her heart. That one has worshipped and praised God constantly with us here, and has spent, I think I am right in saying, the last eight years of her life nightly on the streets of dark London, gathering in one by one these poor, wretched, ruined, captive, hell-bound souls, seeking to cleanse their body, mind, soul, and spirit; and she has now, through hardship and exposure to damp and cold, brought herself to the brink of a premature grave. Why? Because she has sympathy with God in the matter: because she has a woman's heart and pity for the outraged: because she has seen them going down from our streets and our houses into a dark, deep hell by shoals, and she felt, "if it is only one hand to help I will put it out." And there she lies at heaven's gate; but there is just one cloud upon her heart, dimming even somewhat of the brightness of heaven's near glory, which is that there are so many thousands of her sisters sinking — sinking — sinking deeper and still deeper in crimson crime, with so few hands to help, hearts to pity, or eyes to weep. I believe she is doing her last work for Christ on earth to-day—that is, she is using up the last lingering effort of present life in prayer to God that I may be faithful to you, that I may stir up your pure hearts, if indeed cleansed and purified by Jesus' precious blood they are, or if there should be any fornicator or profane person, such as Esau, here this morning, that I may entreat you, man, woman, or youth, to think of eternity, to remember your early, happy days of purity, the mother who so tenderly nursed you, the father whose pride you were; think of the precious blood of Christ shed to save you; think of the ruin you will bring on yourself and others; think of the eternal shame and disaster you are entering upon; think of that dying one and her last prayer for you, her last service on earth, her supplication to Almighty God that your soul may be saved, cleansed and sanctified this day. And oh, remember, I pray you, that it is solemnly written in God's Word, "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge" (Heb. xiii. 4). Likewise, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind; nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. vi. 9, 10).

A VOICE FROM THE GLORY.

We stood around her dying bed,
And Christ the Lord was there,
He marked the quiet tears we shed,
He marked each heartfelt prayer.
Deaf was her ear, closed was her eye
To outward sound and sight;
We knew He held her tenderly,
And she went "home" 'ere night.

Ah! 'twas not death; the spirit passed
From Nature's sad decay
With one glad bound to joys so vast,
Such glow of nightless day.
We almost heard the glorious voice
That welcomed her "at home,"
That bade her endlessly rejoice
With "Come, thou blessed, come!"

Home to the radiant glory-land,
Home on her Saviour's breast,
Home to the glad triumphant band
Who share the victors' rest.
Ah, loyal heart! ah, tender hands!
Feet that unwearied moved!
Till near the ebb of life's last sands,
'Twas "to the end" she loved.

Those hands through deep world-gloom of sin
Held forth the "living light,"
Poor wanderers to guide and win,
Lost in the dismal night.
Who now will bear it up on high,
The glowing torch of Truth,
To light these souls, that else must die
By thousands in their youth?

Oh! who will pity, who will save
By love as she has done?
She speaks, not from the silent grave,
From HEAVEN, where she has flown.
She calls on you to help the band
Who follow where she trod;
Oh! fellow-Christian, stretch your hand,
Bring poor lost souls to God!

We do not ask your gifts alone;
We ask your love, your heart.
Did Christ for your dark sins atone,
And bear such bitter smart,
Pain, shame, and death, and can you shrink
From these, or pass them by,
Lost spirits, shudd'ring on the brink
Of hell's eternity?

With you let Martha Farnham plead?
She shines in glory now,
And souls she succoured in their need
As gems shall grace her brow.
You cannot, will not, turn away,
Nor leave to sin's despair
Those lives she died for. Help to-day,
And make "the lost" your care.

LAURA L. MCL. BACKLER.

PEW RENTS.—Canon Trench, who was recently appointed to All Saints', has abolished pew rents. The Bishop of London, writing on the subject, says:—"I do not myself object to seat rents, provided the free seats occupy the best part of the church. Justice requires that people who like to secure their seats should be content with an inferior seat."

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE monthly meeting for Christian workers took place on the 16th inst. Though the gathering was smaller than usual, the presence of the Lord was manifest, and it was a soul-refreshing season to all. The subject of the address by Mr. Ransome Wallis was "Service." Moses was a servant and a worker. In Psa. xc. ("A prayer of Moses, the man of God"), the word Lord, in the opening verse, according to Mr. Thomas Newbery's valuable translation, signifies, "My Lord, my Master." How precious to the servant! Ver. 16: "Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants"—the redemption work for a lost world. Ver. 17: Let us ever bear in mind it is the Lord's work in our hands. Moses, as his history shows us, was a large-hearted evangelical man (Num. x. 29—32). He had trials and disappointments in his work, as we have in ours.

His seven difficulties were: (1) Murmuring of the people—Num. xi. 11—14; (2) Jealousy in the Lord's work—Num. xi. 27—29; (3) Domestic bickerings—Num. xii. 1, 2; (4) Self-sacrifice—Num. xiv. 11—20; (5) Trouble from false brethren—Num. xvi. 1—5; (6) Trouble from public opinion—Num. xx. 3—6; (7) Trouble from his own evil nature—Num. xx. 7—12.

Mr. Quarrier, from the Orphan Homes in Glasgow; Mr. Rudland, from China; and Mr. Isaac, from the "Stranger's Rest," Ratcliff-highway, spoke of the work with which they are each connected, testifying of the kindness and faithfulness of God. Mr. Isaac related two or three touching instances of the conversion of sailors coming to the Rest who had received the Word, and had returned to their families rejoicing; thus many a sorrowing mother's heart had been made glad.

EVANGELISING ITALY.

THE Spezia Mission for Italy and the Levant, begun in face of difficulties that seemed to the multitude insurmountable, has now attained its nineteenth year of labour, and gives full proof that the faith of its founder, Rev. E. Clarke, was not presumptuous. Year by year eminent men of various Christian denominations have become convinced that Mr. Clarke's aim to benefit, not merely by the large circulation of the Scriptures and preaching, but also by the establishment of Bible day-schools for both sexes, is a most worthy one, and one that well deserves the countenance of his fellow-countrymen. At a public meeting recently held at the Mansion House, a most interesting and important reference was made as to the value and excellence of the Bible day-schools established and superintended by Mr. Clarke in Italy. During the time of the cholera at Spezia last year, Mr. Clarke was constantly engaged in assisting the cholera patients, and had the happiness of seeing all he had entirely under his care restored to health. The Italians, by one of their great colleges, under the auspices of Humbert I., Margaret of Savora, Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, Leopold II., King of Belgium, have not been slow to acknowledge Mr. Clarke's attentions and devotion to the afflicted, having made him a very honourable testimonial to his philanthropic efforts. Without waiting for any in England or elsewhere to promise him aid, Mr. Clarke took some of the children, whose relatives died of the cholera, under his care, to provide for them and educate them. The mission, begun in weakness nineteen years ago, has now nineteen stations and more than twenty substations, six Bible day-schools, with some four hundred scholars, seven Sunday-schools, and the assistance of twenty-two native assistants, including pastors, evangelists, and teachers, assisted by five British missionaries. It has recently been determined by some influential men of London and the country to institute an Orphanage for the good of Italian children. The Treasurer is Mr. J. Sands, 50, Old Broad-st., City, London.—Christian World.

MISS COOKE'S WORK, SINGAPORE.—SIR,—I rejoice to see recent notices in your paper of the valuable work carried on by Miss Cooke at Singapore. Will you kindly let it be known that she is a valued missionary of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, whose school for Chinese girls in that island has been under her superintendence for more than thirty years.—Yours faithfully, R. A. WEBB, Secretary.

AN EVANGELICAL SOCIETY.

THE Belgian Christian Missionary Church dates its existence from about fifty years ago; it is also called the Evangelical Society, because this recalls its origin. It began its work by distributing tracts and copies of the Holy Scriptures; in proportion as these were spread abroad, those who received them manifested a desire for fuller information. Then preachers full of zeal and talent arrived from France and Switzerland, and conversions were numerous; little flocks were gathered in divers places, and thus, little by little, this organisation at once one and multiple, was formed, and took the above name: "Belgian," that all may be assured labour was not to be spent upon strangers, but upon fellow-countrymen; "Christian," as much as to say to Catholics, "We are not sceptics, as you suppose"; "Missionary," to remind its members that their duty is not only to listen to the Word of God, but also to proclaim it.

This Church is now at work in the four Walloon Provinces of Brabant, Hainault, Liège and Namur; also in Flanders. It reckons 25 churches and stations, 22 pastors and evangelists, 14 colporteurs and Bible readers, 53 Sunday-schools, nearly 4000 adult members, and 2397 children. It evangelises regularly in 81 localities, and more or less regularly in 60 others.

Its synodal session was recently held, which was attended by about fifty pastors, evangelists and delegates of churches, and was opened by reading God's Word and prayer. Then some extracts were read from the Confession of Faith of the first Belgian Church, which was so prosperous in the sixteenth century, but which was afterwards drowned in the blood of its martyrs. In awaking from their sleep the Protestant Belgian Churches feel it necessary again to lift their fallen banner, so it is always with deep feeling and in perfect silence that the reading of this document, majestic in its extreme simplicity, is listened to.

The Sabbath was discussed, and recommendations with a view to its better observance were made. The cause of public morality was defended and zealously pleaded for by M. J. Pagny. Pastor Durand put it to the vote, with the words: "A Church owes protection to all its children, to the least and weakest as much as to its strongest." Oct. 22 will bring round the two hundredth anniversary of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, a date fatal to France, which sacrificed with a light heart the best of its children, but full of blessing to the countries which received the victims of the intolerance and tyranny of a great king. The Belgian Church will associate itself with its French-speaking sister Churches in commemorating this event, "in a spirit of charity for the past, of lively gratitude for the present, and of confidence in God for the future."—Journal Rèligieux.

REV. J. INCHES HILLOCKS.

WE are glad to learn that the Queen has been pleased to confer a Civil List pension of £75 a year on the Rev. J. Inches Hillocks, author of "Hard Battles for Life and Usefulness." Twenty-five years ago Her Majesty was pleased to pay marked attention to Mr. Hillocks and his efforts. In 1860 she was so interested in his prize autobiography, entitled "Life Story," that she directed inquiries to be made respecting the author. These were "perfectly satisfactory," and Her Majesty, through her secretary, Sir C. B. Phipps, forwarded to Mr. Hillocks a cheque as a mark of her Majesty's appreciation.

Mr. Hillocks has worked long and self-denyingly on behalf of those who, like himself, have had to fight "Hard Battles for Life and Usefulness," the title of one of his books. He has a series of four lectures on "The Roots and Remedies of Human Misery," with special reference to the awful condition of the poorer classes—physically, mentally, and spiritually. He owes the success he has attained very much to his powers as a public speaker. His address is 127, Stoke Newington-road, N.

M. COILLARD IN AFRICA.

IN giving an account of his missionary journey across the Zambesi, M. Coillard describes the utter desolation caused by the recent wars in South Africa. "Certainly war, especially civil war, makes men fools, and from that they become ferocious beasts." The report of M. Coillard's arrival at Lealuyi brought together the new young king and several of the chiefs. At the close of certain ceremonies, Mataha said, "Welcome, servants of God—you who bring us rain, peace, and abundance of sleep. In the name of the nation we receive you. We have waited long years for you, and thought you had forsaken us; so it is with joy we see your faces. . . . You will soon discover that our hearts are yellow, that our country is one of blood. The nation is tired out; it sighs for peace; it is weary. Here it is; we place it before you; save it. You see our king is only a child; be his father; surround him with your counsels. We do not seek presents nor merchandise. What we ask from you is teaching. What we wish is peace." Others spoke to the same effect.

M. Coillard then spoke to the king of God, and said that he, the king, was a servant of God, and must govern righteously. The chiefs quietly said, "That is good, that is the counsel of a father." M. Coillard proceeded to speak of theft and the necessity of extirpating it, at which they all laughed. "Why do you laugh?" "Oh, you speak of punishing and extirpating theft, but here everybody steals." Still they were serious, as was proved a few days later by their refusal to undertake the responsibility of taking care of M. Coillard's baggage during a few days' absence.

On arriving at Leshoma last February, M. Coillard found that the whole place had become a hospital; fever had greatly weakened all the party, but not many had died.

To sum up his impressions, he says, the political state of the country inspires him with but little confidence. Mataha, the chief of the Revolution, is blinded by ambition. The king is young, born and bred in exile, a perfect stranger to the tribe he is called upon to govern. Though he does not lack intelligence, he has no experience of power, and seeks only pleasure. Already discontent manifests itself.

"The more one knows of the Zambesians, the blacker, morally, they become, but we are not discouraged. The Gospel, in earthen vessels, is the power of God.

If the Barotsis received us with eagerness, it is not that they have any just idea of the Gospel that we bring to them, but they sigh after they know not what. They are feeling after Him who alone can give peace and save—Jesus, the desire of all nations."—Journal des Missions.

AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.—We are glad to find that the Bishop of Exeter has consented to become a Vice-President of the "London Aged Christian Society." Offices: 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—The report for the past year, just issued, says:—"Through God's providence the health of all under our care has been a source of great thankfulness. The religious services have been well sustained, the prayer-meetings have led many thoughtless ones to seek the Lord, and the stimulating influence of the singing has been a source of power. The separate accounts of each of the eight homes all present interesting details, whilst letters from the girls show that many a girl has been saved from ruin through the advantages offered by these homes. As a place of refuge and safety for servants and shop girls out of situations, these homes are invaluable. A girl of eighteen, serving at a coffee-house, finding her employment of thirteen hours daily (Sunday included) beyond her strength, was compelled to leave her situation, and, having no friends, she was received into one of the homes, and in due course a situation was found for her. The spiritual tone maintained is a pleasing feature in the institutions, and doubtless to this is largely due the favour which they continue to find, both with God and man. The Secretary, Mr. John Shrimpton, has written a capital report of the year's progress, which he will be glad to send to any friends who apply to him, at 38, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

THE MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

MR. HUDSON TAYLOR writes from Shanghai, June 12:—We are greatly cheered in the work. For instance, Mr. George Clarke baptized the first-fruits in Ta-li Fu but a short time ago. Since then Mr. Eason has had the pleasure of baptizing five, the first in Yun-nan Fu. Mr. Andrew speaks of baptisms at Kwei-yang Fu. Mr. Meadows briefly mentions his return to Shao-hing from a visit to his out-stations, where he had examined nineteen candidates, and baptized eleven. He says: "Among them was a dear little girl, the daughter of Christian parents, eleven years of age, who seemed such a bright, intelligent child; and another was a boy of fourteen, the son of a Christian man."

The tidings from our travellers are satisfactory. Journeying mercies are being vouchsafed to them all. The great cry everywhere is for more workers. How shall we meet it?

Mr. G. W. Clarke left Yun-nan Fu on April 1, and arrived in Han-Kow on May 31, having reached Ch'ung-k'ing on April 30, and left again on May 21. He and his little boy were well, and had been prospered in their journey.

He has since reached Shanghai, and will remain a short time longer in China, to assist in locating some of the recently arrived brethren.

Mr. Stanley Smith writes from Pekin, May 4:—"I can hardly dare speak of the work God has done here. I want to be rather under than over the facts. But it is certainly the greatest work of God I have ever seen in my short experience. To Him be all the glory. Every night we have had evangelistic services, and every afternoon we have had meetings for the missionaries for the deepening of spiritual life. At these afternoon meetings I have had one theme right through—'Be filled with the Spirit,' the fact that the Holy Ghost, in the measure He was given at Pentecost, is the privilege of all believers.

"Oh, the searchings-out, the breakings-down, the confessions! . . . . Oh, magnify the Lord with us!

"We have been preaching Thessalonian conversion, 'turning to God from idols to serve;' and nothing short of a complete submission to God's will, and an entire consecration to God, has been allowed to be 'conversion.' We can only just praise Him. Oh, when He steps on the scene, how the hills melt before Him! I am more convinced than ever that a theory I held in England—that on one's knees will the battle be won in China—is true. . . . . We had the farewell meeting last night. It would have rejoiced your heart to have been there and to have heard some fifteen or more missionaries testifying to blessing received. . . . . One does more and more realise how entirely the power for spiritual work is God the Holy Ghost."

DERBY.—A friend writes:—"We have a large and influential Vigilance Committee in Derby, and a good executive, and expect to do a lot of real work this winter, endeavouring to put down brothels, &c."

ITALIANS IN LONDON—Rev. Dr. Passalenti, who has for many years laboured amongst the Italians in our great city, has now been reluctantly compelled to abandon the work. He received so little pecuniary support that for some time the pressure upon his own purse had been more than he could continue to bear. In a farewell circular he says: "It is with great sorrow that I must now part with the good work which it has been my great care to foster and cherish. I with deep grief and sorrow depart from the mission, and most earnestly pray that the work it has done in the past may bear good fruit, and that many of these poor Italians, who have looked to and been members of the mission, may never forget the teachings they have received, and that they within their own homes may, by the grace of God, be so spiritually endued that they may be able to bring up their children in the knowledge and love of our Lord Jesus Christ." A numerous band of friends bade him farewell at Charing-cross on Friday last, and much emotion and friendly sympathy was felt as the estimable Doctor took his leave for his native land.

Notes and Comments.

THE Rev. W. and Mrs. Haslam have left England for a few months, for the purpose of carrying on mission work in Canada. All letters, or other communications, will receive immediate attention if addressed Rev. W. Haslam, 66, Marina, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

We are encouraged by receiving the following appreciative note :—

> Dear Sir,—Will you permit me to thank you for the page you have so kindly given for some time in your paper, to "Notes on Daily Readings." They are a great help. I am sure it is some considerable trouble to select them, and therefore it may be a slight encouragement to know how much they are appreciated. Moving about a good deal, it has been my privilege to hear many testimonies to their value.
>
> Believe me, faithfully yours,
> Bournemouth. (Captain) W. H. Dawson.

These Notes are prepared by Rev. H. E. Brooke, an old and valued contributor.

The earlier ones were by our friend, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who has relinquished his charge at Norwood, and has undertaken the pastorate of the church at Bethesda, Sunderland, which was built by the late Rev. Arthur A. Rees, and of which he was for so many years the faithful and beloved minister.

There is a Royal Commission appointed to investigate concerning the depression of trade. While it makes inquiries from our Chambers of Commerce, it would be well to do the same from our Consuls in China. They have sent out reports that English cotton goods are so weighted with size and clay that the Chinese peasants are showing their liking for the calicoes which come from countries which have not yet forgotten that honesty is the best policy.

The Aberdeen meetings of the British Association appear to have been increasingly less marked by the materialistic scepticism which was the painful feature of them some years ago, and from which they have of late years been recovering. They have recognised that science cannot solve the deepest problems of man's origin or destiny; a fact which leaves room for Revelation. They have also shown that what was paraded as a certain conclusion a few years ago was no more than a speculation which has had to be corrected. The geological section furnished striking proofs of these corrections. Clearly the presence of Christian scientists is felt at the meetings, and the sign is very hopeful.

A leading literary paper asks, "Is there in the modern world, in spite of the Christian teaching of near 2000 years, anything to compare in depth, freshness, and reality of religious feeling, with the religious feeling of the Psalms ?" This transcendent phenomenon is happily being recognised by literary scholars. They will find no solution but this—that the Psalms, in the wisdom of God, were intended to be the directory and liturgy of after times, and to express every complex emotion and cry of a common humanity.

Promises of extravagant reforms are the order of the day in France in view of the general election, which is at hand. Free State education is not only held out, but that children shall be provided with food. It would be well if similar vote-bidding promises were not the mark of some politicians among ourselves. Many of the golden hills to which farm-labourers are being led will melt, and then will come the opportunity for which socialistic anarchists are waiting. Unless we take care this will be the next look-out.

On this subject of the newly enfranchised electors the question comes what, apart from politicians, is being done for them ? In towns there are free libraries, but in the country the parish is exceptional where there is an attractive educational institute. As to Sundays we fear preaching does not even aim to interest the peasantry. In the face of new political powers in the hands of labourers, this is a more ominous state of things than men are dreaming of. The tavern is the school of not a few of them.

Political truth-keeping and the ballot are bringing out a most questionable morality. One writer seems to think that the example of Rahab is quoted in the New Testament as sanctioning falsehood. Surely it is the faith and good work of the woman that are quoted, and not her speech. The Spectator, commenting on the subject, represents truth as merely a negative ideal, and that "properly speaking the love of truth is absurd." But if truth-speaking is a recognition of the law of the Lord, that is a positive ideal, and can be loved. The Apostle Peter, in his rebuke of Ananias, went to the heart of the matter when he said—"Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God."

An interesting chapter might be written upon the influence of fashions upon labour. A ribbon more or less upon the costume of a lady implies occupation or idleness for half the population of a town. It is not likely, however, that the feminine leaders of fashion ever regard their ribbons in this light.

Nearly one-third of the inhabitants of Dublin live in tenement houses, many of which are utterly unfit for occupation, even by swine. In the midst of unsanitary conditions of the most destructive kind, only half fed, and poorly clad, is it to be wondered at that these unfortunate people endeavour to find in whiskey and porter comfort and forgetfulness, and that whilst the poor are becoming poorer and more degenerate, the publican and the distiller are heaping up riches? "The quantity of alcohol consumed by a nation," said one of our Judges a while ago, "may be taken as the measure of that nation's degradation." How doubly true is this statement when limited to the Irish metropolis. Where the people are degraded by their surroundings they will be intemperate; where they are intemperate they will be degraded.

When we read of "The Five Points" that are observed in some churches we may be led to hope that these are certain cardinal doctrines of English Protestantism. Alas ! no. They are : The eastward position, lights, vestments, wafer-bread, and mixed chalice. In a professed church of the Reformation in Gainsborough, we are informed, the newly-appointed Bishop of Lincoln gave his sanction to these things ; "assisted pontifically" at a "high celebration," and was "vested in rochet, cope, white stole, and mitre."

The grief of tens of thousands of the very best Churchmen is not without cause. Dr. King represents the recent episcopal appointments, and his action is already encouraging scores of the younger clergy, many of whom have come up from a lower social life, and are eager to assume these priestly pretensions. They will have followers. Men, and specially women, have always been glad to have what they call religion done for them. But with those whose religion is that of the New Testament, and with scientific men, cultured women, and intelligent artisans, the influence of the English Church will be inconceivably weakened.

An evidence of this latter fact is seen in the gratifying announcement that Sir Wm. Dawson, a Christian scientist, is to be the next President of the British Association.

It should be enough for these Romanisers to have on their side what they designate "Church authority." They are, however, increasingly and loudly complaining that one of the companies of Bible Revisionists has not favoured their pretensions. When the New Testament Revisers met with the word "appoint" they ought to have made it "ordain"; and when they met with "elder brethren" to have shown that it meant presbyters who had received "apostolic ordination"; and, above all, to have made bishops altogether distinct in official caste from presbyters. Happily, the Revisionists were God-fearing men, and have made inspired Scripture to tell the English-speaking people what the original meant, and have thus accentuated the New Testament authority against these human priestisms.

We were somewhat perplexed the other day by reading an announcement in The Globe, which at first we were disposed to suspect as a pious plagiarism on Rowland Hill's famous play-bill, or as a new device on the part of our ingenious friends of the Salvation Army. But a little consideration convinced us that it was a bonâ fide paragraph appertaining to the art columns of our contemporary. It ran thus: "A new five-act drama, 'The Day of Judgment,' by Mr. James Willing, will be produced at the Standard Theatre on the 19th inst., when some new and startling effects will be introduced." The title of the piece may be no true index to its character, but there is something very strange in the style of the announcement, though, unfortunately, only too well in keeping with some of the dramatic titles which appear from time to time on the walls and hoardings in our streets.

Perhaps we ought not to be surprised that the theatre should thus encroach on sacred ground, when we see how far some professors of religion invade the domain of the drama. Just a week before the above announcement in The Globe, we met with a glowing paragraph in a provincial paper, under the title of "A Novel Performance," wherein was recorded how certain ladies and gentlemen performed Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream" in a barn contiguous to a pleasant resort on the south coast, the funds realised from the audience being devoted to the restoration fund of the parish church. Residents and visitors appeared in large numbers at the "theatre" doors, and many had to go away for lack of room. There was an "enthusiastic audience," and the performance of "the comedy" is said to have afforded "substantial benefit" to the restoration fund.

The "comedy" for the Church, and "The Day of Judgment" for the theatre, signifies a turningof things upside down, which promises for the stability of our times. Where the nurch ends, and where the World begins, is problem which we should like to commend the consideration of the dramatis personæ the theatrical barn. As for the "new and artling effects" proper to the "Day of udgment," we quite believe in them, and e final scene will assuredly not lack spectors.

We are glad to observe that, in deference to ligious sentiment, the title has since been odified to "Judgment."

Whither are we drifting? A Church of ngland newspaper a few days ago announced r the anniversary of the death of Rev. Dr. usey, "Vespers for the Dead," and in nother column of the same journal a ramatic club advertised their willingness to ve "parochial entertainments."

The same paper contains a protest with gard to an advertisement of unfermented ine "for altar use," alluding to it as one which cannot fail to give great offence to mbers of faithful priests, who abhor the ractice of filling the Eucharistic cup with valid matter."

In the current number of The Nineteenth entury there is a remarkable paper from e pen of Rev. Dr. Belcher, advocating the ractice of the reservation of the sacrament strongly condemned recently in Convocaon. Such advocacy must of necessity be ased to a certain extent upon the foundation belief in the Real Presence; but, with the ception of an indirect reference, that omish doctrine is carefully kept out of ght, the writer contenting himself with aims to antiquity.

How are modern wants to be met? We nswer in a well-known apophthegm of the te Dr. Evans, of St. Mary-le-Strand: "Often e best way to progress is to go backards,"—"If we only go back far enough," ys Dr. Belcher, and he therefore goes back disused prayer-books for his rule, and to styn Martyr for his practice. Somewhat nwittingly, however, he has gone a little rther, and to a higher authority than these; r, in the course of the article, he admits, We do not find anything written on this atter in the New Testament."

It moves our indignation to see a Governent which has been forced at the point of e bayonet of public conscience to pass the riminal Law Amendment Bill persecuting y a malignant prosecution those who rought this to pass; but it is even more miliating to see some who profess to be in e van of Jesus' witnesses turning, as the cribes and Pharisees did of old, the letter Scripture against the Spirit of Christ.

Jesus told his brethren after the flesh, ho did not yet believe on Him, "The orld cannot hate you, but Me it hateth, ecause I testify of it that the works thereof e evil" (John vii. 7). Later on He told s disciples, including now "James the ord's brother," "If ye were of the world e world would love his own; but because are not of the world, but I have chosen u out of the world, therefore the world teth you." . . . He was going away, but e would send the Spirit of truth unto em, and He, speaking through them, would nvict the world of sin, of righteousness, d of judgment. Could we imagine that, when they testified, like their Lord, that the works of the world were evil, any of their brethren should turn upon them and quote against them the Lord's own words, "Let the dead bury their dead," as if that meant that they were not to testify that the works of the world are evil?

It will be replied, We must certainly testify against evil, but we must be silent about uncleanness and covetousness, for the Apostle said, "Let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints." Is that rightly dividing the Word of truth! Is it forbidden to name covetousness to reprove it? Does not this use of the passage prove too much? for none would include covetousness in the silence which is desired of us.

On August 30 or 31, a young German lady, twenty years of age, saw in The Morning Post an advertisement asking for a young German lady, from twenty to twenty-five years old, to teach German only. She, accompanied by a lady older than herself, applied at the address given. The person she saw there said that it was for a young French gentleman of twenty-four years old, and she was asked to go into a dark room. She, refusing the invitation, happily escaped. Is ignorance of the wiles of the devil safety in such a case?

The crimes which are daily reported, and some of which have been punished by heavy sentences of penal servitude, have indisputably proved the crying need of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. It has been followed also by an increased activity of the police in bringing previously existing laws into operation. But how some good people can preserve a conscience void of offence while they say that Act would have become law apart from the agitation inaugurated by Mr. Stead, we are at a loss to understand.

It is greatly to be regretted that in the long, variously estimated manifesto, issued by Mr. Gladstone, which has been waited for so long and so expectantly, not a word is said upon the burning question of our Social Purity, nor yet upon the kindred subject of Temperance.

The letter in another column proposing a Christian daily paper deserves the most serious attention. Surely the time is come for it. We have not, however, much confidence in the Board of Management proposed. It must be done, we think, by individual enterprise, if it is to succeed. The first preliminary is prayer to God to thrust forth the right men as labourers in this promising field of service.

Mr. Henry Varley has written, "in the interests of young men and the moral condition of the great city," a letter to the members of both Houses of Parliament, impeaching the action of the Metropolitan Board of Works in relation to the London Pavilion Music Hall.

He charges that body with having leased a splendid site for the re-erection at a great cost of this splendid temple of West-end immorality, and with having disposed of the site "by private treaty and without any public competition" for this purpose, for the sum of £3000 annually, although "a well-known gentleman made an offer to the Board of £4000 rental in order to the erection of first-class houses to be devoted to legitimate business purposes;" whereas if the ground had been submitted to public competition it would have realised from £4500 to £5000 annually. The Board of Works have therefore not only consented to the re-erection and extension of "one of the worst houses which was ever used to blast the morality of this great city," but they have, "practically, from the pockets of the ratepayers, endowed it to the extent of £1500 per annum," to say nothing of the way in which "the whole of the district around the lower end of Regent-street has suffered," commercially and morally, from the existence of the former Pavilion Music Hall.

Mr. Varley further states that "the Metropolitan Board of Works paid no less a sum than £50,000 compensation for the former house," so that the lessee had no claim to a low rent on that account. Once more, Mr. Varley asserts that there is not the least necessity for the Pavilion Music Hall on the ground of legitimate amusement, because within a radius of a quarter of a mile there are at least eighteen well-known theatres and places of amusement constantly open. Mr. Varley further states what he himself has witnessed in the Pavilion Music Hall in proof of the infamous character which he gives it.

Now this is a most serious charge, and if the British Government really exists for the purpose of making virtue easy and vice difficult, they will give Mr. Varley's statement their serious attention. But what will they do? The Methodist Times pertinently asks, "Will they arrest Mr. Varley? or will they allow the whole matter to be hushed up like the Jeffries business?" No doubt they will allow it, if they can; but will the Christian citizens of the metropolis allow it?

A gathering of friends will be held on Tuesday, 29th inst., at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, at 7.30, to bid farewell to Rev. J. G. Paton on his return to the New Hebrides.

The Christian Treasury, edited by Dr. H. Bonar for nearly twenty years, is now edited and published in London. It keeps on the old lines of evangelical truth, provides suitable reading for the family, and is illustrated. We are glad to hear it has an increasing circulation, and heartily commend it to our readers as worthy of a place in every home. The price is sixpence, monthly, and it is published by Mr. E. W. Allen, 4, Ave Maria-lane, E.C.

Our dear and valued friend, and God's faithful missionary, Rev. Hamilton Moore Dyke, writes from Morija, Basutoland:—"I would ask you to bear us, who are engaged in this mission, upon your heart before the Throne of Grace. We are expecting some days of temporal difficulty, for the Lord has seen fit to withhold the precious rains, and the land is suffering from a long-continued drought. It may be we shall be obliged ere long to speak of famine prevailing. Already in some districts in South Africa there is great want. O that men could be led by these dispensations to recognise the hand of God, and to cry to Him for mercy. We are nearing our heavenly home; but our joy is great in seeing our dear son taking up with new vigour our work in the Lord's vineyard."

REV. W. EVANS HURNDALL, M.A., of Bow, has declined a pressing invitation to Craven Chapel, Regent-street, W.

MRS. PICKETT'S MISSIONARY BOX.

(Concluded.)

"WELL, I dropped in my penny, and the words kept ringing in my ears, till I could not help putting more to it on account of some other things I never thought of calling the Lord's benefits before. And by that time, what with Mary's telling me about those meetings, and I almost always finding something to put in a penny to be thankful that I was not it, and what with getting interested about it all, and searching round a little now and then to think of something or other to put in a cent for, there really came to be quite a few pennies in the box, and it did not rattle near so much when I shook it. Then one day Mary brought me a purplish pamphlet, and said: 'Aunty, here is a missionary magazine I have subscribed to for you, as you are so much interested in missions.' 'Me interested in missions!' But when I came to think it over, I could not deny but that I was in a way, and I said it over to myself, rather curious to see how it sounded. It was just what they said about Mrs. Stapleton, she that was the president of the missionary society. And that night our new boarder he picked up the magazine and said, 'Why, what is this?' And I said, quite pleased, before I thought, 'That's a magazine that my niece, Mary Pickett, subscribed to for me, as I am so interested in missions.' 'My mother used to take it,' he said. He was a young man, not much more than a boy, and homesick, I guess. 'It looks like home,' he said. So I was pleased to hear him say that, for the boarders do not usually say much, except to find fault; so when I went into the dining-room, I just put another cent in for the magazine itself, part for what he said, and part for what I had been reading out of it that afternoon; and while I was dropping it in, Mary came up behind me and gave me a big hug. 'You dear, inconsistent thing,' she said; and then I knew she had heard what I had said in the parlour. Well, it went on that way for some time, and it came to be quite a regular thing that a cent would get in every time I heard about a meeting. I thought Mary would have died laughing the time I put one in because I was not born a cannibal; and one day—I'll never forget that day, Mrs. Malcolm—she was telling me about Turkey, and she told me how some missionaries heard a little girl saying that the smallest thing in all the world was not any smaller than the joy of her father when she was born. Those words went right through me. I was standing over the ironing-board, and Mary was opposite me, when all of a sudden, instead of her, I seemed to see my husband's face (he had been dead ten years), and he leaning down over our little baby that only lived two weeks—the only one I ever had. Seemed to me I couldn't get over it when that baby died, and I seemed to see my husband smiling down at it, and it lying there all soft and white, such a pretty baby. And before I knew it I was dropping tears all over the starched clothes, and I turned round and went and put another cent in the box, for the look on my husband's face when he held her that time. And Mary, she saw that something was the matter, I guess, for she walked off and never asked a question. But all the rest of the day I seemed to be seeing that little white face before me, and thinking how I had her for my own, and how I knew she was in glory; before that I had only felt it hard that I could not keep her here. And before I went to bed I went into the dining-room, and I put in a little bright five-cent piece for my baby, because I couldn't bear to count her just like everything else, and I found myself crying because I hadn't enough money just then to spare anything bigger. I suppose it was from thinking about her so much that I dreamed about mother, I could see her so plain, and father with her, and we were back on the old farm, and while I was kissing them both, I heard someone saying, 'As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you.' And I was saying, 'O Lord, I am a wicked ungrateful woman!'

"Mrs. Malcolm, I don't suppose you could understand—you who are a minister's wife, and thankful to the Lord of course—what I thought that night; I laid awake thinking and crying, and yet not at all sorry, half the night. I kept thinking of all the things the Lord had ever done for me, and the more I thought of mother and the old home the softer my heart seemed to grow, and I just praised with all my might and main, and that box weighed on my mind like lead. 'A cent apiece!' I kept saying, 'a cent apiece for all his benefits!' Why they came over me that night, while I laid there praying, like crowds of angels all around me. In the morning I went up to the box feeling meaner than dirt, and I put in a cent for mother and a cent for father, and one for the old farm and the rose-bush in front of my window, and for my little pet-lamb that made me so happy when I was a girl, and for heaps of other things that I had been forgetting in those hard times. And when I could not spare any more, I went to work, and I do believe I was a different woman after that. For there were the verses in the Bible that I used to get up early to read those mornings, and there was the love of God, that I had never rightly understood; and there was church, that I could not bear to miss now, and there was the daily bread, that I had never thought of being thankful for till that night, when I found out how much I had had in my life, and began to look about me for what I had now. And so it went on, till the box grew heavier and heavier, and before the day came for it to be opened, three months from the time I had it, it was full, and I stuck one cent into the slit at the top and said, 'That's for you, Mary Pickett, for if ever I had a benefit from the Lord, you are one!' and Mary, she cried when I said it. So when the day came, I said I was going too, and I left the ironing, and we went off together; and there was singing and everything just as usual, only it was all new to me, and every one seemed as glad to see me as if I'd been as rich as any of them, and at last it was time to open our boxes. And when I brought mine I said, 'Mrs. Stapleton, if there was ever a mean feeling woman come to a missionary meeting, I'm the one; for I have been keeping count of my mercies at a cent apiece. It's all cents there, except a five-cent piece, and that means something special to me, and I wouldn't let myself put in more,' I said, beginning to cry; 'for when I began to find out what I had to be thankful for, I said to myself, "Mean you ought to feel, and mean you shall feel! You'll just finish this box as you've begun it," and here it is, and every cent is one of the Lord's mercies.' So I sat down crying like a baby, and Mrs. Stapleton, she began to count, the tears running down her cheeks, and before she got through we were all crying together, for there were three hundred and fifty blessed cents in the box, not counting the little five-cent piece that nobody knew what it meant. And now, said I, for mercy's sake give me another box, but don't let it have that motto on it, for I believe it will break my heart. So they gave me this one, with 'The love of Christ constraineth us' on it, and Mrs. Barnes, that was the minister's wife then, she prayed for us all about having thankful hearts, and loving the Lord for what he has done for us. So I went home with the new box that's standing on the shelf, and life's been a different thing to me ever since that day, Mrs. Malcolm, my dear, and that's why I say that missionary box is worth its weight in gold."

One of the truly affecting histories of the Old Testament is written in 1 Chron xi. 15—19. And David (in his extreme need) longed and said, "Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, that is at the gate." Three mighty men brake through the hosts of the Philistines and exultingly brought the longed-for draught to their exhausted master. Meantime, agonised at the though for their danger, David's thirst was gone, and when it was presented he poured it on the ground, saying, "Shall I drink the blood of these men, for with their lives they bought it?" It was an act of self-sacrifice, yet it was a rash ungracious act. And, alas! how often has it been repeated? Our David gave his life to bring us the only satisfying drink—the living water—and how has it been received? Let it be so no longer; but answering our own question, "What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits?" may we thankfully, rejoicingly say, "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord." "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift." And further, shall we not listen to the words of one who himself set us a bright example? "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. xii. 1, 2.

CHURCH ARMY WORK.

MISSIONS have just been commenced at Workington and Brixton. In one of the worst slums in London, in St. Giles', a number of bad characters seemed truly changed in heart and life. In St. Stephen's parish, Nottingham, many drunkards who had sold their shirts and their shoes for drink are now members and humble speakers in the cause of Christ. We anticipate that the Training College will be brought to London in the course of next month.

A clergyman writes:—"The indirect results of the Church Army's work in my parish have been even more remarkable than the direct results. For in many instances persons who would have nothing to do with the Church, have been entirely won to it, and have become regular attendants by witnessing the Church Army's work, though they have not been engaged in it themselves. The reality of conversion has been exemplified to them by their neighbours' lives, and they have been won to trust a Church in whose organisation such miracles are performed. There is a great enthusiasm for the Church among my people, who are entirely poor labouring men, watermen, and mechanics, many of them out of work through the depression of trade. It has often touched me to see very poor members bringing up a plant for our church garden, which they had purchased with money that could ill be spared. "It is my church," said a poor old woman, warmly, as she brought her gift the other day. At our last Confirmation we reckoned fifty converts as the direct result of the Church Army's work, and though the population is very shifting we have at this time about fifty men and women standing well."

SURREY CHAPEL.—At the quarterly meeting excellent reports were given of every department of the work, and the members of the meeting were delighted when Rev. B. Senior read a beautiful letter from Mr. George Williams, with a cheque for £105 towards the New Surrey Chapel. We shall be glad to hear of Mr. Senior receiving many more such letters.

EMIGRATION OF THE YOUNG.

HAVING lived for fifteen years in the heart of East London, associated with many voted servants of God, who, by their means, ve enabled us to rescue the 4020 now in this nd, most of whom are doing well, and becom- g useful members of society by their honest dustry, as the years go by we feel, as a family, ore and more thankful that we were ever led to ve our whole strength and life to such blessed ork.

How often have we in these days of visiting in e towns and villages around the Home from ence the children have been distributed been l to exclaim, Oh, how we wish So-and-so could e you now, or those who stitched long winter enings to fill the boxes, knitted the socks, and mforters and all those who sent their mites th many prayers to aid us in rescuing "one ore." Here they are now wherever we go, owing into usefulness, and settling down for emselves. In one town during the past week e heard of six who are married, and saw several ho have grown beyond the age of adoption and w receive wages, thus learning early to value e cost of their clothing, &c.

On the other hand, there are some "rolling ones," the harum-scarums, the lazy, generally nging about the Home, who prove very trying the patience of my fellow-workers in charge this department.

For these we are ever toiling, and faith is often rely exercised, making us the more careful to atch for and rescue those who are best suited r emigration. All cases are not fitted to mingle ith other children, and it is an injustice to our lonists to send those who have no work in em. [We do not quite see this. Why should ot the colonists take their share of the less sirable sort?—ED.]

We met the soldier who had got weary of gypt, and felt that regular work apart from ar would yield him a peaceful life. He ex- aimed, "Two years here, Miss. Summer is e time to save for winter. Very happy. No ant. I have joined the Lord's people, and I n not forgetting to send a dollar home to poor d mother now and then." We thought how uch better it was to be a hard-working labourer ith plenty, than dodging about London streets, ing tempted at every turn. It is only the self- pointed and self-helped of adult emigrants ho do well; they are not the grumblers that turn to East London to scold those who aided em to peace and plenty.

We saw one family surrounded by comfort, d their children all doing well, whilst a widow ho had been sent out by some West-end ladies d taken her three children from good homes, here they had been three years, and through r drinking habits they are now the vagrants of e town and bringing our work an ill name. he three parties are nearly all distributed, and e expect to sail for England by the Parisian on ct. 3.

Details will follow from the pen of my lady mpanion; this being her first visit to Canada, ey are full of interest. Asking a continuance the prayers of all those who are one with us the work, yours in the Master's service,

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

SCANDINAVIAN PEACE CONGRESS.—At the cent Peace Congress for Sweden, Norway, and enmark, held at Gothenburg, a discussion took ace on "Pacific Education," and the importance influencing children and young persons to take interest in opposing the war spirit. M. Schiodt id that such influence could be brought to bear on children in the schoolroom and the home. rhaps schoolmasters would not, or could not, do much, but parents at home might effectually ing before their families the horrors of war, and e duty of encouraging a spirit of friendship and nciliation. M. Norrelund regretted the almost clusively martial tone of every historical book aced in the hands of the young. Hence it is the ore important for parents, teachers, and preachers, endeavour to counteract these misrepresentations statements of the real principles and precepts of ristianity.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH IN LIBERIA.

HAVING read much of the correspondence between Mrs. Amanda Smith and her friends interested in her labours, I should like to allude to her work among the people in Liberia, where she has been engaged, except during brief intervals of illness, unremittingly since the year 1882.

Mrs. Smith's work has been to preach and exhort, and organise Temperance societies in the counties of Montserrado, the seat of the capital, Grand Bassa, the commercial centre, and Sinon. There is but one other county of the Republic, Maryland, which she has not yet visited, owing to contagious disease there.

Her work has been chiefly directed to the American-Liberian population, and, while she enjoys the respect of the higher classes, she also works among the most degraded. Her Temperance work has greatly helped restrictive legislation as to importing spirits into Liberia, the prohibitive tariff on spirits having stopped it during the year.

The success of Mrs. Amanda Smith is largely due to her nationality and the happy faculty of making plain Christian convictions to others, and the fact that she is a true Christian gentlewoman.

Minister-Resident and Consul-General of the United States to Liberia.

FOREIGN PRISONS.

IN Cordova a marble pillar is shown, in which a figure of the Saviour is cut by the fingernails of a prisoner. Hundreds, nay thousands, are known to me who languish in chains in "durance vile" with nothing to do, and nothing to read. Leaving London with my friend, Mr. Clark, we ran through France into Belgium, and on through the fair provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, stopping at the two respective capitals, Strasburg and Metz.

Since I visited the Belgian prisons, a very large and handsome new prison has been constructed near Brussels. This we determined to visit, and found it built with every convenience for the comfort and safe keeping of a large number of criminals. The cells are large, airy, and well furnished. I noticed in each a crucifix and a rosary, but not the Word. The prison contains two chapels: one for Catholics, holding 600, and the other for Protestants, holding 20; and a Jewish Synagogue, seating six. This is unique; and altogether this prison of St. Jeales is the best built place of its kind I ever saw. Leaving half a dozen copies of a certain book for the library, and doing a little other work besides, we left for Germany. The new Palais de Justice is a magnificent pile of buildings, and well worth a visit. It cost 60,000,000 francs, but it is a reflection upon the city that so large a building should be needed for such a purpose.

In Strasburg was my first experience of a German prison; we have, since then, come on through Baden-Baden and Carlsruhe to Stuttgart. The German prisons are old-fashioned, but roomy, and clean, and well kept. We were delighted at the openings we found, and returned home to pray the Lord of the harvest to bless the seed sown among prisoners, officials, and governors.

We have been enabled also to put some New Testaments in English and German in the reading-rooms of the hotels, getting them stamped with the name of the hotel, and trust they may be read. All along the route, and in Germany, we gave away, carefully, Testaments, and the delight of the people on receiving them was most gratifying. In some cases they insisted on our putting their names on the inside, and many a hearty shake of the hand did we receive in gratitude for the gifts.

Since Alsace and Lorraine have been under German rule, there has been more opportunity for the people to be supplied with the Word. There is evidently a desire now to receive it, and we were cheered by the many thanks we heard from all.

We are now on our way to Austria. Brethren, pray for us! CHAS. COOK.

REV. HAY AITKEN AT EXETER HALL.

ON Tuesday evening, the 15th inst., Rev. Hay Aitken delivered the first of two special farewell addresses, to men only, at Exeter Hall, Mr. H. C. Hart Dyke in the chair. There is no doubt in relation to the subject which they had met to discuss that the iron was hot. The revelations which had lately been made, and which were known to almost all the reading public, had stirred the whole country from end to end. They had known previously that many of these evils abound, and no revelations were needed to tell them that a fearful quantity of vice existed, but they were scarcely prepared to find that a hugh systematic immorality was in their midst. They were scarcely prepared to find firms banded together for immorality just as there were firms banded together in our country for the commercial undertakings which made England so great.

The disclosure of these facts had driven us into a corner, and the time was come when every honest man must decide to take sides in the great contest that was going on around us. It was because this evil was so extensive and so well organised that the time was come when every man who had the feelings of humanity about him must make the cause of the weak his own, and bring about an elevation of the tone of society on the subject. He did not think that anything could have brought this thing before our minds better than that which had happened. By God's help they had drawn the sword and flung away the scabbard, and by God's help they meant to do away with this great evil.

The following evening he gave another stirring address on the same subject.

A meeting of Mr. Aitken's friends will (D.V.) be held in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall, on Friday, September 25, at 7 p.m., to pray for blessing on his proposed visit to America.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

AT the Hampstead Blue Ribbon Association meeting, on the 15th inst., a deputation from the Metropolitan Police attended, and gave stirring and hearty addresses on Gospel Total Abstinence.

AT the Ontario Liquor Prohibition Alliance Convention just held, a resolution was adopted providing that an electoral union should be formed in each county, the members of which should pledge themselves to vote only for Prohibition candidates.

TEMPERANCE continues to make great strides in all classes of society, and has now reached even to the Carlton Club. That Club is famous for its cellar of wines, and the wiser members are reputed to have locked in their breasts many a secret of many a brand known only to themselves to be superlatively excellent; but the consumption of these wines is by no means what it used to be, and it will appal the heart of many a wine merchant to learn that the favourite drink at the Carlton is now barley-water!—Vanity Fair. [We hope this is true, and that it will last and increase.—ED.]

IN 1883 a German Association was formed in Cassel against the abuse of alcoholic beverages. It now has 6000 members, and appears to be growing in influence. This year the Society met at Dresden. In speaking of colonisation in Africa, with a view to increasing German commerce, one of its resolutions says: "This commerce provides the negroes with spirits of the vilest sort, ... thus directly injuring the trade that it pretends to encourage, in fact, it discredits and abuses it. Self-interested merchants, as well as the traditions hitherto followed on the Coast of Africa, ought to find their limit in the consideration of the moral and spiritual weakness of the negroes, and in the moral conscience of the German people."

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE IN MANCHESTER.—It is expected that this Conference will meet on December 8 and 9, and will be attended by the leading men in the country, on the great subject which awaits consideration—viz., "The Evangelisation of the World." The Conference Committee beg the prayers of God's people throughout the country, that this gathering may give increased zeal to missionary effort at home and abroad. Friends interested will please communicate with the Secretaries, Christian Conference, Strangeways, Manchester.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT MILDMAY.

ON Sunday last, the 20th inst., Rev. E. Payson Hammond began his work at Mildmay Park by a service in the Presbyterian Church of Dr. Edmunds, to a large audience. At the close of the service Dr. Edmunds expressed himself heartily in sympathy with all that had been said, and urged his people to pray to God that there might be a rich blessing on Mildmay from the preaching of the word and the services that were to be held during the next fortnight.

The services Dr. Edmunds alluded to are special services to be held in the Mildmay Conference Hall: two services daily, one for prayer at 11 a.m.; the second, adapted for children, to begin at 7 p.m.; to be continued from September 20 till October 4. The sympathy and unanimity of the clergy in this quarter is most highly creditable, not only as Christian men, but as men ordained to the ministry under many differences of Church government which they severally revere. The recognition of one Lord, one Saviour, one God, seems the foremost sentiment pervading them; and with such dedication of heart to the eternal principle of truth and immediate Presence of God, the influence of the Holy Spirit promised to the churches becomes the experience of every pure and God-seeking soul.

Rev. Mr. Hankin, of St. Jude's Episcopal Church, during the morning's service alluded to the testimonies of God's presence in connection with Mr. Hammond's ministrations, which had been made known to him by those with whom Mr. Hammond had laboured in years gone by—twenty-five years ago, and eighteen years ago—in Scotland and in England. The seed sown so abundantly then was bearing fruit now conspicuously, as witnessed by those who had opportunity to observe and judge.

The service for the children commenced at 3.30. It was held in the large hall. The entire area and galleries were filled. By those who are accustomed to see the audiences there the number of children present was computed to be about 3500. Many of them would be about five and six years of age. Their orderly behaviour was most noticeable. It is reasonable to presume that the Sunday-school children of almost every denomination were present in considerable numbers, and accompanied by their teachers.

There were also present many young men and young women, as also those gentlemen who came to assist in the work. But besides those who gained admission, there were others for whom there was no room at all inside. So they assembled in the garden under the spreading branches of the ancient mulberry tree, and there, under the guidance of Mr. Spiers, another congregation to the number of fully one thousand was formed, and sang their praises in the open air.

There was a full choir of excellent singers, who continued singing while all those many children were getting into their places. The devotions were opened by Rev. Mr. Hankin offering up a most impressive prayer, for the blessing of God on the words to be spoken.

Mr. Hammond spoke for half an hour, explaining, in simple language, the way of salvation; the need of holiness of life; especially did he put forth the death of Jesus as for sinners, and redemption through Christ for all men.

The speaking, or preaching, was lightened by a pause, when a hymn from the "Gems of Praise" was sung, and also a short prayer, in which all were requested to join in speaking aloud.

Again the address was renewed, and illustration after illustration presented the Scripture truths to be inculcated in simple and picture-like vividness, keeping the attention of that vast number of children almost entirely to the end, with very little appearance of weariness. And, judging from the large numbers that remained to the after-meeting, the truth had evidently touched many hearts.

Every child was supplied with a hymn-book, "Gems of Praise," which each might take home as a gift, on the condition that they would come to the services, so that they might learn to sing these sacred songs aright.

In the evening there was a mixed meeting of children and adults, which was most impressive. Dr. Barnardo was present, and bore most valuable testimony to the worth of mission work among children.

SOCIAL PURITY AT ANTWERP.

THE Conference of the British and Continental Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice was opened on the 16th inst., in the hall of the Athenée Royal, by the President, M. de Laveleye, who stated that the Federation seeks the abolition of regulated debauchery, and remains firm only on this circumscribed field. Beyond this its members are separated by divisions in their religious, economic, and political sentiments. He also observed that the Federation is in no way responsible for the speeches or actions of its individual members, not even for the speeches which may be made at its meetings, but only for its resolutions, and such action as it may take in its corporate capacity. The suppression of the legislation against which the Federation contends is connected with a great awakening of the moral sentiment, for that legislation is founded on the doctrine of necessary evil. It is virtue and not evil which is necessary, and which must necessarily continue. While carefully guarding the Federation, and himself as its President, from pronouncing any opinion as to the details of the crusade in England, he referred with satisfaction to the great moral awakening which had recently taken place throughout the mass of the people of that country, and if on the Continent such an awakening could be produced, the legislation they contended against would disappear.

Mrs. BUTLER stated that owing to the publication of the revelations of the crimes of London, a revolution had been accomplished in England within the last three months, and greater moral energy had been infused into the mass of the people. We have entered upon a new era of Government Ministers, police and others had been shaken out of their indifference. We accept, she said, as a nation, the condemnation of the Continent for our vices; we are resolved to judge ourselves with more severity than the most unpitying critic or the most cynical journal can judge us. In Hyde Park there had been the spectacle of a whole people publicly repenting, and plunged in sorrow for their crimes. Every religious denomination had been represented there. She then referred to the attitude of English associations towards houses of ill-fame, and said that in England all were agreed that they were a permanent excitement to debauchery and should disappear, and that the Federation's international army should attack them throughout Europe; but as soon as the question arose what were the necessary means by which this attack should be made a divergence of opinion arose. Her own view was to place only limited confidence in the law, or in the police, unless directed by a just law and pure magistracy, and especially where the police was corrupted by the regulation system. Her aim was to awaken public opinion, not to an explosion, but to persevering action.

M. PAGNY, of Brussels, and M. NALT, of Lausanne, also spoke. The principal business on Thursday was the report presented by Professor Stuart, M.P., on the position of the agitation against the Contagious Diseases Acts in England and on the Criminal Law Amendment Act. He detailed the events since Mr. Stansfeld's resolution in April, 1883, and then gave an account of the awakening of public opinion subsequent to the revelations of The Pall Mall Gazette, and described the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. Mr. Stuart said there could be no doubt whatever that this movement in England had been rendered possible by the fifteen years of education given by the crusade against the Contagious Diseases Acts, whereby the people had been gradually instructed in the true aspects of the question. It was a striking feature during the recent agitation that no voice had been raised in the direction of regulation as a remedy for the evils disclosed; on the contrary, it had been referred to with as deep condemnation as the evils themselves. It was neither on this Act nor even on the vigilance associations now arising that they founded their hopes, but on the awakened conscience of the people.

Mr. STEAD, who had arrived in Antwerp on the previous day, addressed the assembly, and stated that as he had not asked the advice of the Federation on what he had done, he did not ask their absolution. They were not responsible for his actions, but they were responsible for the police des mœurs in their own countries, and for the crimes connected therewith. Against these they had protested, but protest was not sufficient. "What I have done," he said, "belongs to the past; your responsibility is in the present and the future. We need the human sentiment raised to the explosive point, and if anyone can do that better than I have done, let him do it."

Mr. ROWLAND, Secretary of the Cabdrivers' Association, and Mr. COOTE, another working-man delegate, also addressed the meeting.

HEBREW AND GREEK CLASSES.

DEAR SIR,—You will be doing a material service to many young men and young women in London and its neighbourhood, if you announce that the Sunday-school Union are just resuming their classes for the study of Hebrew and Greek. Professedly established for the purpose of enabling Sunday-school teachers to learn to read the Scriptures in the original languages, these classes are practically open to all who present themselves. The fees are merely nominal.

By means of these classes many young people, of both sexes, have acquired considerable facility in reading the Hebrew Bible and the Greek New Testament.

The introductory lecture for the Hebrew Class will be given on the evening of Thursday, September 24, at 8 p.m., at the Sunday-school Union, 56, Old Bailey, at which time—or at either of the two succeeding Thursday evenings—names of pupils will be received. The first meeting of the Greek Class will be held on Monday, October 5, at 8 p.m, on which occasion—or on either of the two succeeding Monday evenings—new comers will have the opportunity of joining.

As the elementary class in either tongue will commence with the alphabet, no one need feel any hesitation at joining.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN R. CHEYSE.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR some children's mission services to be held in Birmingham this winter.——For a mission being held in Carnlough, co. Antrim, from Sept. 21 to Sept. 28, that a mighty blessing may be poured out upon the neighbourhood.——A lady asks prayer for a clergyman in a village in Leicestershire, who has "built a dancing saloon in his own grounds which is becoming a curse to the young people. On Easter Monday he had a fancy dress ball for the villagers. And he has lately signed a paper for another outdoor license for intoxicating liquors."——For a young man who has disappeared, that God would convert him and lead him to return home speedily, lead a new life, and restrain him from evil or falling into despair.——A worker earnestly asks the prayers of God's children in behalf of a son that he may be fully restored to health, if it be the Lord's will.

STRANGERS' REST, CARDIFF.—According to the last report, the attendance for the year was upwards of 40,000, and the Temperance pledges taken were more than 800. Those who see our balance-sheet will, I think, acquit us of any charge of extravagance in the work, and will rejoice with us over the results it has, with God's help, brought about. Our chief difficulty is to keep afloat with religious and other useful literature. Will friends who do not know what to do with their old magazines kindly think of us? They are most valuable for the reading-room and the bags. I can but express our thankfulness for the help we received last year, and for promises for the future. I trust our friends will not grow tired; I do not think they would, did they see what real help and comfort their gifts were, both to the workers and to the men who receive them. We are trying to decorate our hall without having recourse to the funds of the institution, and should be very grateful for any flags or large illuminated texts to make the place look attractive and comfortable for winter.—Yours faithfully, HARRIETT TILLEY.

STUDY AND CURE OF INEBRIETY.

AN interesting ceremony took place on Saturday afternoon in the concert hall of the alrymple Home for Inebriates, at Rickmans-orth, when Dr. Joseph Parrish, president of e American Association for the Cure of Inebri-es, who is in this country on a tour of inspec-on of institutions for the treatment of the ctims of alcoholic intemperance, was intro-iced to and welcomed by a representative athering of English teetotalers.

The Dalrymple Home is a bright and pleasant ansion, standing in about five acres of lovely rounds, studded with noble cedars, on a terrace erlooking the river Colne. It has been open r nearly two years; the Government inspector ates that its success has been very marked. ost of the patients are of the wealthy, edu-ted classes, and of those discharged a half ave been fitted creditably to resume their duties life, and 20 per cent. more have been im-roved. This appears to be the only home for ebriates in the United Kingdom which has ublished its results in a permanent scientific rm, and also the only licensed home conducted ithout personal pecuniary profit to the owners.

The guests, who numbered about 100, both dies and gentlemen, travelled from Euston by ecial train, and at Rickmansworth carriages ere in waiting to convey the guests to the home, hich is situated a mile from the station. They ere received by Dr. Norman Kerr, president of e Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety, d by the medical superintendent, Dr. R. elch Branthwaite, and Mrs. Branthwaite. mong the invited were Lord Ebury, Consul-eneral Waller, of the United States, General illilan, General Bruce, Surgeon-General rancis, Surgeon-Major Poole, and other mem-ers of the medical profession, the Rev. Canon arker, the Rev. G. Murphy and other ministers. fter luncheon the company assembled in the ncert-hall, where Dr. Norman Kerr presided, aving Dr. Parrish on his right hand. The chairman aid it afforded him much pleasure, in the name f the Council of the Society for the Study and ure of Inebriety, to offer a reception in so ppropriate a place to Dr. Joseph Parrish, whose abours of love on behalf of the inebriate were so ell known, and who had once before on a visit Britain rendered good service to the cause of gislation for habitual drunkards. Though etotal reformers and Christian workers were eginning to realise the fact that there was a hysical aspect of inebriety, only a comparatively mited number recognised in alcoholic excess mething more than sin, vice, or crime. abitual drunkenness was a bodily disease as well a sinful habit, and not till the Church and the tate saw this fundamental truth would intem-erance be effectually grappled with.

Dr. Kerr referred to Mr. Gladstone's mani-esto, and complained of the contemptible posi-ion assigned to the Temperance question in it. t was disgraceful that while in America the oorest inebriate could be treated in a home, in ngland there was no home under the Act for ither males or females in indigent circumstances, nd no home, licensed or unlicensed, for impe-unious males. In America, also, any confirmed ebriate could enter a home of his own desire ithout let or hindrance, but in this country here had to be an appearance before two justices a most forbidding procedure, especially to dies), and there were other humiliating barriers. ll such restrictions should be swept away; the isk of unlawful detention being easily guarded gainst. The Act, too, should be made perma-ent as well as improved. Other amendments ere needed, and Dr. Kerr hoped that the pro-eedings of that day would hasten the advent of etter legislation, and would tend to unite, in ne grand effort on behalf of the victims of ntemperance, abstainers, non-abstainers, and rohibitionists on both sides of the Atlantic. In onclusion he proposed a resolution of welcome Dr. Parrish.

Dr. Langdon Down seconded this resolution, and the meeting was addressed in support of it by Mr. John Hilton (United Kingdom Alliance), Mr. F. Sherlock (Church of England Temperance Society), Mr. Arthur Gunn (National Temperance League), Mrs. Lucas (British Women's Temperance Association), the Rev. G. M. Murphy, Dr. Williams (British Medical Temperance Association), Mr. R. C. Morgan, Surgeon-General Francis, Surgeon-Major Poole, Mr. T. Hudson, Mr. J. W. Lane (National Temperance League).

The resolution having been cordially adopted, Dr. Joseph Parrish, in acknowledging the compliment, spoke of the difficulties which the treatment of drunkenness, as a disease, had encountered in America. This view, however, was finding wider acceptance, as it was seen that drunkenness, like other diseases, tended to bring about death, while vices, such as lying and thieving, were distinguished from disease by not having that effect. In conclusion, he thanked the meeting for their kind reception of him. Dr. Danford Thomas (coroner for West Middlesex) moved, and Mr. Waller (United States Consul-General) seconded, a vote of thanks to the chairman, and the proceedings came to a close, the visitors immediately afterwards returning to town by special train.

Notices of Books, &c.

Then and Now. By Lina Orman-Cooper. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. A striking little Temperance tale, worthy of a thoughtful perusal.

The Cathedral Cave. By Lina Orman-Cooper. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. This little story will meet with great acceptance as a fireside friend for the young.

Wilderness Lessons. By Louisa Clayton. 1s. Hawkins. A useful little companion, setting forth its lessons in a concise and practical manner.

Loving Words for Mothers. By Mrs. Evered Poole. By post, 1s. 2d. per packet, from the authoress, Enfield House, Southampton. The overflowing heart and the prolific pen of this gifted lady have produced a series of four-page tracts for mothers, which we heartily commend for distribution in Mothers' Meetings, District Visiting, &c.

The Story of a Little Crab. By Mary H. Andrews. 1s. Holness. A most interesting little book, which will delight our young folks, and contains much that will probably be new to many of their seniors. They will be surprised to find how much a little crab can amuse and instruct them. It is a very pretty little volume, and a capital shillingsworth.

Five Dollars at the State Prison Gates. 6d. By Samuel T. Wood. (24, Wilton-square, Islington, N.) The author here recounts the story of his life, showing how the five dollars became six thousand, within a few years of his discharge from prison. The pernicious influence of "Dick Turpin" literature, and other evils, are here vividly depicted by one who is acquainted with them through bitter experience. It is a useful and stimulating little book to put into the hands of discharged prisoners.

The Churches in Asia. By Rev. Dr. Somerville. 1s. 6d. Parlane (Paisley). This volume contains extracts from the letters and diary written by this veteran evangelist, whilst on his recent tour through Asia. Our readers who have read our reports of his missions from time to time will accord to it a genial welcome. It is full of intensely interesting information, and most entertaining in its descriptive eloquence. The latter is a gift in which the worthy Doctor excels, and as these notes were not originally intended for publication, they are free and racy in style, and amusing in many of their details.

The World's Workers. 1s. Cassell & Co. Under this title has been published a series of books containing brief biographies of eminent persons who have moved in religious, philanthropic, and other spheres. We have before us the volume containing sketches of Florence Nightingale, F. Ridley Havergal, Catherine Marsh, and Mrs Ranyard ("L.N.R."), with portraits. By Lizzie Alldridge. These lives are full of intense interest and should be widely read by the rising generation. The authoress has fulfilled her task with great skill, and deserves the thanks of a multitude of readers.

The Parables of St. Luke. By Dr. Marcus Dods. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Dods has already established his position as an exponent of Scripture truth. This volume is clear and forcible in language, and deeply spiritual in tone, clothing old and valued truths in new light, and presenting many fresh and salient thoughts.

⁂ We recently reviewed a little work by Mr. C. H. Berridge, entitled Romish Inquisitions (6d. and 1s.), but were unable to furnish the publisher's address. It may be had of the Protestant Evangelical Mission, 5, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Sunday-school Reward Tickets: Marine Series. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A very pretty little packet of thirty-six tickets, which will delight those scholars who are fortunate enough to obtain them.

We have also received the following books:—

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton:
- A Commentary on the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians' by T. C. Edwards, M.A. 14s.
- Congregational Church Polity. By Rev. R. W. Dale. 2s.
- Tracts on Church Principles. Nos. 1—6. By Eustace Condor. 1d. each.
- Our Daughters. By Mrs. Reaney. 1s. 6d. (Cheap Edition.)
- Morning Thoughts for Our Daughters. By Mrs. Reaney. 1s. 6d. (New Edition.)

From The Religious Tract Society:
- The Boys' Own Annual. 8s.
- The Girls' Own Annual. 8s.
- Present Day Tracts:—Ferdinand Christian Baur. By Rev. A B. Bruce. 4d.—The Christ of the Gospels. By Henri Meyer. 4d.—Man, Physiologically Considered. By Alex. Macalister. 4d.

From Wesleyan Methodist Book-Room. (By Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.)
- Homely Talks. 1s. 6d.
- Simon Jasper. 1s. 6d.
- Cornish Stories 1s. 6d.
- Thoughts on Holiness. 1s.

From Rev. J. G. Gregory, Brighton. (By Himself.)
- The Rock, the Stone, and the Keys. 4d.
- No Priests of God upon Earth. 4d.
- The Lord's Supper. 4d.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Sept. 27, Luke xiv. 1—14; Sept. 28, xiv. 15—24; Sept. 29, xiv. 25—35; Sept. 30, xv. 1—10; Oct. 1, xv. 11—32; Oct. 2, xvi. 1—18; Oct. 3, xvi. 19—31.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The annual report of this venerable institution, now in its 113th year, tells of increasing success during the past twelve months in the work of "raising the fallen, helping the weak, instructing the ignorant, leading the wayward back to a life of industry, and all to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus." The labours of the unpaid workers in this mission have been as untiring and devoted as ever. Workhouses, lodging-houses, infirmaries, casual wards, &c., have been regularly and systematically visited, and the Gospel preached to the inmates. The narrations of special services followed by much blessing, and an account of "an all-night meeting with the homeless," are full of interest. Of this estimable agency, the late George Moore wrote: "The real work of these men surpasses all I have yet met with in my experience, as I know nothing like it in simplicity and downright earnestness in going among the very lowest and poorest classes, and I cannot but wish them God speed, and help them in every way I possibly can." The Secretary is Mr. J. Atkinson, and the headquarters are, Memorial Hall, London-street, Bethnal-green.

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—We have had about fifteen weeks of most happy Gospel services in our tent at Gosport and Southsea. Meetings have been held every night, and twice on the Lord's Day, and the Lord has blessed his word, so that we have much to be thankful for. But we must soon bring them to a close for the winter months, and return to our usual work in halls, cottages, &c., in the town and neighbourhood. We have also been enabled to add to our mission this year a good Bible carriage, well filled up and stocked with sound literature. We have worked this the whole of the summer in connection with our tent meeting, and large numbers of Bibles, Testaments, &c., have been sold, and in needy cases given away. We have often taken for a day tours through the villages and towns in the neighbourhood, and it has been surprising how eager the people are after the Scriptures. I should like to commit this carriage to the care of a Christian man, who would go through the country with it, as I believe a great work might be done in this way. It is surprising how much darkness exists in many of our small towns and villages.

Letters to the Editor.

THE "DEATH" OF BELIEVERS.

Sir,—In your issue of the 10th inst., Dr. Pierson is reported to have said that between Matthew and Revelation he could "not find a single case where the departure of the believer from this world is described as 'death.'" The case of Stephen is cited as a special instance in proof. But the verse, "When he had said this he fell asleep," is immediately followed by "Saul was consenting to his death;" and again we read, "When the saints were put to death, I gave my voice against them" (Acts xxvi. 10). Elsewhere we find, Tabitha falling sick and dying; Eutychus taken up dead. These instances are sufficient to show that the words "death," "died," and "dead" are applied to Christians by the New Testament writers in their ordinary sense.

Yours obediently, A. R. Hunt

A DAY OF PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest through your paper, which has such a wide circulation amongst Christians, that a day be set apart for united prayer for Ireland? The prospect is as dark now as it has ever been in the history of this unfortunate country. Surely now, with a General Election so near, it is, if ever, a time for earnest supplication that the Almighty will overrule this crisis for his glory and the salvation of Ireland. If you would fix a date, and kindly give notice of it in The Christian, we shall have a blessing on this country in answer to our united prayer.—Yours faithfully,

Charles B. Stoney.

Portland Park, co. Tipperary.

Rev. Wm. Frith writes:—"We have set apart every Wednesday evening from 8 to 9 for this purpose. We meet for prayer, without any address, so as to avoid any reference to party politics."

[We hope that Tuesday, Sept. 29, will be a convenient day, and that it will be largely occupied with prayer for suffering Ireland. Perhaps some of our readers may be led to institute a similar weekly gathering.]

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC DOCTRINES.

Sir,—Some time ago I wrote to you pointing out that the teaching of the Social Democrats as to the relations between the sexes was very dangerous, and that their whole doctrine, based as it is upon the assumption that men by merely altering their social system can eradicate evils which result, not from any system, but from the tyranny and greed, the idleness and lust, of individual men of all ranks, was, and must be, false. For it is eternally true that "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and nothing but the cowardice of the people of God in witholding the fact that each individual soul must give an account of the deeds done in the body, and the certainty and awful nature of the punishment that awaits those who, whether poor or rich, wilfully rebel against their Maker, and reject his offered salvation, could have enabled such teaching to obtain even temporary success. For though the people suffered from many things which might and ought to be removed by the alteration or the enforcement of the laws, yet in the main their condition could only be permanently improved by personal and individual obedience to God's commandments. The reason I write again is that, though I am thankful indeed to see Is. lix. 19, once more fulfilled as it was in Hyde Park, yet I fear that, carried away by their natural indignation against crime in high places, some of the speakers, both there and at the conference, leant towards Socialism, without, I trust, having examined its teaching closely, especially upon sexual and religious subjects. Now, sir, there can be no fellowship between Christ and Belial, and any temporary improvement in the material condition of the people would be dearly bought by the surrender of the vital truth that men can only overcome evil by obedience to God, and belief in Jesus Christ, whom He has sent for their salvation. The nonsense uttered by the Socialist speakers about religious people generally, and the vile attacks made upon the honoured name of Samuel Morley in particular, show the danger of even appearing to countenance such teaching.

The extreme importance of rigid adherence to the truth as it is in Jesus at this critical time is my only excuse for again troubling you.—Yours respectfully, One of the Lower Orders.

[It is fair to say that a split has taken place in the Socialist rank, a party having seceded from Mr. Bradlaugh on moral grounds.—Ed.]

A CHRISTIAN DAILY PAPER.

Sir,—The pressing need of a daily journal to vindicate the moral and religious convictions of the British public has again of late been made painfully apparent through the action of the daily press in encouraging criminal vice, by first ignoring, and then denouncing its recent courageous exposure by the lionhearted Christian Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette.

The attitude taken up by all the daily journals on the great Social Purity question has already disgusted all friends of morality in the nation. This, added to the miserable, pettifogging, unprincipled misrepresentation exposed by the Rev. W. J. Dawson, on the part of the most widely-circulated of them all, proves that they are untrustworthy as educators, or even exponents of public opinion on great moral questions. Thousands would gladly subscribe to a journal on which they could rely for the application to all subjects of the principles enunciated by the great social and political Reformer, Jesus of Nazareth.

The question is, "Would these be sufficiently numerous to make such a paper pay?" I think they would. The total weekly sale of religious newspapers in this country is enormous, probably amounting to millions, one only of their number claiming a circulation of nearly 300,000. Now, although many of these go—especially in country towns and villages—among people who do not subscribe to a "daily," a large proportion of them do, and these would give the preference to such a one as suggested, probably creating a demand which would vie with that of The Telegraph itself. If public opinion should prove that my anticipations are well founded, I see no reason why the suggestion cannot be reduced to practice, and I propose, with your aid, to test the public on this matter.

My scheme is the following: Start a company, issuing shares of £1 each, to the amount required for working the concern, no one person to hold more than five shares.

Thus, supposing £100,000 to be required and raised in this way, the number of persons interested in the success of the paper could not be less than 20,000, and would most probably number 50,000 or 60,000. It would thus become as much as anything not directly under Government control could be—public property. These shareholders would be the best advertising medium possible, and in this respect would save an enormous outlay. I should like to see a rule limiting the interest on capital, the surplus profits (if any) to be devoted to (1) raising the standard of wages, (2) enlarging and developing the paper, and (3) to any good object which the directors should deem specially worthy of support. Management to be vested in an elective directorate, to whom the editor would be responsible, and who would themselves be responsible to the shareholders.

Some such scheme as this would secure, far better than any privately-owned journal, the true expression of the public mind, and the moral and political importance and influence of one so owned and controlled cannot be estimated. I am entirely without experience in matters of this kind, and doubtless the scheme I have roughly indicated would require considerable modification, but should a general approval of its principles be expressed, and the requisite support be forthcoming, there will be no lack of practical men to work out the details.

If all your readers, who are willing to co-operate in some such venture as the foregoing, will communicate with me at the address given, between now and Christmas, I will tabulate, and, with your permission, publish the result in The Christian.

Those who are willing to take shares, and also become subscribers for one or more copies, will kindly state on one half sheet the number of shares, and on the other half the number of copies they will take, appending their signature to both, for convenience in filing the two separately. Those who cannot invest, but are willing to become subscribers, are also invited to send me their names. This will furnish reliable information (1) as to the amount of capital which could be raised to start with, and (2) the probable support which could be relied on for the first issues. Should this be satisfactory, a meeting of those who had promised to take shares could be held for the purpose of nominating directors, who could form the executive for the time being, and take the necessary steps in the formation of the company.

In case of failure, which I do not anticipate, the loss sustained by individual shareholders could be but very small, and the beneficial effect of a successful venture of the kind on the journalism of the country, and probably its general literature also, should earn for it the hearty support of every man, religious or non-religious, who desires to help forward the progress of his Fatherland towards the ideal national life which can be realised only through the establishment of national morality and social and political justice.

The time has come for proving the possibility of the existence of a popular daily journal, independent of sporting and sensational intelligence, and political partizanship; and I hope the Christian public will now make its voice heard and its influence felt in this direction.

Yours truly, H. G. Chancellor.

171, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

P.S.—Should there be, as I hope, a general and immediate response to the above, the result shall be published much earlier than Christmas (say October, or early in November), when the preliminary arrangements can be at once proceeded with.

MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE IN LONDON.

After visiting the Young Men's Christian Association in Newcastle-on-Tyne and Sunderland, and addressing the young men with marked power and blessing, Mr. Radcliffe has, during the last few days, come to London, by earnest invitation, and addressed the members and friends at the Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street Associations, on Thursday and Friday evenings. The Council Room at Exeter Hall was well filled. Mr. Radcliffe based his remarks on the words, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." In addition to his address, testimony was given, amongst others, by Mr. Arthur Clain, Pembroke College, and Mr. Hope Gill, Queen's College, Cambridge; also by Laksman Rao, the young converted Brahmin who has been in our midst for some months past. The general theme of the meetings was thorough consecration to the Lord, and the outcome missionary zeal and service.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Radcliffe addressed the Young Men's Bible-class at Aldersgate-street, and in the course of an earnest exhortation on "Be filled with the Spirit," and other cognate passages, he read a long letter from Mr. Stanley Smith telling of abundant blessing at Tientsin and Pekin, not only amongst Chinese, but of revival of spiritual power amongst European and American missionaries and others. The result of the meeting was manifest in the devotional meeting which followed, and in an abundant blessing in the evening meeting at a later hour.

At the Central Noon Prayer-Meeting on Monday, Mr. Radcliffe, in speaking on the subject of being "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," referred with great satisfaction to the notice in The Christian of last week of Mr. Moody's Convention, at which a universal conference on the subject of the evangelisation of the world was proposed to be held in some central city. But, while rejoicing in large conventions, he specially urged upon his hearers that the real work was wrought by little bands of believers—two and threes—upon their knees. It was such meetings amongst the missionaries of Lodiana that was the strength of the revival work about a quarter of a century ago.

LLANDUDNO.—We had a very nice meeting for women on the evening of September 15. Between thirty and forty attended. I opened the meeting by reading the suggestion in The Christian, for united prayer on that day, and then made a few remarks bearing on what I thought should be our earnest cry to God, quoting Exodus ii. 23—25; iii. 7—10; Ps. cvii. 19—21; offering prayer at the close of my remarks. Mrs. Peart, the wife of the Wesleyan minister, drew the attention of the young women to Dr. Stephenson's plan, and that of others, concerning homes and protective measures, &c., and offered prayer. Mrs. Binstead, a visitor from London, then read Isaiah lviii., giving a very nice address to the young women, and offered prayer. We also sang two hymns. I trust much blessing may rest upon this meeting, it having been held at a time when, no doubt, many persons were assembled in different parts of the kingdom.

(Mrs.) K. J. Goode.

Holme Lea, Abbey-road, Llandudno.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Contributions to these Notes will be welcomed from any arter; specially of evanglistic work in any of the urches.]

LEEDS.—Arrangements are being made in the eds district for the holding of evangelistic meetgs for the young during the winter months.

MR. CHAMPNESS has got two or three of his agents at work, and they are now visiting from use to house, and coming into close contact with me heathenism. They are reading the open book the streets, and learning in a practical way how rely the people of England need the Gospel.

MR. W. H. SMITH, the well-known evangelist om Belfast, is now holding evangelistic services at e Priory Hall, Abergavenny, which are well atnded, and much owned of the Lord. He purposes siting various parts of South Wales, if the Lord ll. (Pastor) O. Tidman.

A KIND OFFER.—Churches and friends anxious carry on the Lord's work, but who are unable to y pastor's salary and other expenses, are invited communicate with Mr. G. Smith, 46, Rendalreet, Liverpool, who will be glad to help such by dertaking Sunday or week-day duty free of arge.

HACKNEY.—Some East-end workers are very xious to open a room, and commence mission ork amongst the many hundreds of young women d girls employed in the factories around Camidge-heath. Will any Christian ladies, willing to in them, communicate with Rev. G. B. Barraough, 46, King Edward-road, Hackney?

HOLT, WILTS.—Very successful evangelistic rvices have been conducted during the last rtnight by J. Cleworth, Esq., of London. The evs. S. B. Stribling, H. H. Moseley, B.A., J. arp, W. Beard, and others, took part in the rvices, and one Sunday over £10 were collected the tent on behalf of the funds of the Evangelition Society. At a thanksgiving meeting in the ngregational schoolroom, on the Monday, many quirers remained who had been impressed by Mr. eworth's earnest addresses.

FOLKESTONE.—Mr. Charles Inglis has been nducting services in the Tontine-street Hall, lkestone, under the auspices of the "United ission." Large numbers attended the meetings, e afternoon Bible lecture being especially appreated. The Mission was only started six weeks o, in a very humble fashion; but God has so undantly blessed it that it seems likely to become e centre of evangelical work in the town. It is oroughly unsectarian in character, and already mbers about fifty workers. Mr. Inglis is engaged re for a month's mission in January and bruary next.

COLERAINE.—A mission for children has been nducted by Mr. T. Eyres, Hon. Sec. of the ildren's Evangelistic Mission, London. The ildren paid marked attention to the earnest adess on Sunday, 6th inst., and good meetings were pected during the week. The attendance at st in the Presbyterian lecture-room was not ry encouraging, from several causes, but later ndreds of young people flocked out, and very any waited for the inquiry-meeting after each rvice. The testimony received from the parents garding the good impressions made upon childn in their families has been of a most satisfactory ture. Mr. Eyres has gone to Ballymoney, and om there he proceeds to Portrush to hold similar rvices. In a few weeks it is hoped that Mr. yres may pay a second visit to Coleraine.—H. B.

RICKMANSWORTH.—For six weeks this mmer tent services have been held nightly, and, though the attendances have varied considerably, e results give unbounded cause for gratitude to od. Men in their shirt-sleeves, and women witht bonnets, felt that they could enter a tent ithout the usual restraint imposed by bricks d mortar. It is interesting to watch some who st step inside, as if afraid of being seen, but who, a few nights, are found near the front, intent on hearing all that is said. Navvies from the ilway strolled in, and some were induced to sign e pledge. Confession of Christ is no easy matter r them, more especially if their ganger be a odless man. Still, some have had a new song put their mouths, by God's grace. The converts met r tea at the close of the mission, and received me earnest counsel and exhortation. The evanelists, Henry Lakin and Joseph Clark, will long e remembered for their faithful proclamation of e Gospel, and the Evangelisation Society, who nt them, have again proved their claim upon the nerous support of the Christian public.

Colin Taylor.

MR. HENRY THORNE has held a week's mission in the Young Men's Christian Association, at Aldersgate-street, also speaking each day, at the noon prayer meeting. His incidents and anecdotes, interspersed with direct testimony, were very thrilling, especially those in connection with the power of prayer. At night the Gospel meetings were full of spiritual power, and each night souls were brought to decision. Mr. Thorne left for Bradford after his brief visit, leaving many hearts deeply thankful to the Lord for the encouragement and blessing bestowed through his presence and words.

MR. WILLIAM THARME, of Liverpool, has succeeded Mr. Henry Thorne in the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, and is this week conducting a Gospel mission. The inaugural meeting on Sunday last was not only most encouraging in point of numbers, but the manifestation of spiritual power was very blessed, many precious souls being brought to decision.

BANFFSHIRE.—During the past few months tent-meetings have been held here by Messrs. John Anderson (Gordon Evangelistic Mission), J. A. Smith, and G. A. Innes (Banffshire Gospel Mission), and others. The Lord has abundantly blessed the effort, places having been opened up for evangelistic work which hitherto have been closed. Many have professed conversion, and the children of God have got fresh blessing.

DUBLIN.—Several members of the "Dublin Male Voice Choir," under the leadership of Mr. George Williams, held a series of meetings in Cork, commencing Sunday, the 6th inst., and continued each evening throughout the week, with exception of Saturday. The South Mall Hall, holding several hundreds of people, was crowded each evening, and an overflow meeting, held in a Presbyterian church near, was also well filled. Much power was manifest in the services, and we believe many will have cause to thank God through eternity that they were held. B. H.

SOCIAL PURITY AT SHEFFIELD.—On Friday evening last the Great Albert Hall, Sheffield, was crowded with men and women, who had come to hear addresses on Social Purity from Mr. James B. Wookey and the Rev. John Calbert. Till nearly ten o'clock that great gathering of people sat spellbound, while words of burning truth about the awful traffic in the flesh and blood of English girls were spoken. Mr. Wookey declared that God's work could only be done in God's way, he begged his hearers to seek wisdom from on high, and then in the strength of God to come and enlist under the white banner of the cross, and fight till the last girl was saved or the Lord Jesus came.

DUNOON.—Mr. J. M. Scroggie conducted a series of evangelistic services here during August. A marked feature was the evident blessing vouchsafed to the children of God themselves. There were also not a few tokens of the presence of the Lord's converting power. A lady from the South was attracted to the meetings, who had attended the whole of Mr. Moody's services in Kensington, and though much impressed had not come to decision. At one of the Sabbath evening meetings, however, the Spirit of God arrested her, and she passed out of darkness into light. Many other cases showing the unmistakable presence of the Spirit of God might be given. The only regret was that the meetings could not be carried on for a longer period, but Mr. Scroggie will be gladly welcomed back to this district on some future occasion, if the Lord will. J. M. P.

GRACECHURCH-STREET Y.M.C.A.—The monthly meeting of Christian workers in connection with this branch was held on Friday, Sept. 18. The Secretary (Mr. N. R. Hughman) gave a brief but stimulating resumé of past work, and also an outline of mission work proposed for the coming winter, in which over one hundred workers will be taking some part. There is a steady increase in the number of workers, and their influence is being felt in many directions. The winter's plan includes the following districts, viz., Bermondsey, Hackney-road (near Shoreditch Church), Whitechapel, Lambeth, Spitalfields. It is the aim of the Association to carry on aggressive work in each of the above-named, and the reports given at the meeting by the hon. secretaries of the several districts show that God's blessing has been upon the work and upon those who have been engaged in it. The secretary offered some suggestions whereby this Association may, through its members, contribute to the support in the foreign mission field of one of their number who has recently sailed for China. It is contemplated arranging for special evangelistic services for young men in the city during the month of November.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SOUTH AFRICA.—Rev. Owen Watkins has just sent encouraging news of the good work being done by Hans Aapjee, the Joyful News missionary in South Africa. On a recent Sunday Mr. Watkins baptized fifty-four adults, all converted from heathenism during the year, and also thirty-one children. At the same time he married seven couples. Mr. Watkins writes in very good spirits, and speaks of crowded services and bright prospects.

LA SAGNE.—The meetings of the Salvation Army, held in their own room, have been shamefully hindered here. One Sunday afternoon about a dozen slaves of brandy came, forced the door open, severely beat several members of the congregation with sticks, threw them down and again beat them. One man had his leg broken, when they sang and danced round him like a band of savages. The sufferers seem to maintain a spirit of love and forgiveness towards their persecutors. The writer says, "We regret that three of our assailants are in prison." Prayer is being made for them.—En Avant.

CHINA.—The Jesuits who carried Christianity into China have sometimes been reproached with making a compact with Buddhist idolatry. The reproach seems well founded. There is at Pekin a cemetery which was formerly given to the Jesuits by the Emperor Kansi, and where many of them are buried. Not only are their tombs exactly like those of the Chinese, but many of them are ornamented with the five vessels used in the sacrifices of the Buddhist worship as well as the symbolic tortoise, so that it might be thought the Buddhist had converted the Jesuits, instead of the Chinese being converted to Christianity.—Le Christianisme.

CONTINENTAL SABBATH REST.—"The Chancellor deceives himself this time," so says a German workman, à propos of the Sabbath question discussed a few months ago in the Reichstag. "Prince Bismarck thinks workmen are more willing to labour six or seven days regularly than six days vigorously, with a rest on the seventh. The Chancellor is deceived. Not being an artisan, he doubtless does not know that a working man, obliged to set out every morning at six o'clock to his work and to remain there till evening, gets to look upon the workshop as a penitentiary, and the Sunday rest at home must be to him a Paradise." When the question comes up again, we hope the Chancellor will be better informed.—Journal Réligieux.

INDIA.—Mr. Hahn, of the German Goszner Missionary Society, who is also an agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society, writes to a German magazine that he has established a boys' school at Lohardagga, and a boarding-school for girls is in process of completion. He has also a Refuge for Lepers, which is supported by friends in England. He now desires to build and maintain a Hospital for Epileptics. These, who are rather numerous, are in a most wretched plight. The people are convinced that epileptics are possessed by the devil, and so they are much neglected and forsaken, even by their own nearest relatives. Mr. Hahn suggests that a society should be formed, somewhat like the Bible Society, and that its work should be to establish hospitals and homes for the sick, all the world over.

A SPECIAL PRAYER MEETING is held on Monday evenings at seven, in connection with the work of the Social Purity Movement. Last Monday's meeting was one of deep interest. Those interested in the efforts which are being put forth at this time are earnestly invited. Mr. Varley and other well-known friends are always present. The meetings are held in the Council Room, Exeter Hall.

Y.M.C.A., CARDIFF.—On Monday, Sept. 14, a meeting was held, Mr. John Cory in the chair, to bid adieu to Mr. Southwell, the secretary, who was leaving for Australia. Letters were read from Bishop Perry and Dean Vaughan expressing deep regret at Mr. Southwell leaving; also letters of recommendation from Bishop Perry, Dean Vaughan, the National Y.M.C.A. Council, Revs. Archdeacon Griffiths, W. E. Winks, J. D. Watters, M.A., George Hargreaves, and — Barley; Mr. W. Hind Smith, and the Sunday-school Union, &c. A formal resolution, expressing regret at Mr. Southwell's leaving Cardiff, was then put and carried. Mr. Gibbon presented Mr. Southwell with an album containing the photographs of all the Christian workers in the Association. The President then presented an address, together with a purse containing £44 subscribed by the friends of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. J. J. P. Burt, on behalf of the lady friends, also presented Mrs. Southwell with a tea-service.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SEPTEMBER 24.—REVELATION I.

"The Revelation of Jesus Christ."—The occurrence of this expression in 1 Peter i. 13, in the sense of "the revelation of Christ at his coming," has tempted some to take it here in this sense also. But the words, "Which God gave unto Him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass," point rather to Christ's present revelation of what must shortly happen, than to his future revelation of Himself. "Signified it."—Notified it by signs or symbols.

v. 2.—"Who bare witness of the Word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, (even) of all things that He saw" (R.V.).—As a revelation from God it forms part of his "word." As given through Christ, it receives his attestation. As conveyed to the Church through the medium of visions which John saw, it has his witness also.

v. 4.—"John to the Seven Churches in Asia."—"This opening salutation may fitly remind us (for in reading the Apocalypse we are often in danger of forgetting it) that the book is an Epistle; that, besides containing within its bosom those seven briefer Epistles, addressed severally to the Seven Churches in particular, it is itself an Epistle addressed to them as a whole, and as representing in their mystic unity all the Churches, or the Church (ii. 7, 11, 23, &c)."—Archbishop Trench.

v. 7.—"All kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him."—As the reference here is very distinct to Zech. xii. 10, the Greek words of the LXX. being here quoted, it is better to render this, "All the tribes of the land shall mourn for Him."

v. 10.—"I was in the spirit on the Lord's day."—"The first day of the week, the day of the Lord's resurrection. Some maintain, but without sufficient reason, that it means the day of judgment in the distant future."—Sp. Com.

v: 12.—"Seven golden candlesticks."—"The Jewish was one, for it was the Church of a single people; the Christian Church, that, too, is one, but it is also many, at once the Church and the Churches."—Archbishop Trench.

v. 17.—"I am the first and the last."—"The prerogative three times claimed for Jehovah (Isa. xli. 4, xliv. 6, xlviii. 12), is three times claimed in this book for Christ: here, ii. 8, xxii. 13."—Archbishop Trench.

SEPTEMBER 25.—REVELATION II.

v. 1.—"To the angel of the Church in Ephesus, write."—What "the angel" may mean is much disputed. Many eminent writers take it for "the Bishop," but Bishop Lightfoot objects that the angel "is identified with, and made responsible for (the Church), to a degree wholly unsuited to any human officer." He takes the angels (identified with "the stars," i. 20) to mean "the heavenly representatives" of the Churches, differing from the lamps, "which are the seven Churches," as the star "shining steadily by its own inherent light," differs from the lamp "flickering and uncertain, requiring to be fed with fuel and tended with care." In other words, the star or angel represents the true Church of heavenly origin and light, while the lamp or candlestick is the professing Church.

v. 5—"I will remove thy candlestick out of its place."—If the view mentioned above be taken, this shows how judgment may fall on the professing Church without affecting the safety of the true Church (the star or angel of heavenly origin), which nevertheless is held responsible for the evil judged.

v. 6.—"The deeds of the Nicolaitanes which I also hate."—"Tertullian, Irenæus (and others) expressly state that a licentious sect of Antinomian Gnostics did exist, whose leader was the Deacon Nicolas (Acts vi. 5)."—Sp. Com.

v. 13.—"Even where Satan's throne is" (R.V.). "The notorious idolatry of Pergamum gives this description its historical foundation. The chief reference is to the worship of Esculapius, whose well-known symbol was a serpent."—Sp. Com.

v. 17.—"I will give him a white stone."—"The victor at the games received a ticket (the same Greek word here rendered 'stone') which entitled him to food at the public expense; here to the heavenly feast.—Sp. Com.

v. 22.—"I will cast her into a bed."—The verb "cast" is used elsewhere of an attack of sickness (see Matt. viii. 6, 14). This is evidently the judgment referred to here. It might almost be rendered, "I will lay her on a bed of sickness."

SEPTEMBER 26.—REVELATION III.

v. 1.—"He that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars."—The seven Spirits of God "can set forth no other than the One Holy Spirit, the third Person of the ever-blessed Trinity, in his sevenfold operation" (i. 4).—Archbishop Trench.

v. 2.—"Strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die."—"Almost all better commentators are agreed that this should not be rendered 'the things,' but 'the persons which remain' or 'the rest,' as many as are not yet dead, though now at the point of death."—Archbishop Trench.

v. 7.—"The key of David."—See Isaiah xxii. 22, which is plainly referred to here.

v. 17.—"Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing."—"These riches and goods in which the Laodicean Church and angel gloried we must understand as spiritual riches, in which they fondly imagined they abounded."—Archbishop Trench. See Hosea xii. 8, to which this refers.

v. 21.—"Will I grant to sit with Me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—The difference between the two thrones spoken of should be noted. Christ is now set down with the Father in his throne, but when He comes again He will have his own throne, and his people will then reign with Him. They are not called to share the Father's throne, where He is now.

SEPTEMBER 27.—REVELATION IV.

v. 2.—"One sitting upon the throne" (R.V.).—"The great majority of writers take this to mean the eternal Father, as distinguished from the Son ('the Lamb,' v. 6, vi. 16, vii. 10) and from the Holy Spirit (ver. 5)."—Sp. Com.

v. 3.—"A jasper and a sardine stone."—"The last and the first stones in the Breastplate (Exod. xxviii. 17, 20). 'Jasper is the first of the twelve foundations in ch. xxi., where this stone is described (ver. 11) as being 'clear as crystal.' Sardis was a dull red cloudy stone of many gradations of colour."—Sp. Com. "Perfect purity" and "justice satisfied" may well be surrounded by an emerald bow, suggestive of "hope resting on covenant promise."

v. 4.—"Four and twenty elders sitting."—"The representatives of the universal Church of God, and their number symbolises the Twelve Patriarchs and the Twelve Apostles."—Sp. Com. See also xxi. 12, 14. It must, however, be remembered that it was not the actual Church which John saw in vision, but "the representatives" of the Church, so that this passage affords no ground for the supposition that the time to which the vision refers must be after the rapture of the saints.

v. 6.—"Four living creatures" (R.V.).—This is a decided improvement on "four beasts" of A.V. But "Sp. Com." prefers "living beings," as nearer to the original, which it undoubtedly is. All commentators recognise the correspondence of these "living beings" with the "Cherubim" of Ezekiel, and the "Seraphim" of Isaiah; and there is also a general consent that they represent "redeemed creation," of whom the redeemed Church (the "four and twenty elders") are "the first fruits." (See James i. 18.)

v. 11.—"Because of thy will they were, and were created" (R.V.).—"'They were,' implying the fact of being, as contrasted with previous non-existence."—Sp. Com.

SEPTEMBER 28.—REVELATION V.

v. 1.—"A book written within and on the back, close-sealed with seven seals" (R.V.).—For "close-sealed," Sp. Com. gives "sealed down." The word "book" is misleading; "roll" would be better, as everything points to its being a legal document or "the title deed of the earth's inheritance." See Jer. xxxii. 12, &c, where two "books" or "rolls" (it is the same word as here) are spoken of, one "sealed" and one "open" (perhaps corresponding to what is here written within and on the back), but both are comprehended under the general designation of "the book of the purchase." None could claim possession of the purchase, but He who had paid the price. The view that the roll contained the subsequent revelation seems quite unfounded, as is also the notion that at the opening of each seal a certain part of the contents was disclosed. We have no reason to believe that the roll could have been opened till the seventh seal was broken. "Not its (i.e., the roll's) contents, but the gradual steps of access to it, are represented by these visions."—Alford. When, therefore, the seventh seal is opened, we might expect that the rightful claimant would at once take possession of his inheritance. But here (ch. viii. 1) occurs a pause, a break in the vision of the seals, being filled up with supplemental details. It is not till ch. xix. 11 that we get the vision postponed from ch. viii. 1, the true vision connected with the seventh seal. Then comes forth from heaven the horse and his rider, as first seen in his progress on earth in the first seal, and takes possession of his own purchased inheritance, casts out the usurper, and reigns with his saints a thousand years. This structure of the Book of Revelation is of great importance to its being rightly understood, and is quite independent of any "school" of prophetic interpretation which may be adopted.

v. 5.—"Hath prevailed."—Better, "hath overcome" (R.V.); or better still, as most literal, "hath conquered."

v. 9.—"Didst purchase unto God with thy blood (men) of every tribe, &c. . . . . and they reign upon the earth" (R.V.).—The evidence, however, is on the whole in favour of "didst purchase US," though in what follows the third, not the first, person is used. It is also now (since the discovery of the Sinai MS.) in favour of "shall reign."

SEPTEMBER 29.—REVELATION VI.

v. 1.—"Come and see."—"The words 'and see' added here, and in verses 3, 5, and 7, are to be omitted."—Sp. Com. "I see (says Dean Alford) represented in this fourfold 'come' the groaning and travailing together of creation . . . expressed in each case in a prayer for Christ's coming."

v. 2.—"Behold a white horse, and he that sat on him."—"These words are repeated exactly in chap. xix. 21; and there is a pretty general agreement that here, also, the rider is Christ."—Sp. Com. It is here, however, that the two chief prophetic schools, the Historical and the Futurist, part company. The historical view—the old one, at least, for Elliott's is different—regards the different horsemen as symbols of "the visible Church in successive stages, which, after being obscured for a time by its foul degeneracy, breaks forth anew in more than its original glory when the armies in heaven are seen following the 'Word of God' clothed in fine linen clean and white."—E. Bickersteth. The Futurist school, on the other hand, take them as literal "wars," "famines," and "pestilences," as foretold by our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 7. But want of space makes prophetic exposition impossible.

v. 6.—"A measure of wheat for a penny."—The measure here spoken of is said to have been "a man's food for a day," while the denarius, or "penny," was a day's wages for a labourer (Matt. xx. 2), or (as Tacitus mentions) the daily pay of a soldier. Great scarcity, therefore, but not absolute famine, is meant; whilst wine and oil are uninjured.

v. 9.—"Under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God."—The figure seems taken from the blood of the sacrifices poured out at the foot of the altar, which blood, like Abel's, is here represented as speaking.

SEPTEMBER 30.—REVELATION VII.

"The seventh chapter, by its two episodes—the sealing the servants of God who are of Israel (ver. 4), and the assembling of the great multitude who are of all nations (ver. 9)—gives the answer to the question of vi. 17: "Who is able to stand?"—Sp. Com.

v. 5.—"Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand."—"As to this catalogue of the Twelve Tribes it is to be noted, that in no two places throughout the Bible are the names and the order the same. In the Old Testament there are several such catalogues (after mentioning ten such, closing with 'the order of the gates of the city,' Ezek. xlviii.). This last catalogue presents the closest resemblance to that of St. John, if we arrange Ezekiel's catalogue in the order of north, west, south, east, placing the name of Judah first."—Sp. Com.

v. 6.—"Of the tribe of Manasseh (were sealed) twelve thousand."—"The name of Dan, given in the catalogue of Ezekiel, is omitted by St. John, and the name of Manasseh is introduced into its stead."—Sp. Com.

"The reason for the excluding of Dan is that the only narrative of the Old Testament in which Dan played a part, is that respecting the worship of idols in Judges xviii., so that the declaration (xxii. 15), 'Without are idolaters,' is here symbolically represented by the omission of Dan."—Hengstenberg.

v. 10.—"Salvation to our God."—"The salvation (which we have attained be ascribed) unto our God."—Sp. Com.

v. 14.—"Out of great tribulation."—"Out of the great tribulation" (R.V.). "The tribulation, the great one;" "the twofold article being specially emphatic."—Sp. Com.

v. 17.—"Shall feed them."—"Shall be their Shepherd" (R.V.).

(For Forthcoming Meetings, Donation List, &c., see p. 22)

Fire at an Industrial Home for Boys.

A DISASTROUS FIRE occurred at the INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR BOYS, 119, COPENHAGEN STREET, N., on the 3rd inst., COMPLETELY DESTROYING workshops, dormitory, school-room, &c.; also large quantities of clothing, bedding, boys' library, and £110 worth of cut firewood. The ENTIRE PLANT used in the shops was also swept away, necessitating the emporary stoppage of all work. The LOSS occasioned is MOST SERIOUS, and has greatly crippled the Home. The Committee most earnestly solicit aid from kind friends in this time of PRESSING NECESSITY. Contributions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mr. Edwin Austin, Treasurer; Colonel Mignon, or Miss Mann, Secretaries, at the Home; Bankers, London and County Banking Company—Islington Branch.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

The 113th Annual Report of this Society has been issued, a copy of which will be forwarded to any applicant interested in its operations.

Help for the general work of the Society is very urgently needed, and will be gratefully received by the Secretary, JAS. ATKINSON.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

NOW READY.

Scriptural Proofs that God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on His name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30).

By J. P. WILSON.

(Copies of these "Further Sheets," or of the "First Sheets," may be obtained by writing to me at the undernoted address, sending eightpence for price and postage, or without money. I have received many interesting and encouraging letters on the "First Sheets," of which the following, the first received, from a sister in the Lord previously unknown to me, will serve as a good specimen.—(J. P. Wilson, 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.)

"I have read your little book, lent me by a friend; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet, since reading 'Scriptural Proofs,' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour, and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin, and that on the truth of the living God. as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read. There is so little of man in it and so much of God."

HOUSE OF REST FOR AILING SHOP-GIRLS.

An Invalid Lady is wishful to surrender her House for the above purpose,—originally built for a Tavern and Hotel. It contains accommodation for about 25 Inmates, with Large Hall, suitable for Mission Purposes, &c. It is offered at a very low price on condition that it be called and the following Gifts have been promised when the purchase is made and the Institution begins its work:—A Piano, value 50 Guineas, and a Library of 250 Volumes. Contributions are very earnestly invited for this work, and Friends feeling interested may obtain Collecting Papers of Mrs. E. A. Foulsham, Dalberg House, Brixton, S.W. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mrs. Foulsham, and the Publishers of this Paper have also very kindly consented to receive Donations.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.
